Mr. Exhibitor! Book

JULIAN

The World's Foremost Impersonator of the Fair Sex

For ten years Julian Eltinge has been making and breaking box-office records at the largest theatres of leading American cities, indicating he will prove the year's biggest star of the screen.

Make arrangements with your Paramount Exchangeman for JULIAN ELTINGE Photoplays.

Critics Praise ELTINGE!

"Julian Eltinge is known to most everyone as the greatest female impersonator the stage has ever seen. His advent into pictures is worth something right away before any consideration is given to the production.

As a film star Mr. Eltinge registers every bit as satisfactorily as he did on the stage, if not more so. You can safely promise that he is funny, interesting and unusual, but if Eltinge has never played in your town you want to lay it on thick about his being recognized as the greatest impersonator the world has ever known, because many of your regulars may never have heard of him."—Wid's.

ELTINGE

Makes His Screen Debut In a Series of Three Winning Photoplays

Countess Charming
The Widow's Mite
and
The Clever Mrs. Carfax

These Lasky-Paramount made subjects will prove the sensation of the season, and it will be your loss if you do not have them booked.

READ THESE EXCERPTS!

"Julian Eltinge, the wise ones predict the sensation of the year in pictures. The camera likes him, and, as one man said, 'He can get away with murder after this,' and all because his first picture, 'The Countess Charming,' struck the public fancy at the Rialto yesterday. The reason one enjoys the particular brand of portrayal offered by Eltinge is because it is so good that one instantly forgets that it is Eltinge."
—NEW YORK TELEGRAPH.

"The Rialto Theatre was crowded yesterday afternoon and evening for the opening of the new week's programme, which included as its principal attraction the first moving picture for which Julian Eltinge has appeared before the camera."—NEW YORK HERALD.

"JULIAN ELTINGE in his first screen vehicle not only landed on the jaws of several men on the screen with both hands, but he also reached the jaws of the audience, jarring them open with laughs. Eltinge established himself immediately as the best woman of his kind in the movies."—NEW YORK SUN.

MARY GARDEN IN "THAIS" AT REGULAR RENTAL PRICES

GOLDWYN PICTURES' powerful organization takes the most important step of its career by announcing that all contract customers of Goldwyn will receive our most brilliant and costly production at no advance in prices.

Having won exhibitor confidence by a policy of honor and squareness in our relations with the theatre-owners of the nation we intend to hold and increase your confidence by giving you our biggest and best efforts as well as our average of high achievement.

We could make a fortune with Mary Garden in "Thais" by presenting her at advanced prices; by exacting higher rentals for the first production of one of the world's greatest artists.

But we prefer to have you, our patrons, receive this record-breaking attraction and play it to big profits. By doing this we hope to bind you closer to us and succeed in making you feel that you are our actual partners in this great enterprise; that by making you successful we are attaining the highest success for ourselves.

Mary Garden in "Thais" will be released throughout North America Dec. 30, 1917.

MARY GARDEN'S TREMENDOUS POWER IN HER GREATEST ROLE

"THAIS," from Anatole France's wonderful story, is Mary Garden's biggest operatic achievement. It increased her fame throughout the world. It gave her rank as one of the world's greatest actresses.

On the production of "Thais" Goldwyn is spending in excess of a quarter of a million dollars and lavishing the attention of its courageous and original producers, who have attained the new and distinctive note in motion pictures. The art and power of "Thais" are immeasurable.

The organization that has produced such a remarkable picture as "The Spreading Dawn," playing now throughout America and universally praised by the critics of the entire nation, gains new strength and power in each new release.

Think what it means to the exhibitors of America—our patrons—some of them paying as low as $15 a day to get, without advance in prices, one of the greatest of all stars in one of the most magnificent and lavish productions—"THAIS." And think what it means to small exhibitors to get "Thais" more quickly than they have ever before obtained a big production.

Mr. L. A. Buettner
Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America
Cohoes, N.Y.

I want to acquaint you with the method of procedure exhibitors of New York will take in handling the new Government tax on admissions which is affective November first. Finding no two exhibitors of the same opinion as to what action should be pursued and no concerted action in sight I called a special meeting of exhibitors in Greater New York and surrounding territory on Friday afternoon October nineteenth at Hotel Astor which was very well attended by a representative body. It was unanimously agreed upon that the tax should be actually borne by the public. Every patron to pay the cent extra on a ten cent admission, two cents on a fifteen cent admission, two cents on a twenty cent admission, three cents on a twentyfive cent admission, etcetera. It is my personal opinion that that is the only solution to the taxes. It was the intention of the United States Government to pin this tax on the public rather than upon the exhibitor, but making the exhibitor responsible for the collection of this tax as that was their only method of coming in contact directly with the public. I sincerely trust that you will call the exhibitors of your territory together and adopt the same course.

TRIANGLE

Triangle Feature Delivered by Aeroplane

Read this telegram from John J. Farren, Manager of the Victoria Theatre at Rochester, New York, sent to our Buffalo Exchange:

"I must have Triangle Service because Triangle Service beyond the films mean everything to me. I more than appreciate the fact that after my show for to-day had missed the last possible express which could get it to me in time for my matinee, you sent it to me by aeroplane and it arrived in plenty of time. My theatre was crowded to the doors and when the Triangle feature did not appear at regular schedule time they were disappointed, but when I announced from the stage, after your telephone conversation, that the feature would be delivered from Buffalo to Rochester by aeroplane just to satisfy them, the house burst forth in a deafening volley of applause. We are for Triangle stronger than ever now because we know you are for us and will apparently do everything possible to take care of the business we are giving you."

WID'S

MADE IN RUSSIA; HAS PERSONALITIES; AN EXCELLENT NOVELTY

Ivan Mozukin and Mlle. Tanya Fetner in

THE PAINTED DOLL

Russian Art—Pathe

DIRECTOR	Chester Sakinsky
AUTHOR	A. Paussakin
AS A WHOLE	Dominant personalities in surprisingly good settings make this interesting and distinctive
STORY	External Triangle tragedy made impressive by players
DIRECTION	Made dramatic moments register, but had badly varying lightings
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good except where lightings poor
LIGHTINGS	Some very fine; others not good
CAMERA WORK	Good; excellent for foreign film
STARS	Personalities that get you
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Interesting because Russian
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Interesting
TIME	Sixty-eight minutes (6 parts)

TO begin with, these productions, made in Russia, have a definite interest for Americans in the very fact that they were made in Russia. Some film people have had a feeling that any foreign production could not be received with favor in this country, but to my mind the present international situation has placed Russia in such a position that this country is very much interested in anything which comes from that country.

Ivan Mozukin and Mlle. Tanya Fetner give us screen portrayals as satisfying as anything that has ever been done in this country, so far as straight dramatic work of power and sincerity is concerned. The settings seem surprisingly good when we realize that Russia is not as well acquainted with the possibilities of film studios as we are in this country.

The technique of the story construction was not like our American construction in that we had practically no parallel action and very little use of the cut-and-flash method, but the personalities of the players did manage to hold the interest and the photography made the expressions of the players perfectly clear at all times, even when they were working at a distance of ten, fifteen or twenty feet from the camera.

The chief flaw in this Russian film was in the lighting. There were some excellent effects, but in many places it was noticeable that the studio was poorly equipped, with the result that some of the scenes were flooded with light, while others were lighted unevenly where this was not intended.

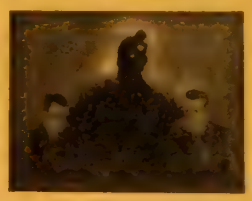
Considered as a whole, from the viewpoint of the average audience, I would say that this production will make a decidedly favorable impression.

The story has a twist of the "eternal triangle" and doesn't finish with the American clutch, but it ends logically, and I believe most fans will leave the theatre with a feeling of having seen worthwhile acting. Certainly they will think more of this than they do of 99 out of 100 of the average routine program releases.

The plot of this has to do with the wealthy employer who was attracted by the employee's wife. This resulted in his sending the employee away, regardless of the fact that the employer was also married. When the employee returned and learned of the wife's escapade, he sought his employer, but was tricked into a false position and accused of a murder committed by the employer, so that he could be sent to his death by a quick trial.

The woman who had caused the trouble then came to the employer, but he had tired of her now and then his conscience began to cause him to fear the fate of a menace, with the result that he finally went mad, while the woman who had sacrificed everything for him found herself deserted and alone with nothing but the furnishings of her apartment to show for the ruin she had caused.

There are a good many very dramatic scenes in this, and they are registered by fine personalities of Mozukin and Mlle. Fetner in a manner that will make these players remembered. Mozukin is a dominant type, being a combination negro and woman, and I can best give you an idea as to his appearance and manner of carrying a scene by suggesting that he is a sort of combination of H. B. Warner and Stuart Holmes.



Were Mozukin brought to this country or if American methods were given the proper opportunity in Russia, I believe he would be one of the greatest of screen favorites in a short time.

Mlle. Fetner is a beautiful woman, and in the sympathy vampire part which she plays, she registers a portrayal that will be remembered and favorably commented on by your fans.

The Box Office Angle.

It seems to me that the first thing to be considered about this picture is the fact that it was made in Russia. Personally, I would want no better opportunity to cut loose with some advertising at the present moment. The fact that Mozukin is one of Russia's greatest stars, having been a star in the national theatres of that country, is another asset, and since the production is good enough to please generally, and certainly cannot be severely criticised, since it has been made under conditions different from those prevailing in American studios—it would seem to me that you should be able to do a big business with this and satisfy almost every element of your audience.

I commented above on the fact that, technically, this is not what it could have been had an American producer made it; but I want to impress you with the fact that it is decidedly better than the films you have been accustomed to condemn as "foreign." From the acting is so decidedly better than what we generally see, that I think the production will register with the average fan much better than it will with the average person in the film business, who naturally picks out technical flaws that a patron never thinks of.

"OVER THERE!"

Charles Richman and Anna Q. Nilsso

Holding in one hand the white feather which his sweetheart l given him as the brand of his cowardice, Monte switched on light—and his eyes focussed on the framed portrait of his heroic cestor! It is one of the telling moments in this screen drama of regeneration of a fearful soul, the story of a man who overcame spurious cowardice which enthralled him, and fought through "Man's Land" to the peace and happiness beyond. Seeing the "Rialto" with S. L. Rothapfel

(Reprint from M. P. News, Nov. 3rd)

DO you think that it is possible to make a scenic stand out as one of the great features of your program—more than that to leave an impression upon every one in the audience that will cause a buzz of comment as the audience leaves, even though the scenic is the first number of the bill?

This is what happened at the Rialto this week, and again this is largely due to the wonderful settings to music that S. L. Rothapfel gives his presentations. The scenic, by Educational Films Corporation, is "Niagara Falls." And to accompany the grandeur of these waterfalls Mr. Rothapfel selected Elder's "Pomp and Circumstance" march, a remarkable composition which was rendered with the pealings of the great organ and the big orchestra. But the music did not fit the picture as it was originally arranged, so Rothapfel did what few exhibitors would think of doing—rearranged the scenic to fit the picture. The result was so perfect an accompaniment that the notes might have been written for the film by one of the world's masters. The audience burst into wild applause at the end of it.

When a celebrated exhibitor like Mr. Rothapfel features a scenic you know it must be good, and you also know he has the pick of the world.

Mr. Exhibitor, why don't you feature our pictures and then see the marked improvement in your program.

Beautiful Scenes at Tally's Broadway

Robert Bruce's Film Hunters Take One Through Wonder Spots of Northwest

By MAITLAND DAVIES

There are occasions when a feature, though it be a good one, is not THE feature, and this is the case at Tally's Broadway Theatre this week. To my mind, THE feature of the program there this week is a short scenic film called the Film Hunters. It is another of the series of educational pictures, photographed by Robert Bruce, and it is so beautiful, so full of the spirit of the great outdoors, that I doubt if even The Silent Places excels it in attraction.

There is something about the work of Robert Bruce that makes his pictures things apart. He gets so far away from the stilted manner of setting his subjects before the public, and there is such an indescribable companionable personal touch to them, that one really feels one is making the journey through a wonder country with the artist, etc., etc.

THE MINNEAPOLIS, JOURNAL, October 4th, 1917

The real feature of the present program, however, is a scenic film of Alaska, showing glaciers in action. To watch huge masses of snow crumble and fall into the water, to see these floating in the current and to travel in a boat up to the edge of a glacier is an experience that dwarfs the thrills of any photoplay. These scenes are beautifully colored and give the most accurate idea of a glacier that the screen yet has recorded.

Mr. Exhibitor:

WHAT COUNTS?

CHILDREN COUNT

with everyone more than anything else in the world. Children pictures have a magnetic attraction that draws all ages. Did you read what Marion Howard, the famous Boston moving picture writer, says of the twelve 25 minute dramas.

"Do Children Count?"

LITTLE MARY McALISTER

"Why do not all first class theatres put on the 'Do Children Count?' series? What excuse is there for denying your public the right to see something more than worth while? The very title is of itself an advertisement, for intelligent persons know well that children do count everywhere, and these pictures point it out dramatically. Adults and kiddies alike are enjoying the series, which are a credit to Essanay and to the theatres showing them."

The Fifteen Cent Blunder

INTO the midst of a turbulent industry, into minds already discontented and suspicious, another bombshell has been tossed.

The advance deposit ghost was settling in its grave, the question of higher rentals was losing its sting, and then the tax of fifteen cents a reel per day burst from a clear sky. And once more we hear of red-hot exhibitor meetings throughout the country, the revolution-mill is again grinding, there are threats to cancel services—manufacturer and exhibitor are again arrayed against each other.

At a time when harmony of thought and unity of action is more sorely needed than ever we have naught but recriminations, bitterness and overhanging storms.

Where direct, unfaltering action was needed to enable a settled industry to cope with the unavoidable problems we will have instead a few unsettled weeks, many readjustments but more bitter words, some compromises but still the antagonism.

* * * *

WITH distinguished counsel still quibbling and government officials still doubtful, it is not for us to judge the right or wrong of the manufacturers' action in passing the tax on to the exhibitor.

It is not the tax itself or the amount decided upon that can here be called a blunder.

There are those who say that the lawmakers intended the tax to be passed on down the line to his excellency the ultimate consumer. The authority of President Wilson is given for this statement.

There are others who declare the language of the law to be clear in placing the burden on the manufacturer.

These are quibbles for the lawyers. The point that is plain and clear is this:

No sane man expected that the manufacturer could carry in its entirety a tax burden amounting to many thousands of dollars every week. No business man believes that the present margin of profit is sufficient to enable a large program to give Uncle Sam five thousand or more a week and still keep his doors open.

A spirit of cooperation between manufacturer and exhibitor was necessary and to be expected.

* * * *

BUT compulsion does not secure cooperation. And here is where we find our reason for the use of the word "Blunder"—in the method employed.

Until authority has spoken let us lay aside discussion as to the right or wrong of the manufacturers' action. View the facts regarding the method employed:

The exhibitor is told, in collecting his admission tax, to "Educate the patrons." "Show slides," he is directed, "give them program talks, explain—educate. Then there will be no trouble."

"Above all," he is admonished, "don't dodge the issue until November 1st. Pave the way—educate."

What was the course with the exhibitor? Was the way paved, was his confidence asked, was he—educated?

Short notices were sent from the exchanges. We haven't seen all of these notes, but of those which have been brought to our attention some were curt, others silly.

In some sections exhibitors were asked to sign contracts obliging them to pay the tax—a tactful, diplomatic step.

In at least one case an exhibitor's protest brought a cancellation threat.

Was not a storm to be expected?

* * * *

THE manufacturers have been paying the tax since October 4th. Quick action was needed, but one fact was clear from the start:

Either in a rental adjustment or outright levy the manufacturer tax either in whole or in part was to find its way to the exhibitor.

The ad. pages and editorial columns of the trade papers would have been gladly given to the manufacturers for frank, disinterested statements signed by all concerned and showing the necessity of this.

The motives of the manufacturers are of the best. They have met, conferred, figured and wrangled—seeking only the best way out for all.

But the abrupt method of action casts these motives into a shadow, distorts them, discolors them.

If education and preparation are necessary for the patron, most assuredly were they needed for the exhibitor.

If compromises were to be reached the time was before the storm and not after the wreck.

The tactical blunder results once more in bringing to exhibitor tongues the overworked rot of "downtrodden," "outraged," "buncoed."

Speaking Editorially:

The Seventy Per Cent Man

EXHIBITORS running at a five-cent admission are congratulating themselves on having escaped the tax on patrons. From some sections come reports that theatre men who have recently raised to the ten-cent scale are considering a return to the lower level.

In both cases exhibitors are reckoning without a full understanding of conditions.

Exhibitors with a five-cent scale should be preparing quickly and certainly to raise to a ten-cent price. And equally, there is no turning back for the ten-cent man.

Why? Because negative and positive film assessments, and taxes of all sorts will make it an impossibility to produce subjects for the five-cent house during the coming year. The margin between operating costs and admissions, already of tissue paper width in the five-cent house, will be wiped out entirely.

The studios are already giving the answer. Manufacturers of cheap-rental subjects are not waiting to pay the ghost, already many are disbanding companies, curtailing production.

Congress has not brought the five-cent house back into greater strength. The lawmakers have just pushed the five-center a step nearer the slide to Oblivion.

Some Quotations

THERE is an interesting passage in our correspondent's report on the two-state convention held by Nebraska and Iowa exhibitors to discuss the problems presented by the war tax. We give it here:

"The exhibitors said they feared that not only the $7.50 would be paid, but that the distributors were counting upon some rich war profits; the exhibitor bearing the burden. They were not opposed to paying a sum equivalent to the tax placed upon the film by the Government, they declared, as they realized the money must eventually come from the public anyway, but they were decidedly opposed to paying fat war profits."

There is the rub. It is not the tax, but the lack of information as to just what the tax means to the manufacturer that is the rub. It is the abrupt notice, and in individual cases lack of tact on the part of exchange men which has caused the storm.

Perhaps a further quotation from Omaha will be interesting. We'll give it to you as it comes—and let you search for your own moral:

"The first action was a request that the exchange managers tell whether the proposed fifteen-cent tax was imposed by the Government or by the distributors upon the exhibitor, and whether it did not more than cover the war revenue taxes upon the film.

"The exchange men said they could not answer. During the noon hour they had held a meeting and when asked for an explanation when the meeting was called in the afternoon they repeated, one after the other, that they did not know. They did not know the tax upon the film, or whether the fifteen-cents per reel would not more than pay it. They did not know whether the Government was asking that the exhibitors pay the tax, or whether the distributors had themselves asked it."

Don't Forget "The Last Chance"

ARE you preparing to have comparative reports ready on December 1st showing, by reference to October and November, the result of the admission tax on your business?

Don't forget that there is a "last chance." Proper representation at Washington with the opening of the new Congress may yet win a modification of the tax law.

General Manager Pettijohn, of the A. E. A., has already received assurances from numerous exhibitors that they have their October accounts in shape to do some real comparative figuring. Do your share. Every additional fact and figure will help.

Let's quit being a pacifist industry. With facts our armament, let's adopt a slogan of Preparedness.

A Word of Thanks

TO Ligon Johnson, general counsel of the United Managers' Protective Association, the picture industry owes a word of thanks.

While acting for an association more strictly allied with the large "legitimate" theatrical interests, and only slightly concerned with motion pictures, Mr. Johnson has been in constant willingness to aid in solving the film tangles of the new tax laws.

Few have been in such constant consultation with government officials as Mr. Johnson, few are so well posted on the law's intricacies and the varying interpretations.

For itself and for the industry, MOTION PICTURE NEWS says, "Thank you!" to Mr. Johnson for his broad-minded cooperation.

The Exhibitor Slacker

A CHICAGO reader of MOTION PICTURE NEWS has christened the "exhibitor slacker."

He means the man who is in a position to secure more than a five-cent admission, provided he has but the courage—and who cheats Uncle Sam by not doing so.

To glory in escaping a tax that will beat the Kaiser, and to give to patrons an opportunity to escape their just due is surely to earn the designation "slacker."

Take your courage in hand, Mr. Five-Center, make the jump and just as surely you will be "doing your bit."

America's Mr. Britling from Griffith?

CONSIDERING the splendid opportunity that was granted to David Griffith by the Allied Generals, to obtain, more closely than has ever been permitted any other picture man, to the real heart of the war, to feel the soul of the monster, and also considering Mr. Griffith's past performances, it seems quite within reason that he should emulate for the screen what H. G. Wells did for the printed page in the novel, "Mr. Britling Sees it Through."

Mr. Griffith has that enviable quality of transposing the purpose of life to the film.

Comparing "The Birth of a Nation" to the task now before him is like comparing a pigmy to a Brobdignag.

We think this is Mr. Griffith's great opportunity, and we are sure that he knows it is.

Our profoundest wishes for success accompany him in this titanic undertaking.

The Reader Has His Say

The Reel Tax Rouses the Ire of Some While the "Exhibitor Slacker" also Comes in For a Roast—One Has a Letter Which "We Won't Dare Publish," But Here it is Just the Same

"How About the Exhibitor-Slacker?" He Asks of the Five-Cent Man

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: In regards to the editorial in Motion Picture News of Oct. 27, stating that "the patron, once he learns the government's intention and is assured that he is not paying the exhibitor's bill, and will not be a slacker," brings a question to my mind.

How about the exhibitor slacker? For example, most of the movie-houses in the loop district of Chicago are charging from ten to twenty cents, and some higher, but there are a few who still cling to the five cents admission price. The patrons of these nickel theatres escape the government tax, as there is no levy on five-cent houses.

If the exhibitors can run these places with a profit at a nickel admission they surely can on a ten or fifteen, or even higher, so why not raise themselves above the nickel class. The point I want to bring out is this:

They will not only profit by it, themselves, but in doing so, they will help the government, for then their patrons will have to pay the tax. How about it? And wouldn't it be a good way to test the patriotism of their patrons? Surely they wouldn't refuse themselves their pleasures for the sake of one or two extra pennies when they know they would be helping the government.

Why not get the five-cent exhibitors together and show them how they can help "Uncle Sam" beat the Kaiser and help themselves, too?

JULIUS E. FRANKE.

"Another Kick at the Exhibitor" He Says of Reel Tax

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: The enclosed letter from an exchange explains itself—another kick for the exhibitor to help him on the downward path. It looks to me as though the producers and exchanges could have shown at least a spark of patriotism and stood their share of some of the burdens which the war has placed on us all. I believe this tax was placed there by the government with the intention that the manufacturers should pay it and that it should not be shifted on down to the exhibitor.

I consider a tax dodger at this critical time in the same class with a deserter from the army. When they hand this tax down to the exhibitor they are certainly dodging what the government intended them to pay.

In regard to the war tax at the box-office I have decided on my plan of procedure. I will pay the war tax myself. A real showman will not fail in this matter. I expect my wits to pull me through. Just a little stronger drawing card, just a little more advertising, just a little better music, just a little more effort during these trying times and I, for one, know I will not fail.

I figure I will get more gross money by leaving my admissions at even figures than I would with the added pennies. Unlike my fellow exhibitors in this territory I did not wait for a crisis like this to come along to raise my prices, but have been charging five, ten and fifteen cents for four years.

Eleven years' experience has shown me the way. Why it's just fun for me to go after the business nowadays. But when I see the big fellow handing that tax on film down to the exhibitor it just gets my goat.

"Ready-Made Ad-Talks a Good Thing"—A Suggestion

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: Your "Ready-Made Ad-Talks" are a good thing. But although we would like to use them all the time yet we can hardly do it, for if we cut them out and send them to our newspaper readers we would be spoiling some other reading on the opposite side.

My advice is that you print them on pages so that the other side has advertising or other news items which we do not mind cutting out.

HENRY GOLDMAN.

Colonial Theatres, Green Bay, Wisconsin.

[Mr. Goldman's suggestion regarding the popular "Ready-Made Ad-Talks" has been put into effect, beginning with this issue of Motion Picture News.—ED. NOTE.]

"Uncle Sam Needs It—Enuf Sed"—Says a Courageous Showman

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing the card bearing the information you desire.

My price for my regular feature programs has always been five cents for children under thirteen and ten cents for adults—specials fifteen or twenty-five for all seats.

Owing to the tax measure recently passed I cannot continue at my former ten-cent price. I know it would be business death. After Nov. 1 I will raise my admission price to a flat fifteen-cent level on the regular ten-cent shows. This will include the two-cent tax.

It is not an easy matter to raise prices in a small town and the result will be later history. However, "Uncle Sam" needs money and I am not going to kick. If I die in my business it will be with my boots on, making a try of it at least.

JAMES A. PATTERSON.

"I Read Every Ad. Carefully"—Says a Wise Exhibitor

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: As you know I am a subscriber to your paper and without handing you any bouquets, it is the paper. I get it every Wednesday noon and I am always very much interested in it until I have got the entire contents.

I am very much interested in the ads and by going through them carefully I am always well posted on what the different manufacturers have to offer and when the agents come around I know just about where things stand.

The little heart to heart talks that are in the News each week are sure some fine articles and the man who writes them must have a whole lot of pep and push in him. That you may know just what articles I mean look on page 2711 of your issue of Oct. 20. I hope you will continue these articles, as they make one feel like doing something.

For good stuff I have a whole lot of confidence in Metro. They have got some fine stuff and most all of their stars get over in fine shape here.

"I Don't Suppose You Will Care to Use This"

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I am acting on the suggestion in your recent editorials and enclosing a story on the rental price evil which is upon us.

I don't suppose you will care to use this, as the advertiser will not consider it a favorable criticism of his motives, but it tells the story here better than you know. Conditions are not considered by the powers of the New York office. Prices of rentals are made in New York and based on conditions existing at some former period or under something that gave to the price asked by New York a queer twist.

The little fellow, the real life of the game, is going to be crushed because fewer people can afford to go and the bigger fellow will prosper and the little fellow go under.

Here we have always been asked awful rentals for pictures and we have always got a twenty-cent price. To raise is impossible and the new prices are ruinous.

JO. E. RICKARDS.

The Hip, Phoenix, Arizona.

Fifteen Cent Tax Promises Stormy Time in Film Ranks

Exhibitor Organizations Up in Arms—American Association Issues Statement—Oregon and Iowa Leagues Take Action—Louisville Association Goes on Record

WITH startling rapidity, exhibitor organizations in all sections of the country have held meetings to protest against the fifteen-cent a reel per day tax. At least one organization, the A. E. A. branch in Chicago, has threatened legal action with the first attempt to collect the tax.

In most cases the organizations have contented themselves with protests and the appointment of committees to study the legal aspects of the tax.

C. C. Pettijohn Advises Protest; Holds Exhibitor Meetings

From the office of Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitor Association, a statement was issued last week advising exhibitors not to pay the 15 cents per reel tax levied by manufacturers to carry to positive and negative burden. "Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Indiana have already announced that they will not pay," he said, "and in many cases the manufacturers have backed up."

General Manager Pettijohn is actively engaged in addressing exhibitor meetings concerning the new tax. Meetings have been held in Indianapolis, Cleveland and Detroit.

Chicago Won't Pay; Talk Legal Action

CHICAGO (Special).—The Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, Chicago local of the American Exhibitors' Association, at a meeting held in its club rooms at 19 West Adams street, Wednesday, October 24, expressed great indignation at the move over the new fifteen-cent per reel per day charge which Chicago exchanges began to levy last week.

Following a resolution adopted by the meeting the following letter was sent out to each member of the local association:

BROTHER EXHIBITOR:

After consultation with our attorneys, Messrs S. & F. Lowenthal, it has been made apparent to us that the exchanges have no right to add a tax of fifteen cents per reel to our film bills. We, therefore, advise you under no circumstances to pay this charge, and if your show is stopped get in communication with the office immediately or with our attorneys direct.

TAX COMMITTEE.
Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association.

The exhibitors are making extensive preparations to fight this new item that is being added to their film bills, and are at present waiting for a show to be stopped because of refusal to submit to the new tax. As soon as an exchange refuses to give an exhibitor the film his contract calls for, unless he pays the additional charge, his case will be taken into court and the legality of the manufacturer's attempt to administer the extra tax, challenged.

A. J. Krug, formerly vice president of the Theatre Owners' Association, is now holding down the presidential chair previously occupied by Herman Schoenstadt. Mr. Schoensadt, who was a big factor in the organization of both the American Exhibitors' Association and its Chicago local, resigned after his two sons, Arthur and Henry, were both drafted into the national army. Mr. Schoenstadt, who up to this time had had them to assist in the management of his theatres, found that his new duties were too much for him and tendered in his resignation.

The Five Dollar a Reel Tax (?)

¶ William Wright, of the Kalem Company, appeared at the meeting of the National Association last Friday with a letter from Commissioner Daniel Roper, of the Internal Revenue Bureau. Commissioner Roper's letter was intended to define the position of the commercial film printer, but in so doing included the following sentence:

"The tax should be paid—by the owner of the film or positive print, and upon him the tax will be imposed at one-half cent per foot each time the same is sold or leased."

Strictly interpreted, this sentence might mean that a tax of five dollars per reel would be collected each time a film was rented. Interpreted otherwise, with the stress on the words "by the owner," it might mean that the tax could not be passed on, but that the manufacturer would be expected to pay $5 per reel tax on subjects for which he now receives $1 rental. Or it could mean that the Rialto, a week-run house, would mean a tax of $50 for the producer, where a five-cent daily change house would bring taxes of $350 per week.

Further interpretations might prove that the moon is made of green cheese. But New York attorneys who have been in consultation with Commissioner Roper since the date on his letter to Mr. Wright, and with Deputy Fletcher, declare that there is no such intention in the Commissioner's mind as might be gathered from his joker sentence. Revenue bureau officials in New York affirm this view.

Meanwhile William A. Brady, Arthur Friend, P. A. Powers and Lee Ochs, as a committee from the National Association, journeyed to Washington to confer with Commissioner Roper on Monday. The general cool-headed opinion is that when the genial Alabaman learns of the dire things he has almost done to the picture industry he'll spank the clerk who wrote the letter and cuss himself out for affixing his signature without close reading.

But on Saturday Lee Ochs's trade organ, which seems to have sensed the tax situation from the start as a golden opportunity for yellow journalism—or else "the new trade journalism" appeared with two page scare headlines which made the extinction of the industry an imminent, over-night affair. New York exhibitors were thrown into a panic and as the "new trade jourailsm" exponent reached other cities the effect was the same. And incidentally the storm also covered up the fact that a number of "exclusive interpretations" and "officially approved blanks" had been shown to be entirely wrong.

Oregon League Takes Action

Word was received on Wednesday of last week by MOTION PICTURE NEWS from its Portland correspondent that exchanges in that city had been notified by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon that none of its members will pay the 15 cent per reel charge exacted each day.

No further information has been received regarding the effect of the action. Exhibitors in Oregon have been firmly organized within the past few months and the outlook promises trouble.

Nebraska and Iowa Men Up in Arms; Pay Under Protest

OMAHA (Special).—A committee to find whether the government intended the exhibitor to pay a fifteen cents per reel tax was named at a big meeting of Iowa and Nebraska exhibitors held here this week. It was voted to pay the tax under protest until the committee reports.

The meeting was a most stormy one. Frank D. Eager, of Lincoln, who gained national prominence at the recent Chicago convention, presided. The members stated that they will refuse to pay the tax if the committee reports that the government intended it for the manufacturer and not to be passed on.

The organization also decided to fight the music tax by playing no music on which a tax was demanded.

Regarding the admission tax it was decided that the members would collect by an out and out increase in price to the amount of the tax, thus from a ten-cent price to twelve cents, and so on.

Excelsior Has Slides Explaining Tax

The Excelsior Slide Company, New York City, has prepared a series of slides for exhibitors' use in explaining to their patrons the new Government war tax. The slides are valuable in letting the patrons know that the tax is levied by Uncle Sam on the patron and cannot be paid by the exhibitor. The slides are now available.

Mutual Not to Charge Tax; Independents Uncertain

President Freuler's Message "To the Exhibitors of the United States" Mailed to Every Theatre—Hoffman Foursquare, First Independent to Act, Will Not Charge

WHILE manufacturers and exhibitors were already at their wits end over the entire tax muddle, a bombshell was thrown into the situation on Friday by the announcement from Chicago that the Mutual Film Corporation would absorb the excise tax and not pass it on to the exhibitors.

The announcement of the company's decision came from the office of President John R. Freuler, and was in the form of a "Message to Every Exhibitor in the United States." Copies of the declaration of the Mutual policy were immediately placed in the mail adressed to every exhibitor in the country. The statement reads:

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION,
222 South State Street.
Office of the President.
CHICAGO, October 26, 1917.

TO THE EXHIBITORS OF THE UNITED STATES:

We are pleased to inform you that the Mutual Film Corporation will absorb the special war excise tax imposed on film, and that it has instructed its branch managers to this effect in a telegram under date of October 25, reading as follows:

CANCEL ALL WAR EXCISE TAX INSTRUCTIONS AND OPERATIONS. MAKE NO CHARGES OR COLLECTIONS. GOVERNMENT PERMITS US TO PAY DIRECT WITHOUT PASSING TAX ON TO EXHIBITORS. DESTROY ALL STAMPED CONTRACT BLANKS AND DISCONTINUE USE RUBBER STAMP ON VOUCHERS. NOTIFY EXHIBITORS STOP. HAD PREVIOUSLY UNDERSTOOD THAT LAW REQUIRED US TO CHARGE TAX TO EXHIBITORS AND BELIEVED THAT EXHIBITORS SUPPORTED FIFTEEN-CENT TAX CHARGE PROPOSED BY NATIONAL ASSOCIATION MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY IN WHICH EXHIBITORS ARE REPRESENTED.

This means the Mutual Film Corporation will pay the war tax on film.

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION,
JOHN R. FREULER, President.

M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Will Not Charge Reel Tax

The first of the independents to take definite action on the excise tax question was M. H. Hoffman, who announced that no charge would be made to exhibitors on pictures booked through the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges. Mr. Hoffman's decision was made public in a telegram to the Cleveland Exhibitors League replying to a query regarding his stand. The wire read:

"Foursquare will not tax exhibitors any amount above rental price. Notwithstanding that we are taxed on every foot of positive film as well as negative, we feel that the exhibitor has sufficient burdens to bear without being further loaded. Taxation is the sinew of war. Foursquare will do its bit without compelling exhibitors to pay it for them."

Louisville Photoplay Association Adopts Resolutions

LOUISVILLE, KY. (Special).—Notices arriving from film manufacturers that the manufacturers had arranged to make a charge of 15 cents per day per reel to take care of the new Federal tax for war purposes led to members of the Louisville Photoplay Association calling a meeting and taking action on the matter. Members of the organization include the owners of every white moving picture house in the city of Louisville, it being a 100 per cent organization.

Figuring the tax that has already been placed upon the exhibitor, the local men are up in arms over the matter and have adopted resolutions which are being sent to the Kentucky Congressmen and also to the film exchanges supplying service in the Louisville district. A meeting of the association was held on October 20, at which a full vote was recorded and a committee appointed to launch a protest.

Later the association gave out the following statement:

"At a meeting of the Louisville Photoplay Association the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, the Congress of the United States has passed the following law:

"'Upon all moving picture films (which have not been exposed) sold by the manufacturer or imported, a tax equivalent of ¼ of 1 per cent. per linear foot,' and

"Upon all positive moving picture films (containing a picture ready for projection) sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer or importer, a tax equivalent of ½ of 1 per cent. per linear foot.

"And whereas the moving picture theatres of this association and throughout the entire country are paying local war taxes based on the seating capacity of the houses operating, and will be required to place a tax on each ticket sold to the patrons, thereby curtailing its business.

"And whereas certain manufacturers are attempting to charge the exhibitor the sum of 15 cents per reel per day, to make the exhibitors pay the taxes imposed upon the manufacturers by Congress,

"It is the sense of this meeting that the manufacturers of films are unjustly and wrongfully attempting to evade the taxes justly laid upon them by the Congress of the United States, and are attempting to make the exhibitor assume in addition to his individual taxes the burden of the manufacturers.

"And what is more intolerant and undemocratic, the manufacturers by the charge of 15 cents per day per reel will not only make the exhibitor pay the tax intended for the manufacturer, but will make a profit of from $20 to $30 per reel. This association is convinced that the war tax was not passed to be a weapon of greed and evasion in the hands of manufacturers, but was designed to place the expense of this war upon all the manufacturers and exhibitors equally and justly.

"It is the sense of this meeting that the officers of this association protest to its representatives at Washington against the high-handed and unjust methods of such manufacturers, and that the action of this association be communicated to all of the trade papers of the nation, so that concerted action may be taken to protect the rights of the exhibitors and the integrity of the act of Congress.

"LOUISVILLE PHOTOPLAY ASSOC.,
"(Signed) C. M. Greene, Secretary."

Some Questions Answered in Brief

Q. Does the child under twelve years of age pay a tax on a five-cent Admission when the maximum charge is ten cents or more,

A. YES.

Q. Does the child under the age of twelve years of age who enters a motion picture theatre (or any other place of amusement) where the maximum admission is ten cents or more have to pay a tax?

A. Yes.

Q. Does the child pay the same as an adult?

A. Yes, where the admission for adults is ten cents and no more. No, where the admission for adults is more than ten cents. The child, whether he or she pays five cents or five dollars to enter a theatre, pays a tax of one cent and NO MORE. The adult pays ten per cent of the admission price—one cent on a ten-cent admission, two cents on a fifteen or twenty cent admission, three cents on a twenty-five or thirty cent admission, and so on up the scale.

Q. Are five-cent seats exempted from tax where there is a maximum price of admission of ten cents or more?

A. No.

This was explained in last week's issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, but since other publications have interpreted this phase of the tax law in a different light, and erroneously, the editor repeats this part of the ruling.

Q. If an exhibitor charges ten cents admission on one day a week, as a maximum, and other days of the week he only charges a maximum admission fee of five cents to all parts of the house, does he have to collect a tax on the days he only charges five cents?

It is the opinion of the writer and several attorneys that he does not have to pay a tax on the days he charges a maximum admission fee of five cents, but on the day or days he charges a maximum admission fee of ten cents or more, he must collect a tax on all admissions, including the five-cent admissions.

A trade publication has run in its columns what is purported to be an official form, approved by the proper officials. According to a statement issued by Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue for the New York district, under the date of October 27th, THERE HAS BEEN NO FORM OF REPORT OR RETURN APPROVED AS YET BY THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. Eisner states that as soon as the monthly form has been approved by him and copies are available, they will be distributed. "In the meantime," continues the statement, "all proprietors of motion picture houses which charge admissions of over five cents should be prepared to collect the tax, beginning November 1st, on all admissions."

Clearing the Airdome and Other Questions

AS previously stated in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, five-cent admissions will not be exempted under the War Tax Law, where the maximum price of admission to any theatre is ten cents or more.

Mark Eisner, collector of Internal Revenue for the New York district, so states. Mr. Eisner cites Section 700 of the War Tax Law, which reads that admission tax "SHALL NOT BE IMPOSED IN THE CASE OF A PLACE, THE MAXIMUM CHARGE FOR ADMISSION TO WHICH IS FIVE CENTS." Mr. Eisner says that the proper officials at Washington have ruled that this means that where a house charges ten cents, for example, for an orchestra seat, and five cents for a gallery seat, the five-cent gallery seat will be taxable at the rate of one cent.

It has also been erroneously stated that admissions up to ten cents are exempt from taxation when applied to airdomes. This is not correct, says Mr. Eisner. Airdomes, where the maximum charge for admission is more than five cents, will be taxable on admissions, unless they are situated within outdoor general amusement parks. The law provides that there shall be no tax for a show or other form of amusement, the maximum charge for admission to which is ten cents, WITHIN OUTDOOR GENERAL AMUSEMENT PARKS.

This is most important. Remember—where the airdome is situated WITHIN OUTDOOR GENERAL AMUSEMENT PARKS, there will be no tax on a maximum admission of ten cents. But where the airdome is situated WITHOUT an outdoor general amusement park, there is a tax on admissions of more than five cents. In other words, where an airdome is a distinct and separate amusement place from an amusement park (and this is usually the case), there is a tax imposed on admission where the maximum admission charge is more than five cents. An airdome, for example, situated within the amusement center at Coney Island, would not be taxed on its admission because it is WITHIN an outdoor general amusement park. But if there is an airdome situated in your town or city, separate and apart from other amusements, the tax applies.

Cardinal Gets Indictment on Alleged Duping

Was Claimed That Fred Beck, Lewis Weiss and Leo Singer Infringed on "Joan the Woman"—Held in $2,000 Bail Each

ON complaint of the Cardinal Film Company, a subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, indictments were returned on Oct. 24 by the U. S. Grand Jury on two counts against Fred Beck, Lewis Weiss and Leo Singer, who, it was alleged, formed a conspiracy to infringe upon a copyright of "Joan the Woman," the motion picture feature owned by the complainant.

The defendants were brought before United States Commissioner Hitchcock, and, after hearing were held for the Grand Jury in $2,000 bail each. Their arrest recently was said to be the result of the development of events following the alleged theft of one of the prints of "Joan the Woman." Ralph A. Kohn, attorney for Famous Players-Lasky, took the matter up with Assistant District Attorney Stanton and the latter conducted the criminal proceedings. It is claimed that the stolen positive was taken to New Jersey, where a duplicate negative was made and placed on the market.

"Joan the Woman" was produced by Cecil DeMille, and starred Geraldine Farrar. The feature had a long run at the Forty-fourth street theatre, and it was following the winter run that the positive was said to have been stolen from a film exchange.

Laemmle Explains Temporary Lull on Coast

Waits to See How Seriously War Tax Is Going to Affect the Universal Company—Has Large Stock of Reserve on Hand

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, last week issued the following announcement concerning the temporary suspension of a few of the producing companies at Universal City. The statement will no doubt be of general interest and of particular importance to exhibitors who use the Universal product.

"Until we know exactly how seriously the war tax is going to affect us, and until we are positively convinced that the exhibitors will co-operate in collecting the money from the public, we intend to take advantage of the fact that we have accumulated the largest reserve stock of negatives in our career by laying off several feature companies for about four weeks.

"This will not affect the production of serials, because we are not far enough ahead on serial negatives to suspend producing them. The same thing, of course, applies to the Animated Weekly, the Current Events and the Universal Screen Magazine because of the fact that it is impossible to have a reserve supply of negatives on news events.

"The fact that the cloudy and rainy season are about at hand helped us to arrive at this decision, for we have not quite enough electric light stages in Universal City for all our companies. By suspending operations until we have used up a certain amount of our big reserve supply of negatives, we avoid the heavy loss of having several companies lying idle on cloudy or rainy days. This, by the way, happened only last week entailing a loss of approximately, $15,000."

Mr. Laemmle continues: "It has taken us a long time to arrive at the point where we have accumulated enough high-class negatives to carry out this economic policy. In fact this is the first time we have been in a position to take such radical steps. No doubt this temporary suspension will give rise to various rumors and it is to prevent any possible misapprehension of the true situation that the Universal company has issued this official announcement."

St. Louis Men Refuse to Pay Footage Tax

A resolution was passed October 26 at a meeting of the Theatre Managers and Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis, as follows: "That the president and secretary notify all film exchanges that the members of this association refuse to pay their tax, and that no member pay any film tax until notified by the Government, and not sign any riders to be attached to contracts for that purpose.

"The manufacturer has taken the wrong view in this matter in charging the exhibitor this tax, as the law specifically states that the manufacturer must pay same."

Eastern Pennsylvania and Jersey in Line, Says Mastbaum

The following telegram was received at Friday's meeting of the National Association from Stanley Mastbaum, the prominent Eastern exhibitor:

"Samuel Goldfish,
"Goldwyn Pictures Corporation,
"16 East 42nd Street, New York.

"In reference to the additional charge of fifteen cents per reel that the exhibitors in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey have been asked to pay, I have conferred with a great many of them, both small and large exhibitors. They are ready, anxious and willing to pay this charge, realizing the impossibility of the producer paying same. The attitude of many of the manufacturers trying to give to the exhibitors film productions at prices which they can afford to pay, should make every exhibitor in this country doubly anxious to keep all hardships from his source of supply.

"STANLEY V. MASTBAUM."

Nazimova Christens New House in New Orleans

One of the events of the month in motion picture circles of New Orleans was the christening of the new Liberty theatre in an appropriate manner a few days ago by Mme. Nazimova, Metro star, who was there with a company of players producing a feature under the working title of "The Madonna of the Rosebush."

It is announced that Manager Boehringer, of the Liberty, has arranged to open the theatre with the Nazimova production, most of the scenes of which were taken in New Orleans.

Long Wail of Tax Stricken Brings More Boosters in Line

Admissions Go Up as Tax Lays Its Clammy Grip on Hesitators—Portland Climbs a Rung—Chattanooga Advances a Nickel—Omaha Still Active—New Orleans Hesitates—Los Angeles Again Heard From

WITH clamorous meetings going on in scores of cities, big and little, where the downtrodden exhibitor is endeavoring to express his woes at the tragedy which has descended in our midst in the gloomy person of the war revenue bill, or devising ways and means of telling the public how the tax tickets must be patriotically paid for, the hordes of individual exhibitors who are seeing the light sufficiently to jack up their admission prices without indulging in wailing continue to increase.

Up They Go!

The admission boosters are gathering in converts every hour. All sections are taking heart. The old, weary cry, "My patrons won't stand for it," is being heard less frequently on all sides now. "The patrons will stand for it," is the revised slogan.

Out in Portland, Oregon, the Liberty and Columbia, two of Portland's leading photoplay theatres, increased admission prices from fifteen to twenty cents for adults, and children from five to ten cents, Sunday. November 1, the remaining first-run downtown theatres—People's, Majestic, Star and Sunset—will adopt this price schedule.

Suburban houses, the majority of which have been charging ten cents, will go to fifteen when the new admission tax becomes effective, while throughout the state where a fifteen cent charge has almost universally prevailed the jump will be to twenty cents. A few twenty-five cent houses are expected to remain at this figure, while many five cent houses will adopt a more elaborate Sunday program policy and go to ten cents. Portland's five cent theatres are in a quandary as to their position but may be forced to raise through a rumored drive of the first run exhibitors against the exchanges.

Folks Don't Mind Paying

Admission prices at the Alcazar Motion Picture theatre, principal film house in Chattanooga, were formerly 10 and 15 cents, but now range from 15 to 25 cents. The Alcazar and a string of theatres are operated by the Signal Amusement Company, but it is stated that the prices at the other film houses have not been materially changed. It is also stated that the price of admission at the Alcazar is governed by the quality of the picture. People gladly pay more to see a first-class picture.

Another Los Angeles Convert

The DeLuxe theatre, an eight hundred seat house in the Westlake residence district of Los Angeles, has this week increased the admission prices from ten, fifteen and twenty cents, to fifteen, twenty-five and thirty. This house is showing Fox Standard Pictures second run in Los Angeles, and has contracted for second run of Fox Sunshine Comedies, first run of which for the territory will be at Miller's Alhambra theatre.

Detroit in the Ring

In view of the coming tax on film and the rising costs generally of doing business, Detroit exhibitors are advancing prices to meet the new condition. Many theatres that divided their house at night on the first floor between ten and fifteen cent prices, are making the entire floor fifteen cents straight. Others are advancing fifteen cent seats to twenty. Anyway, there has been a general advance in Detroit by the best houses, and they report no falling off in business.

Omaha Gathers Them In

President H. M. Thomas of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Nebraska called a meeting of the exhibitors of Iowa and Nebraska at Omaha for Tuesday October 23, to discuss the tax and a uniform method of meeting it.

A number of Omaha exhibitors, both suburban and downtown, are planning a general increase in admission prices to offset the government tax and the increase in rentals, expected to follow on the heels of the taxation of the raw materials. Their method in making this move general is unique.

Exhibitors C. Pramer of the Alhambra, Oscar Rohlff of the Rohlff, Eric Helgren of the Suburban and Jules W. Rachman of the Grand drew up an agreement to be signed by other exhibitors. Those signing it agreed to increase their admission price to fifteen and twenty-five cents beginning November 1, to put up a bond of $100 to show their good faith. These agreements are now being circulated among suburban houses.

When the suburban houses complete signing them, they will be taken to the downtown houses.

Big Fellows Lined Up

"With the big majority of suburban exhibitors signed, and with their bonds to show their good faith, we do not expect much trouble in getting the big downtown houses to fall into line," said Mr. Rachman.

As in other parts of the country, exhibitors in the Omaha territory have thought and talked of little else since the tax became a certainty. It has been freely predicted no average house could remain in business unless some step was taken. The Omaha exhibitors, discussing the matter, decided upon the fifteen and five cent admission plan as the best way out. The next best plan in their estimation was the coupon book.

Practically all of the houses now charge ten and five cents. In the suburban houses where a large percentage of patrons are children, the increase will not be so marked as to arouse opposition, the promoters believe.

The exhibitors declare it is improbable that more than a few will even try to return to the old five-cent-admission plan. "Unless it is a downtown house open for twelve hours a day, it will be impossible," said Rachman. "Costs even outside the tax will be too high. And the patrons will not stand for the class of film an exhibitor would be compelled to show if he charged five cents.

"He cannot get by, by cutting down on his program, either. The patrons don't notice the additional reel you put on, but it doesn't take them a minute to get next to the reel you have taken off. The other evening I showed 'The Flame of the Yukon' to packed houses, and in order to handle the crowds better I neglected to run a two-reel comedy I had advertised in the lobby. I don't know how many of my patrons jumped me about leaving off those two reels."

Tax Coupon Books

Every exhibitor heard from throughout the Omaha territory declares now is the time for exhibitors to get together. Something must be done or the motion picture business will be crushed for the time, they say. No plan has yet been advanced for the out-state showmen; that is, a plan which has been distributed with the recommendation of the state league.

The coupon book plan rests its hope for profit on human carelessness. Some exhibitors figure that by selling a book of ten coupons for one dollar, the holder will use most of the tickets and allow the others to wear out or become lost. Some "legitimate" houses in the central West are considering this plan, rather than go to the expense and inconvenience of keeping a stamp cashier along with the ticket seller.

New Orleans Fears Higher Rentals

There is no doubt that the exhibitors in the New Orleans film territory are confronted with a very serious situation, notwithstanding the fact that nearly everybody has money and the South is enjoying higher market prices than it has known within the past fifty years. On the face of it the exhibitors should be doing a fine business, but they complain of increased expenses to an inordinate degree in labor, overhead and film rentals. Their only hope appears to lie in an increase in admission prices and even the suggestion of this causes a chill to creep over the unfortunate theatre owner and he immediately sees visions of increased film rentals.

He has come to believe that the film exchange manager makes it his particular business to watch every source of income for the exhibitor and to immediately increase the price of service if he thinks the exhibitor has a spare nickel in his pocket.

Exhibitors frankly make the charge when the expedient of increasing the admission price is suggested and they do not care to undertake what they consider to be a forlorn experiment.

Occasional experiments are made in price boosting, but in every instance the exhibitor is sure of his subject before he tries the experiment on his patrons. If the show has a reputation, he finds little

Another Wail of Protest at High Rentals

"I Don't Object to High Rentals When Producers Deliver the Goods, But I Do Complain About Being Sandbagged for Second Raters"

ONE should welcome your invitation to air individual opinions of provincial exhbitors on a subject so paramount as that of the present day increased rentals.

Thewave of high rentals now threatens to engulf the business, and it really amounts to that when one considers the inevitable outcome of the determination of most all of the producing concerns to exact more rent from the retailer of pictures regardless of the drawing power of the individual product.

I hesitate to say, lest I be accused of lack of modesty, that I am a successful exhibitor. I have made money since my transition from the legitimate to the screen end of the game, and I have been a close student of conditions. I do not need to recall to you my successful exploitation of pictures to the extent of attracting national attention from the trade journals, and not a day comes that does not bring mail from other exhibitors whom I have never met, asking me for copies of the ideas that have carried different exploitations to success in my theatre. Hence I trust I am not one of the brand you observe in your recent issue under the apt classification of "a swimmer on the tide of picture prosperity."

I do not think any showman (there is a vast distinction between showman and exhibitor) will complain of a legitimate increase in film rentals on a product or star that has the pulling power to offset the advance, but it is not this producer that the exhibitor is destined to battle for a just film rental.

It is the producer who is not able to secure stars and stories to measure up to the mark of the concern with the established star, that the exhibitor must fear. First, because the producer sees with greedy eye the success of the tilt in prices accomplished by the man with the stars and tries to emulate his innovation; second, he has nothing upon which to base a claim for extra rentals save a promise of better pictures, for his second rate stars are at the limit of their drawing power.

He further knows that the exhibitor who has his program is shut off from that of the owner of the really successful stars (and they can be counted upon the fingers of one hand) by reason of the fact that his competitor controls the service for his section. With this weapon the man with the second rate service demands, and as you say in nine cases out of ten gets, the increased rental, for the poor goof who has his service has probably built up a fair business at the former rental price and is getting by. He has only one other course—give up his theatre, which often happens he is not able to do without losing the fruits of hard years of work.

Take my own case. I have a second rate service, which by dint of hard work and personal application and much original publicty I have made bring money into my house, but the man who is my competitor obtains the same result without the personal touch because he has the real "McCoy."

Recently this concern announced a series of "extra priced pictures," and, mind you, they are taking the same stars that they show in program offerings to make these "extra priced pictures," which have not a single extra drawing trait save the trade journal advertisements to the effect that they are "world beaters." To buy this sandbag product the contract holder must agree or see his program stars exploited by some big open shop house and their value forever gone to him.

For these so-called extra pictures the exhibitor is asked to pay three and four times what he is paying for program pictures. If he asks what to do to offset the extra cost, the $40 a week exchange manager, who is "hopped" with the "stingem" serum of the swivel-chair solomons of the New York offices, says "raise prices."

An exhibitor with brains enough to go home without a guide knows that is impossible when he has offered the same star two weeks previously at his regular house price. How impossible is best judged when the wideawake exhibitor ponders over how he can "hop" a couple of thousand patrons who have been wise so long that they can tell you the color of the director's hair in half the cases.

The same bunk the exchange manager slips the man who has to take his service or get out of the game won't work on the public.

One exchange manager when I called his attention to a legitimate actress whom his concern had sent out in an extra-priced special, said: "But she is a great actress." Perhaps a fact, but the sphere of her special vogue is bounded on the north by the Bronx, west by the Jersey meadows, east by the Atlantic and south by Philadelphia. She is not known in provincial picture circles as well as some of the corn-fed serial thrillers. Why extra price for her, I ask. "She is a good actress." I admit it. So are Queen olives good, but you can bet your show shop aganst a German promise, and not give too much odds, that a Fiji Islander will not pawn his case breech clout to buy Queen olives if he has never stuck a tooth in an olive.

She is not known, and her vehicle is a made to order one for an of the moment picture. I played her on my best days, worked for weeks to create an interest in her, did a nice business because my clentele took my word for the picture and its merits. It was good, but I turned around the next two days and topped the business $4 with one of the same concern's program stars who was a lot better known than the "great legitimate actress" to picture patrons, and who had a vehicle with a good title and better paper than the so-called "special," which was a high rental picture only in the minds of the "solomons" in New York, who in nine cases out of ten don't know where my burg is and could not find it on a map without the aid of the stenographer.

These extra-priced champions have seen one concern grab most of the stars of the picture world, tilt prices because they have the goods, and they long to pull the same stuff. There seems to be no relief in sight from this sandbag policy save organization and community agreement.

There might be one solution, but it lacks solution—"the independent marketing of good high class independent pictures."

Admission Boosters

objection to the increase in price, but the great trouble, he argues, is in making a horizontal raise in the price af admission when he is showing the ordinary program releases.

"We are going ahead and spending a considerable amount of money in improvements which amount to the complete rebuilding of our theatre," declared M. H. Jacobs of Jacobs & Landry, in speaking of the Prytanis theatre, "but we are doing it because the character of our patronage demands it, not because of the rosy outlook for business at the present time. We feel that admission prices should be increased yet we cannot see, under existing conditions how it can be done with any degree of success."

William Isenberg, proprietor of the Bijou theatre, Greenville, Miss., and second vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America declares that admission prices to the theatres should by all means be raised and that the exhibitors are confronted with a situation where something must be done to relieve it. Yet he fears that a radical advance in prices would meet with such opposition from the patrons as to make it a very dangerous experiment not so much on account of the money involved, but on account of the general belief that the present quality of feature productions does not warrant the payment of more money to see them.

Manager R. M. Chisolm, of the Diamond theatre in New Orleans, the largest exclusively motion picture theatre in the city, is a believer in the ideas of advanced prices. "Originally," he declared, "the Diamond theatre held to the invariable rule of one price, ten cents, for all productions, but I find that the people are willing to pay what a picture is worth. Recently we have been running some exceptionally strong subjects which, under our policy of personally passing upon every picture before allowing it to go on our screen, were clearly worth double the price of the ordinary feature production, therefore we doubled the price and our audiences actually increased under the plan. This proves conclusively that any fault to be found with the fixing of the prices of admissions, is to be laid at the door of the production and not at the door of the people or the theatre."

Jitneys Dying Like Flies

The Josiah Pearce and Sons syndicate have occasionally increased their admission prices recently in the face of the fiercest competition ever known in the city, and they have found it to be to their advantage, although they are compelled to drop at once when a picture of only ordinary merit goes on the screen.

One of the noticeable conditions is the marked falling off in the patronage of the jitney motion picture shows. They are dying like flies in the suburbs and have a fearful struggle for existence in the downtown districts.

Hodkinson is Back "To Rescue Drowning Exhibitor"

Prominent Distributor, Formerly President of Paramount and Triangle Respectively, Returns to the Industry—Has Well Thought Out Plan—Will Proceed Methodically—No Releases Yet Named

W. W. HODKINSON has returned to the film industry. Following a summer's rest since his resignation from the presidency of the Triangle Distributing Company, he announces his intention of returning to form a new distributing organization to be known as the W. W. Hodkinson Company. The reason for the use of his name is that the new company will stand only for those principles to which he is willing to give that name. The announcement of the first of his producing connections is to be made next week.

Regrets Inability to Be Specific

In an interview given Friday, Mr. Hodkinson went somewhat into detail regarding his reason for taking his place in the business again at this particular time, while regretting his inability to be more specific in his statement of what he expects to do.

"I am coming back into the business now," he said, "for reasons similar to those which have been behind every move I have ever made—because I feel that the time is ripe for the raising of some sort of solid ground under the exhibitor to let him lift himself above the waves of confusion which are threatening to drown him—and drown him really, in a financial sense. I have a plan which I can frankly say I believe will give him a chance of life, and that plan is the creation of a distributing organization whose services, in the form of guarantees of the highest class of all round pictures that are produced, of an adequate supply of such pictures, and of a type of screen story which will appeal to his audience as the story can and will appeal, if properly presented by the proper stars for the parts.

"These are the surface things which my plan will give the exhibitor, and behind that will be an organization which will do for him the sort of looking out for his interests which he demands and the times demand.

In Spirit an Exhibitor

"You know, I am in spirit an exhibitor before I am anything else. My whole experience has been with exhibitors' problems, first in my own theatre and later in exchanges and distributing organizations. I make no claims, moreover, to knowledge of the producing field, and my distribution success, so far as it has gone, has been due to my years of experience with, and understanding of exhibitors, and my recognition of the rights and desires of the exhibitor as the thing of first importance. I am very sincere in this, and the friends, personal and business, whom I have over the whole country, help me to believe that when I say that I will not be misunderstood.

"My plan doesn't consist in the distribution of a few state rights pictures—I could have cashed in on the exhibitor's confidence in me in good, round figures this last summer on state rights' pictures if I had cared to do so. But I had a broader thing in view in that, a thing which has now taken very definite form in the company to which I have given my name. And the name is there because I want the exhibitors to realize that this is something in which all that I have and all that I know and believe about the motion picture business is staked. It is all W. W. Hodkinson, and the things he has stood for and fought for for ten years."

Mr. Hodkinson began has career in the motion picture business in 1907, when he bought a theatre in Ogden, Utah, and made it a place where better class patrons would feel comfortable. Shortly afterwards he entered the enchange end—in the free-and-easy ways of the exchange methods of those days—in an effort to get a better choice of pictures for his theatres. He went through some lively times during the next five years, ending, at last, in charge of the Utah and California territories for the General Film Company. He first gave a chance to the development of high-class houses by controlling the distribution of films so that theatres side by side were not showing the same pictures at the same time, and a premium was at last placed on exclusive showings and better pictures.

Success at Very First

His solution of the distribution problems of his own exchanges was not being followed in other parts of the country, although even at that time Mr. Hodkinson had drawn up, for the General Film Company, a statement of conditions as he, almost alone, saw them, and a definite plan for their solution nationally. This plan was rejected by the forces then controlling the film trade of the country, and it was these same principles and largely this same plan which he applied in achieving the tremendous success which he succeeded in bringing to his first national organization.

The first long features had already appeared, and the first principle of development which Mr. Hodkinson worked on was a belief that the ultimate possibilities of the film business lay not in a vast increase in the number of five-cent houses, as was then generally believed, but in the production and distribution of quality pictures for a public already tired of second and third-rate productions.

When the first long features were brought to this country, and later manufactured here, he was one of the few men who saw them as anything different from five reels of miscellaneous subjects. One of the landmarks of the business in this country, if not in the world was his showing, in 1913, at the Cort Theatre, a "legitimate" house of San Francisco, the film of "Les Miserables" as a full evening's entertainment at an admission of 50 cents. The run was for but one week, but the success was unqualified, and from the date of that daring innovation the history of the exhibiting business as it is organized today must be counted.

The American feature producers, Famous Players and Lasky, were then working, and it was when Mr. Hodkinson and other owners of the state rights of their pictures came to New York in 1914 to discuss new contracts that the Paramount Pictures Corporation was organized with Mr. Hodkinson, who had called the meeting, as the first president.

No Hit-or-Miss Plan

The two years that followed saw the development of this phase of the business to maturity, and also marked the recognition for the first time, of the exhibitor as a really vital factor in the trade. The principles which Mr. Hodkinson had advocated in the West, with only the hit-or-miss productions of the old companies to work with, were then applied nationally through Paramount. Better pictures, better theatres, higher admissions, longer runs, were drilled into the business with all the strength of the new organization, and of its understanding of conditions and the future.

Mr. Hodkinson was eliminated from Paramount when that great distributing organization was taken over by the producers, in the summer of 1916. During the first months following this change in the face of the business, Mr. Hodkinson was approached by a number of companies which were already feeling the pinch of their new difficulties. The Triangle Distributing Corporation was formed in the winter of the same year, with Mr. Hodkinson president, and Raymond Pawley, who had been eliminated from Paramount with him, as treasurer. The lively three months which followed ended in the sale of their holdings and the resignation of both as the result of the same tendency toward union of producers and distributors which has been the outstanding development of the business during the year now closing.

New England Merger Excludes Exchange Men

Massachusetts Exhibitors Join New England Picture Theatres and New Title Is Chosen—Boston Meeting Is Spirited and Lengthy

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts and the New England Picture Theatre Association, meeting in joint convention at the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston on Tuesday of last week, voted to merge. The combine was brought about only after members of the New England association were assured that the merger would exclude hundreds of exchange men. In barring the latter even from an associate membership in the new association, the Boston convention is believed to have blazed the way for permanent exclusion of the exchange men in exhibitors' associations.

The name chosen by the members for the new organization is Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and the association will be purely one for exhibitors.

The meeting, which will undoubtedly go down in history of the industry, was an executive session that lasted from morning until late in the afternoon. More than 300 representative exhibitors from all parts of New England attended the star chamber conference and the battle on the merger was waged for hours.

Another feature of the business meeting was the discussion and final decision on the new revenue tax question. It was voted after an hour's fight to shift this tax to the shoulders of the theatre patrons, as various exhibitors declared that other taxes on films would have to be met by the exhibitor.

William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., special guest at the banquet, took occasion during his speech to rap the attitude of the convention for eliminating the film men from their organization.

"It is the patriotic duty of every man and woman in the industry to get together until the war is over at least," he declared. "We should make good. This method of individual associations going off into a different corner and holding their star chamber proceedings is weak minded. Producers, manufacturers and exhibitors should stop these quibbling actions and all come together for the good of the industry.

"The motion picture industry has the greatest possibilities of any industry in the world. We are mere babies, just crawling, and cannot realize the great possibilities of working this huge gold mine. Up to a year ago the motion picture industry was beaten around from pillar to post by every conniving politician in the country.

"We were looked on a few short years ago as smut providers and panderers. But to-day the greatest President of our time has declared over his signature that he believes that the motion picture industry is the greatest publicity medium of the times.

"In the past few months censorship has nearly vanished in most sections of the country. Chicago has the most disreputable censor in the country. All he needs now is a little David with a pebble and we will see the greatest Goliath of modern history go down and out with a wallop on the head.

"Honest men and women in this industry should not lose another day in getting together. We all call ourselves patriots—now it is up to us to prove to the world that we are. We have been honored by a call from our President and it is the duty of every man and woman in the industry to stand together, at least until after the war. If we do this we need never again fear censorship, because we will prove we wish to be decent.

"A few weeks ago when a representative delegation of your members called on the President, God bless him, he called them into conference at the White House to see what could be done to properly put before the Russian people the true facts of America's entrance into the war. The moving picture men then told him that the motion picture would tell the exact story of the work going on at every cantonment, naval training station and even depict the American troops on French soil.

"This is not a cock and bull story, it is a reality, and I urge you to take this national situation seriously. We have here with us the very man that your associates have picked to do this great work in Russia, and I am going to rob the presiding officer of this gathering of the honor of introducing to you Walter Irwin, our representative to Russia."

Mr. Irwin tactfully avoided even a brief mention of his mission to Russia but urged everyone to stand solidly united, declaring that this is no time for wrangling or jealousy. "The motion picture has already played an important part in the furtherance of democracy and I hope that it will soon be the means of ending this terrible slaughter on the other side," he declared.

Lee A. Ochs, national president of the M. P. E. L. of A., declared that the price of the motion picture show was far too low, and urged the members to get together and demand their price. "At the present you are selling a $2.00 production to the public for 25 cents," he declared. "You must either boost your prices or you will be forced to get out of the business within a few years."

Mayor James M. Curley of Boston was on hand to welcome the association to Boston and impress on them that the city of Boston would guarantee them a regular time at the National Convention in 1918. "It will be an extreme pleasure, I assure you, for the city of Boston to spend $3,000 to entertain members of the motion picture industry," he declared.

Other speakers were Granville S. McFarland, Stephen W. Bush and E. H. Horstmann.

Garner Appointed Canadian Manager of K-E-S-E

Announcement was made last week that Charles A. Garner, formerly Mutual manager in Toronto, has been appointed Canadian general manager of the K-E-S-E organization. It is said that General Manager Garner expects to have six branches of the K-E-S-E in operation in Canada before February of next year. This will likely include offices in St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

Board of Review to Examine All News Pictures

The Committee on Public Information has asked the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures of New York City, owing to the difficulties encountered in examining all films of news character in Washington, before their distribution and release, to examine such films in New York in an advisory capacity. This is said to mean that the National Board of Review, in looking at films, will be expected to call to the attention of the Committee on Public Information any scenes in films which might give information to the enemy and be harmful to the military activity of the United States. The committee of the National Board of Review already see more than 99 per cent. of the photoplays exhibited in America before they are released. Prints of all pictures are early brought to New York because of the important place it occupies in the film industry, nearly all of the big companies having their executive offices here.

Booking Records Boosted by National Army Film

"Who Leads the National Army?", the one-reel military training picture being distributed by the Triangle Distributing Corporation, showing how the drafted men are trained by efficient officers, is said to be breaking booking records for one-reelers.

The reason assigned by Triangle is the timeliness of the picture, the patriotism of the exhibitors in booking it and the bonus offered by Nat Stronge, who is handling the picture for the Military Training Camps Association, to members of the Triangle Distributing organization. It is said that as a result of the bonus offer every Triangle salesman throughout the country is working for the extra money.

In an announcement last week Nat Stronge declared that of the sixteen motion picture theatres in Utica, N. Y., each had booked "Who Leads the National Army?".

Maryland Exhibitors Hold Meeting in Baltimore

Members of the Maryland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held a state-wide convention at the New theatre, Baltimore, beginning Sunday, October 28. Various features affecting the motion picture industry of the state were taken up and discussed, particularly the phases of state legislation which are felt to be adverse to the exhibitors of Maryland.

Detroit Prepares for Convention Next July

Detroit committees have already started work on arrangements for the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association which will be held in Detroit July 3 to 6. It has been definitely decided that there will be no exposition, inasmuch as there will be so much business to take up. An elaborate entertainment program, however, is planned.

George Wilbur is president, and King Perry, secretary, of the Detroit branch of the A. E. A., and both are members of the committee on arrangements.

New Orleans Exhibitors Plan Merger for Renting Films

Success of First National Exhibitors' Circuit Induces Southerners to Try Plan on a Smaller Scale—Will Establish Agency—Thirty Exhibitors Aligned—Exchanges Alarmed

NEW ORLEANS exhibitors, if a new plan of theirs goes through, are going to place themselves in a position where the "czarism of the exchanges will be given the Siberia treatment."

Preliminary details of the plan are leaking through. The exhibitors have met, planned and are prepared to take swift steps. The result will be, they hope, a squarer deal for the individual exhibitor and better service all around.

First National the Model

The plan had its inception with the first National Exhibitors' Circuit, of which E. V. Richards, Jr., managing director of the Saenger Amusement Company, is the representative in this territory.

Briefly, the plan is to arrange for all film rentals through a central agency of which Mr. Richards is said to be the official head. The exhibitors who have entered into the agreement will not rent their film service from the various exchanges direct. Instead they will be served through the agency which contracts for film rentals in their interest and supplies them with the service.

There are probably sixty exhibitors in Louisiana and Mississippi who have already affiliated themselves with the movement and it is expected that others will be added to the lists.

Advantage Expected

It is expected that the arrangement will afford advantages that could not be secured by any exhibitor who might be acting independently and that one of these advantages would be a marked decrease in rental prices, ultimately. Some of the most prominent exhibitors in this section have been identified with the movement, among them being E. M. Clark, who is the official head of the exhibitors' organization in Mississippi and generally accredited with being a farsighted and progressive exhibitor. Over thirty of the Mississippi exhibitors have aligned themselves with Mr. Clark in the new arrangement.

Naturally there has been considerable opposition to the plan by the local exchange managers but they have been unable to devise any means whereby any effective method of preventing the consummation of the plans of the exhibitors might be employed. The exchange managers contend that it means the eventual dictation of prices by the head of this organization and also the arbitrary cancellation of service at will.

Exchanges "Het Up"

What causes the local managers more concern than the actual formation of the alleged combination, is the air of secrecy with which all of the steps in the matter so far have been taken. It is openly charged that the idea is nothing more nor less than a desire to dominate the situation without reference to the permanent benefits which may accrue to the individual exhibitor, but the projectors, in a guarded manner intimate that the movement is entirely altruistic.

Already one of the leading exchange managers has accepted the offers made for service and it is understood that contracts are being signed.

Other leading managers are either on the defensive or preparing for the offensive, boldly asserting that any way they fix it, the movement means lower rentals.

Northern Gobblers Have South Up in Arms

One of the announcements that has set the Southern exhibitors "by the ears," as the saying goes, is that New York capitalists have formed a syndicate for the purpose of leasing, building and operating a chain of motion picture theatres in New Orleans and other advantageous cities in the contiguous territory. The details of the arrangement were worked out in New York and were at once put under way. Mrs. Anna H. Sessions, manager of the New Orleans exchange for the World Film Corporation, has just returned from a trip to New York with the commission to secure leases and options on suitable theatres and sites in this and other cities.

Modestly Reticent

Mrs. Sessions is modestly reticent concerning the plans but she at once set about to carry out instructions upon her arrival home. She is an aggressive woman and has a wide knowledge of film conditions in this territory. She doubtless laid before the New York promoters the details of important changes that appear to be inevitable in this section but which have not yet become public property so far as publicity is concerned.

It is certain that the entrance of such a syndicate in this field at present would upset the plans that have already been laid out by other interests for the ultimate control of the most profitable part of the field. With such a syndicate operating there is a very strong probability that film rentals would not suffer any considerable slump and that none of the established services would go begging for places on desirable programs.

Mrs. Sessions is expected to return to New York within a month with sufficient tangible material in her possession to warrant immediate inauguration of the next step in the plans.

Paralta Reaches Decision Upon Distribution

Full Details Not Announced, But Plan That Works for Best Interests of Exhibitor Seems Assured—Features of High Grade

THE interrogation point that has been hanging over the Paralta organization since the announcement in September that changes had been made in the matter of choice of medium for the distribution of its pictures, seems to be preparing to spread its wings and fly away, according to developments of the past week.

In a conservative announcement last week, Paralta made known the fact that it has come to a decision upon the matter of distribution, and that the decision is accented by the appearance of advertising in current issues of the trade papers. However, no other information is available further than that a definite plan has been established. It is expected that full details will be forthcoming within a few days.

Since September the question of Paralta distribution has been a subject of spirited conjecture within the industry, without any hint gaining currency as to what the company's intentions were. It seems assured, however, that no matter what the form of distribution, it will work for the best interest of exhibitors.

Paralta, since it began making productions in June, has expended great sums in order to bring its producing staffs, companies and studios up to such a high state of efficiency that a picture of the better type could always be assured.

When the channel of distribution first contemplated was not followed, Paralta is said to have felt that in J. Warren Kerrigan's "A Man's Man" and Bessie Barriscale's "Madam Who," it had established a high standard and had proved it could make really great pictures; and, therefore, could afford to wait and bide its time to attain such a medium of distribution as would assure to every exhibitor a means of procuring its productions on the fairest and most equitable terms.

With the constant making of productions of substantially standardized merit, in connection with efficient, permanent and equitable distribution, the officers of Paralta declare they feel that they will have very largely answered one of the great problems of the motion picture industry.

Paralta now has five star feature productions ready for release and several others are said to be in rapid production.

Cinema Exhibitors of Bronx Stage Fifth Ball

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association, Bronx Local No. 2 of the M. P. E. L. of A., has completed all arrangements for its fifth annual movie entertainment and ball to be given at Hunts Point Palace on the evening of November 5, it was announced last week by Henry Cole, chairman of the Ball Committee. Mr. Cole, in his announcement, said the All-Star Photoplayers Grand March will be led by Earle Williams and Leah Baird.

It is expected that a large assemblage of well-known players will shake a nimble hoof at the ball, and that a good entertainment will be provided.

Total to date..... $301.76

A SPLENDID patriotic opportunity is given to every American exhibitor to be of some use to our soldiers in France. They want "smokes" more than anything you can send them. Motion Picture News, which is the official organ of the campaign, urges all exhibitors to place receptacles in their lobbies, for the collection of coins and packages of cigarettes.

No cigarettes can be accepted except in original packages and on which the revenue stamp has not been broken. This is an order from the Government.

How to Go About It

1. Send to Motion Picture News for a card, inviting your patrons to drop pennies and packages of cigarettes into the bowl or box provided.

2. Arrange with the commissary department of your nearest cantonment for distributing (unbroken) packages of cigarettes. In case you have superfluous packages send them directly to Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.

3. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check sent weekly to Motion Picture News. For every 25 cents you collect, you will receive a postal of thanks direct from the trenches. For example: If you contribute $10, you will receive 40 postcards of thanks direct from the trenches in France. These should be displayed in your lobby, photographed for slides or sent out to your mailing list.

Picture Stability Evidenced by Conditions

Adolph Zukor Discusses Foundation of Industry and Compares Methods of Production—Says Experimental Stage Has Passed

DECLARING that the experimental stage in the production of motion pictures has passed, and that today the industry stands upon a sure foundation, able to face and overcome all obstacles, Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, discussed last week the status of the industry and of his own organization under the existing unprecedented conditions.

"The best evidence that the stage of experiment in motion picture production is a thing of yesterday," said Zukor, "is that under the present conditions of stress and strain, it is strong enough to overcome all obstacles and face the future, whatever it may bring, without fear and with a certainty that whatever may come, the film industry will hold its own.

"Virtually," he continued, "the time when it was necessary to experiment in the matter of players has passed. There was a time, not so long ago, when we were all 'trying out' untried material from the ranks of the legitimate. Many of these try-outs were failures, many have proved successful and the result is that the screen today has a recognized roster of stars who are certain of their appeal and who have as powerful a following and are as capable and artistic as ever the stars of the legitimate stage could have been.

"The same applies to those who write for the screen, and while, as in the case of the actors, there are continual additions to the ranks, there is no longer a necessity to experiment. Real screen literature has been developed and great authors are turning daily to this medium of expression.

"The public is becoming daily more discriminating in the matter of motion pictures and therefore the producer can never stand still. Stagnation means decay. Progress means perpetual vigilance and continual effort to improve. That is what we are striving for and the results seem to indicate beyond the peradventure of a doubt that we are succeeding."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Rothacker to Print the Chaplin Releases

One of the most important contracts in motion picture printing and developing has been signed and entered into between the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of New York and the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, it was announced this week.

By virtue of this document, the million-dollar Charlie Chaplin pictures, and other releases controlled by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, will be made by the home of "Perfect Developing and Printing" at Chicago and shipped from that point to all parts of the world.

The contract was awarded the Rothacker Company after careful analysis of the situation made by J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and a committee of First National Exhibitors' Circuit members composed of Aaron Jones, Chicago; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis, and H. Schwalbe, Philadelphia, and was signed by S. L. Rothapfel and H. Schwalbe as president and secretary of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and Watterson R. Rothacker and H. J. Aldous as president and secretary of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

Details of this transaction are expected to be announced shortly.

Canadian Inspector on Trail of Elusive Films

Otto Elliott, chief moving picture inspector for Ontario, is kept on the job lately looking for films that are being shown without first being censored by the Ontario Censor Board. It is claimed that on account of the close proximity of Ottawa to Montreal, some exchanges in the latter place have been sending in films that have not been censored in Ontario. It is said a similar print had been censored and the exchanges evidently thought it worth while to take a chance. However, several current releases have been seized in Ottawa because there was no censors' tag of approval in the reel box. During the past week it is said that thirty-two uncensored reels were also seized in Toronto.

It appears likely that Provincial Treasurer McGarry will fine the companies to which the films belong for the alleged sending out of uncensored films, and, if the practice continues, Mr. McGarry declares there will be more severe punishment.

Car Strike Hurts Theatres in Chattanooga

With the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., in the grip of a street car strike, business has been considerably handicapped and motion picture theatres have suffered a very noticeable decrease in patronage, according to reports from that city last week. The strike, which began early in September, was thought to have been settled a few days ago when the strikers returned to work, but was resumed again.

Information from the Chattanooga office of the Signal Amusement Company, which organization operated a string of theatres, was that business picked up considerably the day the cars resumed operation.

Rothapfel Retained as Pre-Production Counsel

Frederick L. Collins of Superpictures Distributing Corporation Conceives Plan to Minimize Production Risks — Exhibitor Viewpoint Wanted

IT was announced last week through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., that S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto, has been retained by Frederick L. Collins, of Superpictures Distributing Corporation, as pre-production counsel. The announcement is said to bear striking significance when consideration is given the possible effects of such an arrangement.

Mr. Collins' idea in seeking the co-operation of the widely known exhibitor is said to be to get the exhibitor viewpoint, which is the public viewpoint crystallized, on scenario and production while the latter is in the making. The effect hoped for is the selection of scenarios with more popular appeal and the elimination of mistakes which are constantly apparent to the trained exhibitor.

Speaking of his engagement, which will in no way conflict with his duties as manager of the Rialto, Mr. Rothapfel said: "Since my connection with the industry the vital necessity of more judicous selection of scenarios has impressed itself on me with constantly increasing force. If producers could be present in the Rialto projection room during the hours I and my staff spend in eliminating proffered subjects, they would be astounded to see how much good money is thrown away on pictures which haven't a hope of achieving more than a modicum of success. Of course, my duties will be purely advisory—I can give only a limited amount of time to them. Aside from the pleasure I shall derive from the work, Mr. Collins' offer was so generous as to tempt anyone. In judging scenarios I shall have the aid of the board of directors and officers of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which is to handle the releases of the Petrova Picture Company."

Mr. Rothapfel will join in on Madame Petrova's second release and accompany it from selection of scenario to its presentation on the Rialto screen.

Brulatour Names Advisers for Pictures Abroad

Will Be Duty of Advisory Board to Assist in Selection of Films Sent for Showing to Soldiers—Shipments Coming In

THE personnel of the advisory board, comprising officials of representative companies within the ranks of the American motion picture industry who have volunteered to assist in the selection of American films which are to be sent to Russia, France and Italy for presentation to soldiers and the populace, was announced last week by J. E. Brulatour, of Eastman Films and treasurer of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Mr. Brulatour was recently selected as chairman of the American Cinema Commission, with headquarters in the United States.

Chairman Brulatour last week established offices at 235 West Twenty-third street, and within a few hours after the headquarters were opened film shipments began to arrive from some of the producing companies. In the next few weeks it is expected that the Advisory Board and the commissioners will have several hundred thousand feet of film offered for examination and approval.

As previously announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph V. L. S. E., is the commissioner to Russia; P. A. Powers, treasurer Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is the French commissioner, and Frank J. Marion, president of the Kalem Company, is the commissioner to Italy.

A. A. Kaufman, George Mooser and John Tuerk have been selected by Commissioner Brulatour as his staff assistants with offices at the headquarters of the Commission.

Fairbanks to Make Ten Pictures Next Year

John Fairbanks, business manager of his athletic brother's Artcraft company, while discussing official plans for next year, said last week: "We hope to make ten productions next year. With two directors on the payroll, namely Allen Dwan and John Emerson, it will be a simple matter for each one to make five good pictures in twelve months, which allows Douglas a week's vacation between stories. Each director has a staff of assistants who look after the technical side of the production, while Dwan or Emerson concentrates on the story.

"Keene Thompson will collaborate with Dwan on scenarios, while Anita Loos continues with John Emerson, and, of course, Douglas will act in a supervisory capacity.

"We are gradually corraling several excellent scenarios to be developed along the lines of the Fairbanks school by our staff writers. Ruth Allen is scenario editor and is in a position to render immediate decisions on submitted manuscripts."

Wilson Not Reappointed on Ohio Censor Board

Through an error, it was announced recently that William R. Wilson had been reappointed by Governor Cox as a member of the Ohio Board of Censors. Mr. Wilson's term, it becomes known, expired a few weeks ago, and, because of the death of a member of the Industrial Commission of Ohio, the new appointee has not been named.

Stars of Industry Garner Millions in Nation's New Liberty Loan Drive

FIFTEEN million dollars is estimated to be the sum total raised for the Liberty Loan by Marguerite Clark, star in Paramount pictures, during her brief stay in Cincinnati last week, it was announced by Famous Players-Lasky.

Miss Clark went to Cincinnati on Tuesday of last week, at the invitation of Mayor Puchta and the Chamber of Commerce, determined to make her record in the sale of bonds. On her arrival she found awaiting her a band, a squadron of police, a company of Home Guards, twenty-five autos and about 5,000 spectators. She was escorted to Fountain Square, where a Liberty Loan booth had been erected, and, mounting the platform, the diminutive star said: "My gracious! I can't make a talk but I am so glad to be here with you. And I want every one to buy a Liberty Bond which our blessed nation is selling."

The bids came quick and fast and several hundred thousand dollars were raised in a very few minutes. Then she was escorted to the Chamber of Commerce, where she sold more bonds at offices set apart for her use and with her name painted on the door. This little courtesy was the work of the Chamber of Commerce. Later, at the reception in the ball room of the Hotel Sinton, she disposed of still more bonds and went again to Fountain Square to pick up additional buyers. Hotel lobbies, meetings, receptions, anywhere in fact that people had gathered were hunting grounds for Miss Clark, and she had secured $920,000 by the time that a big luncheon meeting of the various Liberty Loan committees was held at the Gibson Hotel.

En route to New York the following wire was received by Miss Clark from J. Maurice Ridge, of the Famous Players Exchange in Cincinnati: "Gibson Hotel meeting where Miss Clark appeared last raised $14,000,000 which goes to her credit."

Theda Bara Sells Liberty Bonds to William Fox

William Fox was one of the buyers of Liberty Loan bonds when his star, Theda Bara, made her first and only appearance under the auspices of the Stage Women's War Relief at their booth in front of the New York public library on Friday afternoon of last week. At this booth it is estimated that more than $300,000 worth of bonds were sold by the vampire star.

The usual Fifth avenue throng gathered in front of the booth, and sent up a lusty cheer when Mr. Fox assented to take $50,000 in bonds. He was the first buyer, and was followed by Miss Bara's attorney, who took $28,000 worth. J. Gordon Edwards, Fox director, chipped in with $5,000 and Miss Bara herself stored in a supply worth $13,000. Within a few minutes over $120,000 had been sold by Miss Bara.

A new trend in bond selling was introduced by Miss Bara, when she induced a French sailor who stood in front of the booth to permit her to auction his cap, the sum realized to go into Liberty bonds. The cap brought $1,000, and an American sailor then followed the Frenchman's example.

Mabel Normand Makes Whirlwind Speaking Tour

Mabel Normand, the Goldwyn comedienne star, made a whirlwind speaking tour in eight New York theatres on the night of October 22 in behalf of the Liberty Loan, thus polling her aid with that of other screen stars to help Uncle Sam in his hour of need.

Beginning at 8:30 in the evening at Marcus Loew's American theatre, Miss Normand made a two-minute talk first to an audience on the roof-top theatre and a few moments later met the audience in the main ground floor theatre. Thereafter, she averaged one theatre every fifteen minutes.

Pearl White Invests in Liberty Bonds

Pearl White, the Pathe star, made the rounds of some fifteen New York motion picture theatres the night of October 25, and made addresses for the Liberty Loan campaign. Miss White told her audiences that she had invested $25,000 in the second issue of the bonds.

Drews Sell Large Number of Liberty Bonds

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, producers of the Metro-Drew comedies, sold $54,000 worth of the second Liberty Loan bonds at the booth in a New York department store on a recent afternoon, it was announced by Metro last week.

National Association Offers Prize for Poster

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry announced last week that it will offer a prize of $100 in gold for the best poster design to be used in advertising the motion picture exposition to be held in Grand Central Palace from February 2 to 10, next year. The Association has invited all artists and designers to participate in the contest, the judges for which are located on the eighth floor of the Times Building.

Liberty Loan Looms in Universal Current Events

Among the nine subjects announced for presentation in Universal Current Events No. 25, scheduled for release November 3, the Liberty Loan drive looms up as one of the features. This tinge of patriotic timeliness is expected to show the demonstration that brought to a close the second bond flotation, including the Caproni airplane over the Metropolitan Tower, the British tank rumblng down Fifth avenue, and the captured German U-boat in Central Park.

Other subjects are "Fighting the High Cost of Gasoline," "Victory on Gridiron Marks Opening of Football Season," "West Coast Honors Gerard," "Sousa's Naval Band," "Spectacular Fire in St. Louis," "United States Honored by France," "Food Control" and the cartoons.

Pauline Frederick Sells Bonds at Fast Pace

Pauline Frederick, Paramount star, according to an announcement made this week by Famous Players-Lasky, disposed of Liberty Loan bonds approximating $20,000 in about thirty-five minutes on Tuesday of last week in a New York department store.

Miss Frederick preceded her bond-selling program with a brief address to the people who had gathered.

Jaxon Film Takes Slice of Liberty Loan

The Jaxon Film Corporation, which produces Sparkle comedies, Jaxon comedies, and which is making a forthcoming patriotic serial, "A Daughter of the U. S. A.", all released through General Film, has subscribed for $300,000 of the bonds offered for the Liberty Loan, it was announced this week. At a meeting attended by President Frank A. Tichenor and other members of the Board of Directors, Frederick S. Peck, financial chairman of the company, conducted the purchase of the bonds.

This is said to be one of the largest bond subscriptions recorded among motion picture producers.

Animal Red Cross Also Doing Its Bit

Although not much heard of in motion picture circles, it has been disclosed that the American Red Star Animal Relief is doing for the horses of the army what the Red Cross is doing for the soldiers. Thus far it is estimated that a million and a half horses have been sent to the battlefield.

The strangeness in this connection is that some enterprising motion picture company has not snapped up the chance to get the pictures, as it cannot be denied this is a novelty that should be of great interest to the American public.

Soldiers at Camp Upton to See "Baseball Revue"

Marty McHale, president of the Atlantic Film Company, and producer of the "Baseball Revue of 1917" which was shown for revue recently, announces that he has made arrangements to show the picture at Yaphank, New Jersey, to the soldiers at Camp Upton. The picture is in five reels. It will be shown Thursday. Mr. McHale has received an offer from Washington to take the position of physical director at the Long Island cantonment. The position will carry with it the commission of lieutenant.

Tom Moore Does Full Share in Liberty Loan

Tom Moore, of Washington, president of the Moore Motion Picture Enterprises and the chain of Moore theatres, pledged himself to the Liberty Loan campaign for two weeks, retaining but one hour a day for personal affairs. He himself took $50,000 in bonds, and Mrs. Moore subscribed a similar amount.

"FINGER OF JUSTICE" AROUSES INTEREST

"THE FINGER OF JUSTICE," the new picture founded upon the highly successful vice crusade carried on by the Rev. Paul Smith in San Francisco and produced by the Paul Smith Pictures Company, has aroused great interest in the city at the Golden Gate and it is certain that the run at the Savoy theatre, opening October 29, will be a memorable one.

THERE was some opposition at first on the part of people who were put out of business by the big clean-up. Mr. Smith and some of his associates received letters of very threatening character, demanding that the work be suspended, but the film-making went right along without hesitation or interruption, and when it became known gradually that types and conditions were being portrayed without the use of the names of men, women and resorts at whom and to which the Smith campaign was directed, the hostility died away.

AT the filming of the famous "What are you going to do with us?" raid of the 300 underworld women on the Rev. Mr. Smith's church, some of the women who had participated in the original raid appeared in the motion picture scenes. "I feel sure that I recognized the faces of a number of these women," said Mr. Smith to a representative of Motion Picture News. And others stated that numerous women who had been forced out of the underworld life were in the volunteer audience before the cameras. The raid scenes were filmed in the California Street Methodist Church, one of the largest and finest in San Francisco, and not in the smaller church, where the original demonstration took place.

JANE O'ROARK was the vampire queen of these women in the raid picture. A talented and beautiful young actress, with much stage experience, she is making her film debut in this production.

ON Saturday, October 13, 142 scenes were filmed at the church in San Francisco, these including the raid, the preaching of the fighting minister's great reform sermon, with the regular congregation in attendance, and various episodes of the work of the church people for the good of the city and in behalf of the unfortunate women. The previous record is said to have been eighty-one scenes in a single day, and Director Chaudet has reason to feel proud of the work, which began early in the forenoon and continued until late into the night.

Many well known clergymen and other church leaders appear in some of the episodes of the new picture.

MISS GRACE MARBURY SANDERSON, who wrote "The Finger of Justice," has just completed the scenario of "More Deadly Than Battle," the second picture in the Paul Smith series and containing an expose of the work of the bootleggers who bring danger into the camps of the soldiers.

RAISE IN PRICES SUCCESSFUL, SAYS LURIE

"OUR raise of prices has been very successful," said Louis R. Lurie, partner of Howard J. Sheehan at the Rialto theatre, one of the largest and finest downtown playhouses in San Francisco. He beamed with satisfaction as he told a "Motion Picture News" representative the story.

"UP to two months ago," continued Mr. Lurie, "our prices were ten, twenty and thirty cents. Then we made a five-cent advance, to fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five cents, with not the slightest evidence of dissatisfaction resulting. On the contrary, our patrons seemed to realize that costs in the film industry had gone up, along with everything else, and they were ready and perfectly willing to pay the additional charge. At these prices we are showing films for which the New York houses charge as high as a dollar, with the minimum at twenty-five cents. When we increased our rates, the management of the Rialto made special effort to ascertain the sentiments of our patrons in regard to the plan, watching the box-office closely and keeping account of all that was said, and we feel that the public is quite as well satisfied with the change as we are.

"AS it is, our prices are very low, with such productions as 'The Honor System,' 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' 'The Conqueror,' 'Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp' and Theda Bara in 'Camille' on the list. We are showing two big features every week. Our next program, for instance, will consist of 'Conscience,' with Gladys Brockwell, C. Post Mason's 'London,' the Hearst-Pathe News Weekly, an O. Henry story and organ selections. We could well charge more than we do, but with the theatre constantly thronged we are satisfied with the prices as they now stand."

THE new California theatre will charge fifty cents for box seats, of which it will have 250, all reserved. There will be 268 loge chairs at thirty-five cents. It is believed that this theatre, although having a total seating capacity of 2,800, will find it expedient to increase the number of its high-priced seats.

CALIFORNIA EXHIBITORS HOLD MEETING

THE Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Industry of Northern California held a meeting at the Palace Hotel on October 10 and discussed the war tax, which is hitting the small independent exhibitors quite as hard as they are able to stand, according to the statements made. No action was reached.

In this organization, Jack Partington, of the Imperial, succeeds E. B. Johnson on the Board of Directors, and M. J. Cohen, of the George Kleine System, succeeds W. D. Edmunds as member of the Executive Board. Other officers are: President, L. Reichert, Metro; vice-president, Eugene H. Roth, Portola and California theatres; treasurer, M. L. Markowitz, California Exchange; secretary, Norman A. Eisnar; directors, Howard J. Sheehan, Rialto theatre, and Herman Wobber, Progressive Exchange.

PUBLIC BOOSTS SALARIES OF SCREEN STARS

PRESIDENT HIRAM ABRAMS of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and General Manager B. F. Schulberg of the same company were among the notables of the screen and stage who recently visited Denver. Mr. Schulberg predicts higher salaries in the future for screen stars and says there is a real scarcity so far as male stars is concerned, with nothing in sight to relieve the situation.

"In all probability," said Mr. Schulberg, "salaries for screen stars will never be less than they are right now and I personally believe they will be much higher. It is the people themselves, you know, who really make the stars. Their verdict in all cases means the advancement of the screen actor or actress whose sole ambition is to reach the top of the ladder.

"Another condition which is of great importance is the great scarcity of male stars. Only a few are in the business now compared with the number of women stars. No relief is in sight.

"Still another thing that is also of vast importance is this," continued Mr. Schulberg, "we have now reached the point when the story itself must be good, no difference who the star is. The value of a story simply cannot be discounted."

Mr. Abrams and Mr. Schulberg both report a splendid business and are both optimists with a big O. They are looking forward to a good measure of prosperity in all departments of the business this fall and winter.

WILL RAISE PRICES IN PORTLAND

THE admission price situation, as it is to be affected by ticket tax, film tax, and perhaps higher film rental, is engrossing the attention of the exhibitors of Oregon. In Portland several of the biggest exhibitors are advocating an increase to 20 cents, from the fifteen-cent fee of to-day, planning to use the extra nickel in paying the two-cent admission tax, and the remaining three cents to cover increased expense of operation, including labor.

OTHERS believe that fifteen cents is the maximum figure for the average photoplay attraction in Portland, and that a step higher means a probable weaning away of the masses from its cheap form of entertainment.

If the admission tax is to be paid by the public in the shape of a direct tax of two cents on each 15-cent ticket, it may be announced that Portland's downtown theatres will not attempt another price increase this winter. If the tax can be paid by the exhibitor, he undoubtedly will increase the admission fee to 20 cents, thus making a greater net on the individual sale, even though temporarily the volume of business is decreased.

RICHMOND DISTRICT TO HAVE $200,000 THEATRE

THE Clement Theatre and Realty Corporation, with a capital stock of $200,000, has been incoroprated in San Francisco for the purpose of building a high-class film house in the Richmond District, the western part of the city. The site is on the south side of Clement street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues, with the dimensions 78 by 150 feet. A Class A theatre, to compare with the finest in the city, will be erected immediately. The corporation is composed of a large number of stockholders, the property owners, merchants and residents of the district, who have organized for the purpose of having a first-class theatre and the best film attractions in their own neighborhood, which is several miles from the big theatres on Market street.

WOMEN'S CLUB ENDORSED FOX SUBJECT

THE officers of the Women's Club of Berkeley, California, have written Manager Fred Moore of the U. of C. theatre at Berkeley personally thanking him for showing "Jack and the Beanstalk," the Fox Standard picture, at his theatre. The house has a seating capacity of twelve hundred on the ground floor, and according to Mr. Moore records were broken for the house during the showing of this Fox Standard picture. The opening day of the picture was the biggest in the history of the theatre, and this was topped the next day. On the first Monday of the two weeks' showing Mr. Moore stated he could close his house the remander of the week and still have a good profit for the time after paying all his usual expenses. The school authorities were quick to see the good qualities of "Jack and the Beanstalk" and one school was dismissed early on one day that children could attend.

WASHINGTON COMPANY SELECTS STUDIO SITE

OFFICERS of the Washington Motion Picture Company, recently organized in Spokane for the production of state rights pictures starring Tyrone Power, have selected a site for their studio in Minnehaha, a park suburb of Spokane. A number of buildings used previous for amusement enterprises, will be used for the studio buildings. Work of making other changes is now going forward under the management of J. C. Ward. In addition the company will build a scenic studio, 60 by 100 feet in size, a portion of which will be used for an interior stage. Frank Montgomery, it is stated, is to direct the production of the first subject.

ANIMATED DEMAND FOR UNIVERSAL WEEKLY

THE Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events films are very popular with first run houses in San Francisco, five prints being necessary to supply the demand. These are shown at Imperial, Alhambra, Hippodrome, Wigwam and Strand theatres. In Oakland the Kinema, American, Franklin and Broadway theatres are using the reels regularly as first run in that territory. In the past two weeks the San Francisco Universal exchange has found the need of increasing its regular order four prints for each week.

PICTURE WILL SHOW MANUFACTURE OF PHOTOPLAYERS

THE AMERICAN PHOTOPLAYER COMPANY, with factories and main offices in San Francisco, will shortly have a motion picture of several thousand feet showing the manufacture of their instruments. This subject is being prepared under the supervision of Jack Levy, manager of the publicity department, and will show all details of the making, together with a very comprehensive demonstration of the operation, of the mechanism of the instruments, and may be used by sales forces in all parts of the country.

SHOWS APPARATUS FOR SENDING WIRELESS PICTURES

L. J. LEISHMAN, of Ogden, Utah, has invented an apparatus for taking and sending pictures by wireless. His genius came to the attention of Frank Newman, manager of a Salt Lake City theatre, who at once arranged for a public showing of the apparatus, together with an explanation by the inventor. The plan packed the theatre. Mr. Leishman has not been able to perfect his machine to the point of taking motion pictures by wireless.

Film Reports from Denver, Los Angeles and San Francisco

DENHAM, DENVER, MAY BE PICTURE THEATRE

MARTIN BECK, managing director of the Orpheum Circuit; President M. Meyerfield, Jr., of the Orpheum and Realty Company, and F. B. Henderson, manager of the Orpheum in San Francisco, were in Denver on company business recently. Their coming settled the much discussed question as to whether the Denham theatre would be converted into a picture house.

MR. BECK announced before his departure that in all probability the Denham will be turned into a 10-20-30 cent vaudeville house. Business will continue at the Orpheum as at present.

"THE theatrical business is good all over the country," said Mr. Beck, "on account of the widespread prosperity now ruling everywhere in all lines. Amusements are drawing well in Denver, as in every other American city. I believe it will continue for some time."

HEAVY SELECT BOOKINGS REPORTED FOR DENVER

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION reports heavy bookings of the new Select pictures and special features, which include Eva Tanguay in "The Wild Girl," Brenon's "Lone Wolf" and "Lest We Forget," the latter featuring Rita Jolivet.

HUGH RENNIE, manager of the Denver office, has closed a contract with the Empress theatre, at Colorado Springs, for first run Select productions, featuring Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady and Norma and Constance Talmadge.

MURRAY HAWKINS, former manager for the California Film Exchange, at Phoenix, Arizona, is now connected with the Denver branch of the Select Pictures Corporation, and not with Goldwyn, as reported when he left Phoenix about a month ago. He is now covering Nebraska and the Black Hills, which have recently been added to the territory of the Denver office.

THE managers of the Isis theatre, at Longmont, are making extensive improvements which call for additional capacity of fifty seats. The stage for vaudeville has been removed and the screen placed against the rear end wall. Box seats are also being added.

MANAGER CHARLES DECKER of the Majestic theatre has announced further particulars of the new building to be constructed on the present site of the Majestic early this winter. The new structure, he says, will probably be four stories high, with a ballroom on one of the floors. It will have a seating capacity of 1,400 and cost approximately $100,000. It will be the most expensive picture house on the Western Slope. The owners are W. H. Swanson and H. T. Nolan.

EDWARD ARMSTRONG, district manager of the Denver, Salt Lake and Butte offices of the Universal Film Exchange, has been appointed general manager of the Jewel Productions, Inc., for the intermountain territory. This new brand has created a very favorable impression and the first few releases, including "Pay Me," "Come Through," "Sirens of the Sea" and "A Man Without a Country," have been booked for first run showings at the new America, in Denver, the Rialto, in Butte, and Swanson's American theatre, in Salt Lake City.

JOHN W. DRUM, formerly of the World and Triangle sales forces, has been appointed local manager of the Denver office of Jewel Productions, Inc.

B. W. MORRIS is covering Deadwood and Lead, South Dakota, for the George Kleine System.

THE Orpheum, at Twin Falls, Idaho, reports a big run on Goldwyn's "Polly of the Circus." A telegram from there says that large crowds were turned away.

"THE MANXMAN" started a week on the 11th, at the Paris, in Colorado Springs.

A GOLDWYN conference was held last week in Salt Lake. Those in attendance were W. S. Rand of Denver, W. W. Armstrong, special representative for "The Manxman," and Rex Beach, James Gilmore, who covers Idaho and Utah, and Harry C. Arthur, salesman for Montana.

THE Isis theatre is spending about $4,500 in repairs, which will make that popular playhouse one of the most attractive in Denver. The new decorations include large plate glass panels inside and also in the lobby. The work will be finished within a few days.

T. AND D. HOUSE TO CELEBRATE FIRST ANNIVERSARY

THE new T. and D. theatre, at Oakland, will on November 22 celebrate its first anniversary. William H. Jobelmann, the Turner and Dahnken publicity "shooter," states that the program will exceed in importance that of the opening night, when Sessue Hayakawa, Myrtle Stedman, Anita King and Tsuru Aoki appeared in person. "Joby" expects, and admits it, to have Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin in real life on the stage at the November celebration.

Fred Dahnken, president of the big T. and D. Circuit, is soon to visit Los Angeles on business in regard to certain affiliations of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

E. C. Clover, formerly manager of the T. and D. Theatre De Luxe, San Jose, has assumed the management of the big new house in Oakland, taking the place of Frank Clark, who is now in New York.

THE Tivoli manager was recently ordered to report at police headquarters for delay in putting out the "S. R. O." sign, his negligence blocking traffic unnecessarily, according to the patrolman. This was during a performance of "The Lust of Ages."

NOTICE has been received by Maanger Cohen, of the George Kleine System that the War Department is sending out "Who Leads the National Army?" a film story of the boys in the camps, which the exchanges will issue to exhibitors without additional charge. The notice is in the form of a letter from H. C. Stebbins, adjutant general at Chicago, in charge of the training camps.

THE Kleine System has contracted with the Hawaiian Film Company to supply features for the islands. The Consolidated Amusement Company of Honolulu has booked "Gloria's Romance" for exhibition throughout Hawaii.

O. B. BATES, shipper at the Kleine Exchange for two years, was drafted last Friday, and started for Camp Lewis on less than twenty-four hours' notice. C. F. Foster has become assistant shipping clerk at this exchange.

MANAGER WILLIAM CITRON, of the Fox Exchange, reports a great boom in business. Contracts for Standard releases are coming in rapidly from all over the Western territory. One of the houses to take the Standard service during the past week was the American theatre, Oakland, of which C. W. Midgley is manager.

Turner and Dahnken have bought the California rights of "The Mormon Maid."

George M. Mann, general representative from the New York office of Triangle, has been in San Francisco. He is looking over all the Western branches.

C. H. Watson, formerly with the Vitagraph, at Seattle, has been appointed assistant manager of the Triangle office at San Francisco. Ralph Smith, booker, has become salesmen in the local territory.

M. A. Kruger, president of the Franklin Amusement Company, Oakland, has returned home after a tour of the South.

BILLY QUANN, assistant manager at the Tivoli, has gone to Sacramento to assist Manager Nafey in the T. and D. theatre.

H. von Emmel has made a trip through the northern part of California in the interest of Perfection Pictures.

AT a meeting of the motion picture theatre owners of Southern California on Monday, October 8, the question of advancing admission prices was discussed, but inasmuch as members were from many different localities and conditions in each were different, the members took no definite action. The discussion, however, has led exhibitors of several given localities to see the wisdom of increasing their admission prices, and agreements in two sections have all ready been made.

RECENTLY, all exhibitors of Hollywood, now and for the past several years a part of Los Angeles, decided admission prices were too low when they were charging ten, fifteen and twenty cents. On November 1 all Hollywood theatres will increase to fifteen, twenty and twenty-five cents, but will retain a child's admission ticket, which will sell at ten cents. The contention of the Hollywood managers is that all children who require a seat must have a ticket, and that an increase in the admission price for children would greatly decrease the attendance.

The city ordinance provides all children under sixteen years shall be accompanied by parents or guardian.

ALL owners of the principal theatres in the beach cities about Santa Monica Bay, which includes Santa Monica, Ocean Park, Venice, Redondo and Playa del Rey, will agree to plans now being perfected to increase their admission price on November 1.

THE action of Los Angeles downtown and suburban houses is taken without consideration for the theatre tax shortly to become effective. Whatever means the Government provides for the collection of this will add the tax to the regular admission price now adopted, making the increase ten per cent. more in all instances, if the interpretation put upon the Federal act is correct.

West Coast Exchanges

D. S. MITCHELL, of the Los Angeles California Film Exchange, is home from a trip to San Diego, where he booked "The Red Ace" serial in three theatres, contracts being signed by Manager Gressler, of the Logan Heights theatre; Manager Nathorst, of the Hillcrest theatre, and Manager W. H. Hilts, of the Alhambra.

BOOKINGS on Perfection Pictures are being made by the sales force of the George Kleine Los Angeles branch in all parts of the territory. Manager E. H. Silcocks is just home from a trip to San Diego where he contracted with Manager G. A. Bush for this brand to be shown at the Superba or Illusion theatre. While there Silcocks also secured contracts from the Hillcrest, Palace, Logan Heights, Casino and Plaza theatres.

ARTHUR BRICK, a salesman of the Los Angeles branch, is making a tour of Arizona, and eighteen Perfection Picture contracts have been secured by him. Included in this list are those signed by A. J. Detloff, manager of the Orpheum at Bisbee; L. T. Gaines, of the Martin at Glove; J. Leggitt, of the Airdrome at Douglass. Brick also contracted for Clifton, Tucson, Miami, Lowell, Tombstone, and other towns.

BEN COHN, Pacific Coast manager of Select Pictures, spent the past week with Manager H. H. Hicks, of the Los Angeles branch. Mr. Cohn reports he found the business of the local exchange in excellent condition, and was very complimentary of the bookings made on new as well as the older subjects.

THE Pathe release, "The Tanks At the Battle of Ancre" were booked for showing at the Alhambra theatre for the weeks beginning October 15 and 22, contracts having been made by Manager L. E. Kennedy, of the local Pathe branch. Manager Miller plans to show these pictures in two installments, each of twenty-five hundred feet. In connection with the booking, he is putting on a very extensive advertising campaign, using billboards, newspapers and street cars.

W. A. CRANK, salesman of the Los Angeles Metro office, is making a tour of Arizona, and Manager Harry Ballance is receiving very excellent reports as Mr. Crank progresses with the trip.

Activities in Portland

JENSEN and VON HERBERG, leading motion picture exhibitors of the Northwest, have joined with F. C. Quimby, former Pacific Coast manager for Pathe, in the purchase of the world rights to the 1917 "Pendleton Roundup" pictures. J. G. Sill and H. H. Brownell took 5,000 feet of the roundup, and Mr. Brownell made the sale of the negative for the highest sum ever secured for a roundup picture.

MR. QUIMBY has taken the film to New York, and the report is that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of which Jensen and Von Herberg are the Northwest representatives, is to distribute the subject.

J. G. SILL has just completed a scenic of Mt. Hood, while H. H. Brownell is engaged in filming the Eagle Creek Trail on the Columbia River Highway.

HERMAN WOBBER, vice-president and general manager of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, distributor for the Paramount-Artcraft products, has been a visitor in Portland several times recently.

MRS. Clark Leiter, of the Arcade theatre, La Grande, spent an afternoon with the exchange managers last week.

THE Oregon Industrial News, the latest Northwest news and industrial pictorial, is becoming very popular throughout the state with the exhibitors. I. Leeser Cohen and Lewis H. Moomaw are putting out this interesting subject each week.

HARRY HUNTER, formerly with Mutual and Metro in Portland and more recently of San Francisco, is a new road man under C. M. Hill at the Portland Paramount-Artcraft Exchange.

FOR its screening of "Fools for Luck," the Essanay-Taylor Holmes comedy, the Sunset theatre used lucky and unlucky signs in its lobby display. A ladder for people to walk under, broken mirrors, four-leaf clover, many horseshoes, lucky pennies, and other gems of superstition were utilized with good effect.

C. G. BAUGHN opened his new Kelso, Washington, motion picture theatre on October 20 with "Snow White," the Marguerite Clark picture.

THE new Kelso house, the second in the town, is to be named by the public. It is a 350-seat house, made attractive with many devices unknown to Kelso theatregoers, and its program is bulwarked by the entire Paramount-Artcraft output.

MANAGER MYRICK, of the Liberty theatre, Portland, has inaugurated a series of Sunday organ recitals by Albert Hay Malotte. Mr. Malotte, a well known organist, is giving special programs each Sunday between 12:30 and 1 o'clock on the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones unit orchestral organ. The first recital was a pronounced success

SALT LAKE SEES MANY STAGE STARS IN ONE PICTURE

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, people had an opportunity recently of seeing a number of stage stars in one picture, and at the same time perform a patriotic duty. The first of the Liberty Loan pictures were shown at the Paramount-Empress theatre. The initial picture has David Warfield, Raymond Hitchcock, Jefferson de Angelis, Mabel Taliaferro and other stars in the cast.

JAMES J. STANLEY, manager of the Mutual Film Exchange, at Salt Lake, Utah, is exhibiting a picture received from his brother in Kansas City, which shows a spider and its web, with the Words, "Millions for War," woven into the fine texture of the web. The web is the second of its kind discovered in Kansas City, another spider having previously spun the words, "War—War—War." Stanley is now said to be training a spider to weave "Mutual Films Are Best" into a web, to be exhibited in the Salt Lake office's window.

Citizens Trust and Savings Bank

HEADQUARTERS—
MOTION PICTURE ACCOUNTS in LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

We are enjoying a large part of the motion picture business of this city.

WHY

First— Because we offer fourteen hours of excellent banking service, from eight in the morning until ten in the evening, which affords an unusual convenience for all depositors who are busily engaged during the usual banking hours.

Second—Because we appreciate the worth of, and try to promote the welfare of the motion picture business.

Third— Because our many satisfied depositors bring their friends to the bank, who, in turn, become satisfied depositors.

Fourth—Because all of the stock of this bank is owned by The Citizens National Bank, the total resources of both banks being over twenty-five million.

RAHSPBERRIES

The P is Silent as in Pfillum

Blossoms——Fruit——Briars

This department has been inaugurated with the idea of letting readers know the estimation in which the West Coast Edition of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is held by exhibitors. It is a kind of "Bouquet Column" to catch the pleasant things people say about us. When these little tokens of esteem are thrown at us from time to time we shall—with all becoming modesty—hoist them aloft for the admiring gaze of everybody. Sometimes a briar might be found in the "bouquet," but what's a thorn, more or less, between friends! Each item is short, you will notice. There is a reason. We can grasp just so many more of these good-nature ticklers in our hands at once, for public inspection. Here is a handful for the indulgent reader.

"DOC" HOWE, owner and manager of the Temple theatre, at Santa Ana, California, finds Motion Picture News so interesting he would rather read it than eat, even when the food is before him.

JACK CUNNINGHAM, the Triangle scenario writer, very graciously thanks Motion Picture News for the opportunity of buying space in the coming issue of the Studio Directory. Jack always was thoughtful and polite.

FROM the manager of the Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah, S. I. Goodwin, we received this bouquet: "We failed to receive our copy of Motion Picture News of October 13, and it is almost like losing a member of the family."

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS is the best trade journal we have and all of it is helpful, as it gives unstinted, unbiased criticisms and all else we need to know." That is the message which comes from Ray Meyers, manager of the circuit of theatres owned by George Mauk, in Hayden, San Pedro and Winkelman, Arizona.

WILLIAM WIGGANS wig-wags from the Bon Ton theatre, in Imbler, Arizona, as follows: "Motion Picture News is all 'best' in its different departments. I cannot suggest an improvement that would benefit the exhibitors. Motion Picture News is as good as gold."

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS is a dandy. I received a sample copy, sat right down and read it, and immediately subscribed for it. It's all good," is what W. E. Johnson, of the Jewel theatre, of Clarks Fork, Idaho, writes.

Exhibitors—Their Theatres and Problems

THE Rourke theatre, La Junta, Colo., of which C. N. Wonderly is owner, has a seating capacity of 800, and finds it profitable to offer weekly vaudeville nights. Good music, a clean house, kind and courteous treatment by employees, are the secrets of success, he holds. Releasing companies and exchanges can benefit exhibitors, he declares, by having a fair price and then sticking to it.

FLOYD H. GARDNER, owner of the Payson Photoplayhouse at Payson, Ariz., has sold his interests to W. H. Hillegass, of that city, in preparation for a summons in the near future to join the colors. Prior to his disposal of his holdings Mr. Gardner arranged for the construction of a new building, with complete lighting plant and equipment. The theatre seats 225, at twenty-five and thirty-five cents, and although Payson is one hundred miles from a railroad, the exhibitor changes his features weekly, using first-run features on the Mutual program.

"THE FLAME OF THE YUKON" has been the best business-getter in months at the Grand theatre at Hamilton, Mont., a town of 1,500 population, according to L. H. Sutton, its manager. Daily changes of pictures are effected for a seating capacity of 350, at ten and fifteen cents admission, by the use of Paramount, Artcraft, Triangle and Vitagraph releases.

AT the Rex theatre, in Platteville, Colo., changes of program are made twice weekly, with Pathe serials, Triangle and special features being shown. The theatre, of which Charles C. Hamberger is owner and manager, has a seating capacity of 225, for which admissions of ten and fifteen cents are charged. A player piano and a Victrola furnish musical accompaniment.

A CIRCUIT of four theatres in as many small towns has been established to pull together for better service, beter film and better prices than their competitors in other towns, according to the manager of the Arctic theatre, of Nez Perce, Idaho, one of the four in the circuit. The house is in a town of 900, seating 200 persons, at admissions of ten and twenty cents. Six changes of program are made weekly, Universal, Bluebird, Butterfly, Triangle and Paramount releases being shown. Need of more information regarding plays and better inspection of film, with improved advertising service, are urged for the exhibitor.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS and Charlie Chaplin continue to remain the strongest drawing cards at the Odeon and Unique theatres at San Francisco, according to Joseph A. Huff, manager. At the Unique, Chaplin releases run from two to six weeks, while at the Odeon Fairbanks and William S. Hart features always bring full houses. Each house seats 300, at a flat ten-cent admission. Lower prices on films for small houses are urged as the chief aid which exchanges can give to exhibitors.

HIGH in the mountains near the California-Nevada boundary line, the Masonic theatre, at Truckee, Cal., finds benefit weekly from the reviews of pictures, advertising and projection departments of Motion Picture News, acording to W. M. Englehart, its manager. The house, which changes program three times weekly with Fox and Paramount releases, seats 250 out of a population of 750, and chages ten and twenty cents admission.

What Exhibitors Are Doing

SATISFACTION with the service furnished by the Paramount and Universal programs is expressed by R. H. Morris, owner-manager of the Rex theatre, of Elk River, Idaho, a village of 500. "The exhibitor should study his own little business and keep a-plugging. If seven days do not pay, cut out from one to six,," he advises. "Miss George Washington" was found to be the best attraction in recent months, all his audiences being pleased with the feature.

BATTLESHIP linoleum throughout the house and new color dissolves are two of the improvements planned for the Symphony theatre, of Los Angeles, by its manager, C. K. Gates. A very satisfactory business is being built up, he says, by putting on the right pictures. The house, which seats 750, uses Metro releases, of which Harold Lockwood pictures are found the best attractions. In addition, business is increased by "live wire" stunts of patriotic parades, costumes, pageants and special lobby features. "Less 'bull' and better pictures" are urged in improvement of exhibitors' conditions. The general news, touching successes or failures throughout the country, furnished by Motion Picture News is found most helpful.

A "country store" on the opening night of a serial always gets results for the Liberty theatre, of St. Helena, Cal., where 400 are seated out of a population of 1,500. Change of program is made six times weekly, states L. H. Killingsworth, owner and manager, Paramount, Vitagraph, Fox, K-E-S-E and Pathe releases being used.

SELECTIVE bookings from all exchanges and more circuits for small towns to reduce the present prohibitive express rates from exchanges to small theatres "off the circuit" are suggested as the solution of the small exhibitors' problem by N. E. Dodd, manager of the Twilight theatre, at Haines, Ore., where 250 are seated. A change of program is made twice weekly, Brady-made, Metro and K-E-S-E features being shown. Of recent features "Hell Morgan's Girl" and "God's Half-acre" drew the largest crowds. "We have a small theatre in a small town," writes Dodd, "but try to show good pictures at reasonable prices. We get good crowds and have no complaints to make."

SARAH BERNHARDT in "Mothers of France" proved a big attraction lately at the Star theatre, McMinnville, Ore. The star and subject both were timely, writes M. L. Morris, the owner of the house, which has a seating capacity of 245.

A 6-B Powers' projector has just been installed, and pipe organ, piano, xylophone and traps furnish music. Plain lobby displays, with special displays for big features that will bring out the subject, are exchange aids which are held needed, while abolition of advance payments on contracts are urged.

The house changes program three times weekly. World, Brady-Made, Fox, Metro, Vitagraph and other brands are used on open booking nights.

EXTRA-LENGTH pictures, such as "The Birth of a Nation," "The Eyes of the World" and "The Barrier" have proved best attractions in Glenwood Springs, Colo., a city of 2,000, according to George Hinman, owner of thhe Orpheum theatre there. Large returns were obtained, he states, because each picture was well known and heavily advertised.

A new Powers 6-B projector and new upholstered seats recently have been installed, and a five-piece orchestra is a business-getting aid. Hinman urges that the exchanges send films by parcel post to reduce the cost to exhibitors.

"IT takes good productions and common sense advertising to get by these days. The picture's the thing."

This is the opinion of J. R. Linn and Son, managers of the Crawford theatre, at Carlsbad, N. M., a city of 3,000. "Let each exhibitor make his credit good and the business will take a big step forward," they believe. "Releasing companies and exchanges can benefit us by having competent employees do our shipping and fill our advertising orders."

The house changes program daily. Paramount, Selznick, Artcraft, Vitagraph and Triangle releases are shown. Anita Stewart, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are their biggest attractions.

AT the Broadway theatre, Belgrade, Mont., experiments are to be made with the new Mazda lamp instead of carbons, on two Powers 6-A projectors. Kinsey & Phelps, owners, object to the advance payments and C. O. D. requirements from exchanges, commenting on the difference between the anxiety to get the money first, and then the indifference about the quality of service.

"The Eyes of the World" has proved a big attraction in the town, which has a population of 500. World, Paramount, K-E-S-E and Kleine brands are shown.

CHANGE of program five times weekly, with use of Triangle, Pathe and Metro brands is effective in drawing business to the Colville theatre, Colville, Wash., according to H. D. Williams, owner and manager. Of a population of 1,500, the house seats 450, and does a good business. Triangle releases especially, states Mr. Williams, are always good for business in his theatre.

A NEW bordered screen has just been installed in the Marysville theatre, Marysville, Wash., a town of 1,400, and the house is being completely refinished. The theatre seats 225. Paramount, Triangle, Bluebird, World and Pathe brands are shown, and of these Fairbanks and Hart in any picture go best.

SENDING complimentary tickets to the "best trade" always brings increased admissions to the Dixie theatre, Lander, Wyo., according to Edith A. Nickerson, manager. The town has 2,500 population and the house has a capacity of 300. Paramount, Artcraft, Selznick, World, Metro, K-E-S-E and special features are shown, and of these, states the manager, Douglas Fairbanks in "Wild and Woolly" has proved the biggest recent attraction.

THE Regent theatre, Billings, Mont., is installing a large pipe organ and player, states E. O'Keefe, its manager. The house has a capacity of 550. "Wild and Woolly" has been the best feature shown in Billings, a city of 15,000, in recent months, states O'Keefe. Business is good there in spite of high film rentals, he declares.

DR. E. C. WILLS, formerly owner of a theatre at Nogales, Arizona, has purchased the Auditorium theatre, at Venice, and contracted for Fox subjects.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

A. H. Blank, prominent exhibitor of the Middle West and in charge of the Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska exchanges for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was in New York last week for the latest in film circles. During the week Mr. Blank paid a visit to the Brenon Studios, Hudson Heights, New Jersey, and watched Mr. Brenon "shoot" a number of scenes for "Empty Pockets," his latest production.

James Quirk, editor of the Photoplay Magazine, came on from Chicago last week and will be in New York for a few days, in the interest of his publication.

Samuel Krelberg, Overland Film Company, returning from Pittsburgh last week where he had been for a few days in the interest of his company.

Charles F. Schwerin, general manager of First National Exhibitors' Exchange, covering the territory of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, arrived in New York last week, to look over the market. Mr. Schwerin returned to Pittsburgh Saturday.

Louis Geiger, sales manager, First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Pittsburgh, returned to Pittsburgh Saturday, after several days spent in New York, Mr. Geiger for the past year has been assistant manager, Select Pictures Exchange, Pittsburgh. He was formerly with the World Film Corporation, as branch manager in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Indianapolis.

William Steiner, Photodrama, returned to New York last week, from a business trip throughout the West.

Edward O'Donnell, exploitation manager for Sidney Olcott, is in Chicago with a print of Mr. Olcott's latest production, "The Belgian." Mr. O'Donnell will show "The Belgian" to the Chicago trade.

Pathe Promotes Regalado to Poster Manager

M. R. Regalado, who has been in the art and poster departments of the Pathe Exchange for nearly four years, has been promoted to manager of the department. In addition to being an artist, Regalado is an expert in photography and has made a specialty in high-class portraiture.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has installed a force of poster artists whose entire time, it is said, will be devoted to Pathe work.

Paramount Publicity Man Becomes a Navy Man

Lloyd Robinson, of the publicity staff of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, handling publicity for Paramount pictures, has covered his typewriter to become a yeoman in the United States Navy. He will be stationed at the Boston Navy Yard for the present, it is predicted.

Industry's Problems Solved in Five Reels

John W. Blackwood Explains in Exciting Fillum Exactly Why Producers Are Willing to Murder High Salaried Stars

JOHN W. BLACKWOOD, who hammers a typewriter in the Ince western publicity department, has typed what might be considered to be in many respects a masterpiece. It is a scenario in five chapters, or reels, relating to the star evil.

The prologue:

"Many motion picture exhibitors complain that they are unable to continue in business on account of what they term the exorbitant prices they are called upon to pay for their pictures. They assert that even if they play to crowded houses each performance they cannot make money."—News item in daily paper.

CHAPTER I.

Part of the Cause.

Harold Hollywood, the handsome young star of the Trimmem Film Company, has just made his greatest picture, "The Curse of Beauty." In his newest picture Mr. Hollywood is seen in one hundred and eighty-four close ups, exceeding his previous record by eighteen.—From the press sheet of the Trimmem Film Company.

CHAPTER II.

More About the Cause.

Mr. Isadore Polotzky, the enterprising and successful manager of Polotzky's Palace of Pictures, Guadaloupe, New Mexico, writes to Mr. Harold Hollywood, as follows:

"I have just played your latest success, 'The Curse of Beauty,' to capacity houses for two nights and a matinee. You are the greatest actor in the world and the salvation of the picture business. A Harold Hollywood photoplay is money in the bank for every exhibitor in the country. When are you going to start your own company?

(Signed) "I. POLOTSKY."

CHAPTER III.

Getting the Effect Started.

SCENE: Office of the Trimmem Film Company.

DISCOVERED: Mr. Ben Trimmem, president and general manager of the Trimmem Film Company, and Harold Hollywood, the most popular star of the company. Mr. Hollywood flourishes a letter in one hand while the other digit grasps a copy of the last issue of the Guadaloupe, N. M., Weekly Guardian.

MR. HOLLYWOOD.

(Excitedly.)

Read this!

MR. TRIMMEM.

(With just a slight interest.)

What's the high blood pressure about, Harold?

MR. HOLLYWOOD.

I, the greatest actor in the world, am underpaid. . . . I am the salvation of the picture game . . . read this here letter from Manager Polotzky, one of the most famous managers in the country! . . . yes, and read this here criticism in the Guadaloupe Guardian!

MR. TRIMMEM.

(Scanning, hurriedly, the letter; but ignoring the paper.)

My word, you ARE popular in Guadaloupe, aren't you?

MR. HOLLYWOOD.

I must have a new contract at ten thousand a week . . . or I quit. If you won't pay me that, the Steelem Company will!

MR. TRIMMEM.

That's all right, Harold . . . sign your name on the dotted line—there, just below mine . . . and many thanks for your loyalty to the Trimmem Company. Next time you write to Mr. Polotzky please give love and kisses from me.

CHAPTER IV.

Something About the Effect.

(Copy of a night letter from Ben Trimmem, of the Trimmem Film Company, to Isadore Polotzky, of Guadaloupe, New Mexico.)

The Trimmem Film Company has just signed the beautiful young star, Mr. Harold Hollywood, for another year at ten thousand dollars a week. Hereafter your service will cost you one hundred and forty dollars a week instead of fifty-five, the old price. Congratulate us on retaining the valuable services of Mr. Hollywood who is, without any exception, the greatest actor in the world and a wonderful favorite in Guadaloupe.

(Signed) BEN TRIMMEM.

CHAPTER V.

Still Discussing the Effect.

(Copy of a RUSH telegram from Isadore Polotzky, of Guadaloupe, N. M., to Ben Trimmem, of the Trimmem Film Company, of New York.)

Cancel my contract for Trimmem Films. You robber . . . you goy . . . you ganeff.

(Signed) ISADORE POLOTSKY.

Alma Hanlon Plans "Big Feed" for Soldiers

Alma Hanlon, who is co-starred in Harry Raver's "The Public Defender" with Frank Keenan and Robert Edeson, is busily engaged in the preparation of a Thanksgiving dinner which she plans to send her brother, Fred Hanlon, and seven of his comrades, now in camp with the Twelfth Regiment at Spartanburg.

Little Madge Evans Completes Another Feature

Little Madge Evans, kiddie star of the World Film Corporation, has finished a new World-Picture Brady-Made called "The Volunteer," it was announced this week. Henry Hull is co-starred with the youthful actress in the feature, which is said to be of patriotic trend.

Charles Howard Eaton Dies

Charles Howard Eaton, well known in music and motion picture circles, died suddenly at his home in Dorchester, Mass., on Wednesday of last week. He had just completed a trip through Maine in the interest of the World Film Corporaton and was about to resume his activities when stricken.

A New Idea in Service

MOTION PICTURE NEWS BOX-OFFICE REPORTS make their initial bow today.

They are not the usual variety of exhibitor's report to his trade journal. EXAMINE THEM. You'll see the difference. And remember this is only the BEGINNING of this real service of the sort upon which the very LIFE of the industry hangs today.

These reports come from SEVERAL HUNDRED, not a few score, of our most successful exhibitors. That is why, perhaps, more "knocks" did not develop. These men booked these pictures after consulting every known source of information, and they TRIED not to book losers. You will find enough spots, by close examination of this record, to prove neither we nor they purposely avoided saying JUST WHAT A PICTURE DID. We will not be satisfied until over a thousand exhibitors are behind these reports. Then every picture that is actively booking will be rounded up in the count.

IN the meantime we feel we have made a pretty good START. Mr. Johnston looks at EVERY report. Then it passes to the editorial staff. The reviewers see them. If you want to be in PERSONAL touch with every PERSON making your trade paper a "paper for the exhibitor," write us to send you report cards. We pay all expense and postage.

An experienced exhibitor makes the final "count," grading these reports—and the same judgment is used here as is asked of the exhibitor in giving his grading to us. We find some exhibitors always grade "high," some always "low." This is corrected. The grading herewith published is as accurate and reliable as great painstaking and knowing what the exhibitor wants to know can make it.

WATCH these reports weekly. You will see NEW WRINKLES developed as we go along. And remember we don't "make" these reports—you make them—and we need every early-run exhibitor behind this. Let us hear from YOU today.

EXPLANATION: The United States is divided into sections, and each section separately reported when reports clearly indicate a different value for a picture in different sections. Most pictures grade uniformly for all sections. To use the table, find the picture you seek by title, then note in column under your part of the country whether the picture went "Extra big," "Big," "Average" or "Poor," in your section. West of the Rocky Mountains is "West"; New York, Pennsylvania and North Atlantic States are "East." The remaining states north of "Mason and Dixon's Line" are "Middle"; the rest "South."

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Hitting the High Spots in Ads

Best Way to Attract Patrons Is to Say What You Have to Say in the Fewest Words Possible

MAJORITY of the advertising that appears in the Sunday newspapers appears to have been prepared merely as a part of the routine of the exhibitors' business—something that had to be done, and therefore the better gotten out of the way and on the road to the printer. Evidently many of the exhibitors say to themselves, "Well, I have to write my ads now," and then they sit down and dash off the first thing that comes to their minds.

There isn't the slightest doubt that adverising is one of the most important parts of the exhibitor's business, but that doesn't mean that all he has to do is to fill a certain amount of space and expect a stream of patrons at his box office. Here is one thing to remember: The advertising profession has grown by leaps and bounds, and not only have the men who write the "copy" progressed, but also has the public become discriminating. Merely because you buy a certain amount of newspaper space everyone that you want to reach is not going to read your display.

Last week we spoke about centering the weight of your advertising on your NOW attraction. In this article we want to urge you to pick out one point to advertise in your pictures—TO HIT THE HIGH SPOTS.

Do you know that big businesses pay their advertising managers salaries that run into the tens and twenties of thousands of dollars for being able to write advertising that will attract more attention than the display of their competitors. You cannot afford to do this, of course, but neither can your competitor. But you can afford to give thought to your work, and if you give this thought and watch carefully what the best exhibitors of the country are doing, as reflected week after week in this bureau, you can make your advertising stand out and cause it to be read before that of your competitor and with greater conviction.

Now, let us take your current production. The simplest way to find out how to advertise this picture is for you to ask yourself why you booked the picture. What made you believe that it would be a good box office asset?

Did you book it on account of the great popularity of the star? Or was it because it was some smashing feature which could be coupled with some current event? Or was it because of the strength of the picture itself, its dramatic power or its comedy effects?

Answer that question for yourself. The reason that you booked the picture is the very thing you should advertise.

Don't get a confusion of reasons into your head. Get THE ONE REASON.

Once the writer of these articles worked on a very large newspaper under the direction of the highest salaried newspaper man in the world. The writer had charge of the displays on the first page of the paper during certain editions. It was a paper that had an immense street sale and what the headlines said governed the sale of the paper. One day the writer gave equal prominence to two stories. He was called to the inner office and called DOWN. The defense was that both of the stories were so big that he could not choose between them.

"There are never two equal stories," was the reply from the chief. "The stories are what you make the public think they are. If you are in doubt, pick one and play it. That's the way to sell papers."

And it's the way to sell admission to your theatre, so far as newspaper advertising is concerned.

Decide what is the feature of the picture that should be brought out strongest in your advertising and then go to it.

Tell it to the public in the most direct manner and in the fewest words.

And after you have done that, cut out about half that you have written.

For this week we have taken the case of stars. From the Sunday newspapers for October 21 we have reproduced on the opposite page a number of advertisements of the new Chaplin picture, the latest Wm. S. Hart picture and some older Hart films.

Now, before we go any further, give the page a glance and see which of these displays attract your eye. While in their reproduction they are reduced a little more than a half, the same comparative effect is there. Which advertisements were you led to read first? We have a pretty good idea of what your answer will be, but we want to tell you why we believe that you arrived at these conclusions and why the public gets the particular appeals.

Now the analysis:

It is easy to see that there are three things that can be featured in the Chaplin picture:

First, Chaplin's name, and his picture with it.

Second, the name of the picture, and the fact that it is his latest.

And, third if you have the space, that it shows the comedian as a convict.

The same is true of the Hart pictures. The name of the star is the big thing in both cases. The association of the names of the actors with particular films is strong in the public mind. You don't have to go into detailed explanations.

Which brings up a point. Never try to diagram a picture for a patron. Especially don't try to tell a patron something about a player that the patron already knows. It is a fact that the average motion picture fan knows more about the players than the average manager. So when you go into all this detailed explanation, you are, unconsciously or not, merely writing to fill valuable space which could far better be occupied by the use of large type and more white space in the display.

What you need to tell the patron about the star is why the patron should see him in this particular picture.

Now let's see how the various managers whose ads are reproduced on the opposite page have dealt with the various pictures, under the different circumstances and with the different combinations with which they have shown them.

William S. Hart and Chaplin are both stars on the bill of the New Grand Central, St. Louis. The Chaplin picture is a new comedy, this being the first time the comedian has been seen on the screen in a number of weeks. The Hart picture was not a first run. The writer of the advertisement had so little information on the Drew comedy that he couldn't even give the name. It seems to us manifest that the Chaplin picture should have been made the feature of the ad, but the man who wrote it couldn't get away from the cheap department store advertising plan and had to throw in the line about "Four Big Stars." The result is that nothing is featured and there is no one strong thing to attract the attention of the public. It reminds us of the rival lemonade stand across the street from the circus grounds that advertises the drink "two glasses for a nickel."

Keystone theatre, Indianapolis, undertakes to feature Chaplin, but the effect is confusing because each of the three features to be shown during the week in connection with the comedy is given equal showing. And note that the ad never mentions what is to be shown in connection with the Chaplin picture Sunday. The way to make business with such an advertisement is to feature Chaplin strongly as to be seen all week and the bill that was to be shown Sunday, putting the other attractions in small type.

Loew's Hippodrome, Baltimore, uses smaller space, but gets the effective result because Chaplin is brought prominently to the front and the name of the feature is in smaller type.

Alaamo No. 2, Atlanta, sacrifices the chance to feature the comedian in a mass of type that gets nowhere. In the first place Chaplin, so far as motion picture audiences is concerned, is not Mr. Charles Chaplin. You are not presenting him in Shakespearean roles, but in slapstick comedy. There is nothing distinctive in this advertisement. The O. Henry picture should have been announced in

Stars Won't Draw If You Dim Their Brilliance In Your Ads

Reduced a little more than a half, here are specimens of good and bad newspaper displays on Charlie Chaplin, W. S. Hart and other pictures. The advertisement of the Sun theatre is an example of the proper way to display the week's attraction and at the same time putting the emphasis on the current attraction. This was discussed last week.

smaller type, and if there was any necessity for giving the bills for the latter part of the week at all they should have occupied about one fifth the space they take. The whole tenor of the display is one that would strike the man looking for amusement as an emphasis on the cheapness of the show rather than on the quality. It is too much of a case of simply selling the reels rather than the pictures.

Rialto theatre, in the same city, and probably the one at which the Alamo advertisement is aimed, plays Paramount-Artcraft pictures regularly, and for this reason the ad writer properly gives the principal space to the Charles Ray picture, but he used the Chaplin name in even larger type and a good line, "The First New Chaplin in Several Months." The display convinces the patron that there is a real bill worth the money without a mass of type aimed at such a result.

The man who wrote the Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., display should have been content when he said that this was a new comedy. Instead he consumes a considerable space with repetition of this statement without getting anywhere. It would have been a whole lot better had he used this space to say in larger type the thing that he does say later—that it shows Charlie in prison.

Victoria theatre, Richmond, Va., sacrifices space, in the first place, to tell all about the middle of the week attraction. He crowds up Belle Bennett and the comedian in such a way that neither attracts attention.

Colonial theatre, in the same city, gets a much better effect. He brings out Chaplin with a cut and then gives the Hart picture rank ahead because the Hart picture will be seen Sunday as well as Monday and the Chaplin film is not released until Monday.

But easily the best Chaplin advertisement is that of the Isis theatre, Indianapolis. While we are not fond of heavy black type, the Isis brings out the fact that there is a big double bill, and features Chaplin, together with a scene from the production. The Virginia Pearson feature is announced in a way that does not conflict. The only criticism is that there is too much small type under the line "The Adventurer."

It stands out as the work of a man who had something to say and said it in as few words as possible. The reader gets what he wanted to know and no more.

Now take the Hart pictures. Two of these advertise the newest release, "The Narrow Trail." Note the contrast between the Columbia theatre, Dayton, O., and the Alhambra, Indianapolis. The Columbia display is a mere mass of type. Instead of making an attractive announcement, there are really difficulties put in the way of reading the ad. Instead of the right theory of advertising—making the display so attractive that the reader will unconsciously get the message, the writer actually made the ad difficult to read. He goes on the theory that everybody is dead anxious to know what the Columbia has to say. He may be right about a share of his regular patrons, but he is wrong about the general public. That sort of advertising is not going to draw new business to a theatre.

The contrast—the Alhambra, with the name of the star in big type and a cut, it also stands out. Again we believe there is too much reading matter. If the writer had stopped with the words "Hart himself," he would have had a stronger display.

A relief of white space is a whole lot stronger than a mass of small type.

And out of all the advertisements that we have reproduced, the strongest is that of the Orpheum, Cleveland. There is but one feature to bring out Hart, in "Hell's Hinges," and the two names, with the cut, tells the whole story, for the cut identifies the character of the play. And even if there had been other attractions, they could have been put below in small type without spoiling the attractiveness.

You don't have to hold a post mortem on your pictures. Remember newspaper display is not intended to give a history of the star, the story of the play contains a mass of meaningless adjectives. It is meant to get your patrons to your theatre to see the picture. The strongest way that you stamp the main points on their minds the longer they will remember it and the more quickly they will be convinced.

You have only to hit the high spots, but hit them hard and often.

Don't think that you can fool the public these days. You may get away with it in one or two pictures, but you won't last long. The public wants to know what you have to say, but they want it in short snappy sentences, even in words.

Here is our advice for a good advertisement on a star. First plenty of space. Then a cut of the star, preferably a striking one showing him in the role in which he will appear. His name and the name of the picture and a sentence or two about the film. Then plenty of white space around the ad. Don't confuse the eye. Make your message stand out sharp.

The "High Spot" stands out a whole lot stronger if it is not surrounded by a lot of unnecessary FLY SPECKS.

Every person who attends the showing of the first Petrova picture, "Daughter of Destiny," will received a large colored reproduction of the Underwood portrait of the star which will appear on the front cover of the December number of Ladies' World.

This will take the place of the heralds which have ordinarily been used, and though the cost will be considerably greater, the men who are paying the bills are convinced that such striking souvenirs, which will be taken into the homes, will bring the recipients back to see other Petrova films and will be well worth the cost.

The first distribution of these pictures will occur when "Daughter of Destiny" is shown at the Rialto.

Successful Exhibitors I Have Known

By Carl Horton Pierce

Mr. Pierce, who has traveled the United States and Canada for the past four years, calling upon exhibitors in the interests of the Morosco Photoplay Co. and later for Paramount and Artcraft, is in an unusual position to give his impressions first hand of the men of whom he writes. His perspective has enabled him to pick out the high lights among the exhibitors of the continent. His deductions will be of interest to you, undoubtedly.

THERE'S a rich lesson for some of us in the experience and success of C. D. Buss, manager of the Third street theatre, Easton, Pa.

Mr. Buss started in our "little industry" about seven years ago. You'd hardly recognize in the man, who takes entire pages in his local papers and issues house organs that anyone might be proud of, the "C. D."—as he is familiarly called—who gave up a postion in the "opry" house at $15 per to accept the job of ticket taker, etc., in the poorest "movie" in Easton, at $10 a week. Yet it is same "C. D." And his meteoric career is worthy of spending five minutes of your time to peruse.

As he himself admits, his first move in "our" business was a loss, but he had foresight plus principles, which, incidentally, is SOME combination and hard to beat. Within the first year, Mr. Buss had taken on practically ALL OF HIS EMPLOYER'S DUTIES. Grasp that: clerks, employes, theatre "strap hangers," ushers, operators, ticket takers, etc., etc. Are you calling daily at the theatre, looking for pay day only, or are you seeking to take from the manager ALL OF HIS DUTIES, so that he may have more time to study the new conditions that constantly present themselves to the trade; so that he can read and keep posted on his trade papers; so that he can THINK?

The owner and manager left Mr. Buss alone. This brings up one of the cardinal rules of business: "If you wish success, hire only good men—then leave them alone." From the poorest theatre in Easton, Mr. Buss soon produced the best. "How did I do it?" he asked in answer to my question: "I threw out pictures that were only average and put in all of the state rights features I could buy. I am speaking now of the so-called 'early days.'

"I did not show these pictures for one day—but three.

"I did not charge a nickel—I charged ten and fifteen cents.

"At that time, the charging of ten and fifteen cents was—so everybody thought—equivalent to suicide. In reality, NOT TO DO IT IS SUICIDE—as my competitors learned.

"I put on good music—only a pianist, but a good one.

"Music and projection have always been a 'hobby' with me. I figure they are two of the essential things in the success of a motion picture theatre.

"But, then, you must see that the other branches of the theatre are taken care of in the right kind of way.

"I have always found out that to 'tell the truth' to your patrons will bring more results than all the salve ever made. Get your patrons to believe in you and your entertainment and your success is bound to come. After you have won the confidence and patronage of the citizens, then keep it and don't ever let them have reason to doubt you. I have seen opposition managers come and go. They came in like lions and went out like sheep and they always seemed to have just one idea in mind, to PUT THE OTHER FELLOW OUT OF BUSINESS. If you can't get business by fair methods, then it is better to 'drop out.'

"In the publicity end of my experience I have used liberal newspaper space, window cards, heralds and programs. A favorite stunt of mine is to take programs or heralds and make the rounds of the grocery stores and meat shops. I go to the owners of these stores personally and ask them to allow me to place a few heralds or programs on the counter and in the orders they deliver to the homes. For this favor I give them a few passes and I ALSO BECOME ACQUAINTED WITH THEM. This last I figure a valuable asset. You can't know too many people, especially business men. It is very easy for a grocery clerk or butcher to say to his customers: 'The so and so theatre always has good pictures,' or 'did you see so and so picture at the ——— theatre?' In fact you will always have him to say a good word for you.

"You might just walk into a store and leave the heralds there on the counter. But then they are thrown away—at least they don't get attention. This stunt I do not work to death, only when I have a picture I feel is worthy of those extra efforts.

"Did you ever stop to think that the grocery store or butcher shop is one of the greatest places for gossip, especially so in the neighborhood district? The women will come there and talk of things they shouldn't. Now there is where friend grocer or butcher comes in. If you treat him right he won't hesitate a bit to mention your theatre or your picture. Of course he doesn't really realize that he is bringing you business, but he has an interest in you and your theatre because he gets in free. That little pass to your 10 or 15 cent show will do wonders, and it costs you nothing and very often brings in a little extra money. Of course I don't believe in throwing away the pasteboards. It is a 'good trick' to give a pass away and make it work."

In the old days in the advertising business do you remember the groans of the advertising agents who used to labor with their clients in trying to prevent them from aiming their advertising at competitors instead of aiming at patrons?

C. D. Buss, Manager Third Street Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

To-day many exhibitors will immediately tell you what their competitors are playing, instead of talking about what they themselves are doing.

If one were to place his finger on the keynote of Mr. Buss' success it might be this: "He's a leader; he doesn't shoot at his competitor, he aims at his public."

And he aims at his public with broadsides of publicity. Whole pages are devoted to outlining the policy of the Third street theatre. House programs of a superior style accentuate and intensify the liberal newspaper advertising. Answer: SUCCESS—a synonym for the name of C. D. Buss.

Plea for Animals in Mae Marsh Film

Goldwyn Pictures suggests to the exhibitors the enlistment of the aid of the local Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and Audubon Societies in exploiting Mae Marsh's second picture, "Sunshine Alley." The picture is really a propaganda film and one that will be readily endorsed by the societies named.

"The Quaintest Play of a Quaint Actress" is the attractive catch line that Goldwyn suggests for advertising use, together with "The Screen's First Plea for Dumb Animals."

Special Concerts Given by St. Louis House

An innovation has been started by the New Grand Central Palace theatre, St. Louis, with popular concerts, which will be given on Monday and Tuesday evenings of each week. On these occasions the regular orchestra of the theatre is augmented by a number of symphony artists and five numbers, all of popular appeal, are rendered.

The concerts begin at 7.45 p. m. and last an hour. On these evenings there is only one showing of the picture program.

Your Idea—and Ours

FROM time to time we have called attention of theatre managers to the use that can be made of the advertising pages appearing in the NEWS for house advertisements. It's a mighty good plan after you have booked a certain picture to collect the advertising pages and you will probably find that you have an artistically made display. Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., by using the silhouette of Theda Bara, which appeared in one of the William Fox advertisements in a recent issue of this paper, has a display that easily ranks with the best of the week.

The management has carried the picture idea still further by offering photographs of the star as souvenirs to the first 400 purchasing tickets. The Criterion is getting the hundreds of followers of Miss Bara "going and coming."

Put on "Think"—in multiple reels—at your theatre now.

THE Toronto office of Universal is sending out a clever postcard to patrons of various theatres advertising "The Red Ace," a telling little intimate message that is bound to help business. Readers of the motion picture departments of the daily newspapers were familiar with the fact that Marie Walcamp, the star of the serial, has broken her arm during the filming of one of the episodes and this message from her will carry a special appeal. Exhibitors will find it well to imitate this card. It is especially valuable in keeping up interest in a serial. Any little intimate mes-

The expense of sending these cards to several hundred patrons is very small, slightly more than a cent each, yet every day we hear of exhibitors who say that they cannot afford programs or announcements of any sort. We would be willing to go on record as saying that in almost any

This is a clever idea and any time that you can interest your audiences to this extent you have put over something real in the way of salesmanship of your pictures.

The man who advertises will soon find that his non-advertising competitor is paying the cost of the display.

WE'RE rather late in getting to this, but here is such an excellent idea used by Manager Myers of the Waterloo, Iowa, theatre, that we cannot pass it up. Note that the patrons were asked to pay what they thought the picture was worth as they left the house. They were given the card as they entered instead of an admission ticket. Here is a novel idea that will not only cause "word of mouth" advertising for the theatre, but it furnishes the manager a chance to find the drawing power of a particular picture. It's an idea that shouldn't be used often, but right now when many showmen are faced with the problem of raising their prices, it affords an excellent chance to find out how much your patrons are willing to pay for a really good picture. And it's also our advice not to try this stunt unless you know in advance that the picture is a good one.

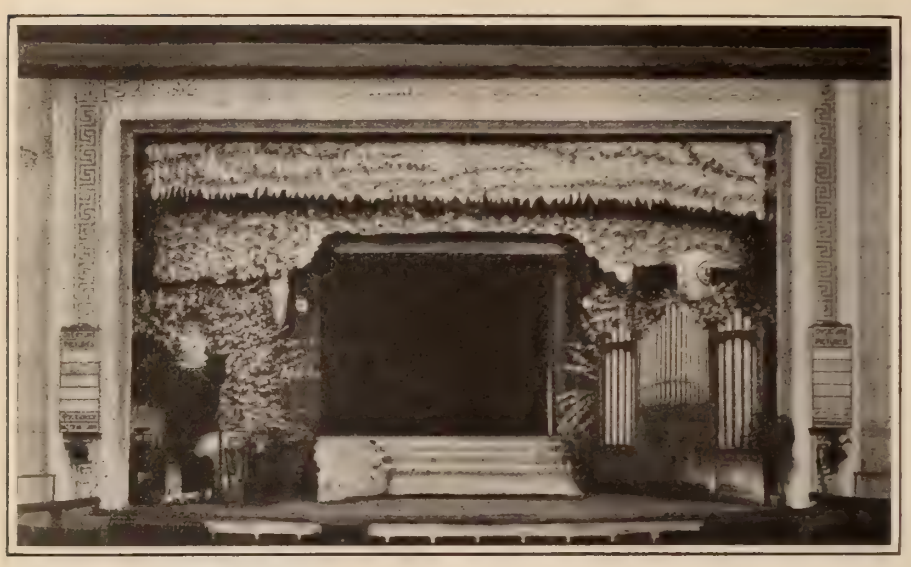
Bill T. put himself at the head of the alphabet and now he is all ABILITY.



AGAIN, this week the Strand theatre, Rochester, N. Y., comes to the front with one of the best specimens of advertising. Strand theatre designs all of its own advertising and the results show that this expense is fully worth while. Large space in the newspapers is used and a lot of wording is avoided. Note that in this advertising the management featured the important points to bring out—the name of the star and who she is, and the name of the picture, together with the fact that it was read by thousands of possible patrons in the Saturday Evening Post.

The black and white effect is striking, and the half-tone of the star gives the necessary relief. It is the sort of advertising that brings business. In this connection we would call attention to the point made in this department last week—centering on your current attraction. Note that the Strand does not even mention its bill for the last half of the week.

ALVARADO THEATRE, Alvarado, Texas, used a novelty in advertising the first episode of Pattie's "The Fatal Ring," by offering a premium of $2 to the person bringing the largest number of people to his show in any kind of vehicle and a prize of $1 for the largest family attending. People came to the theatre in every sort of carry-all, from mule team to automobile, from eight to eighteen in a party, and record sizes for families were established. In addition to the contestants a large crowd was brought to the theatre by the unique free show and an immense audience saw the first episode of the serial.

Here is an example of what any theatre can do with a stage display and achieve a most artistic effect. This is the Monticello theatre, Jersey City, which is under the management of Robinson and Burns. At the right will be noted a pipe organ installed by the American Photo Player Co. The whole setting forms a most pleasing Japanese effect.

Exhibitor Must be the Livest Sort of a Retailer, Says Service Expert

William A. Bach, who is visiting principal exchange cities for Universal and establishing service departments, writes this article in answer to critics of his previous contributions to the News. Mr. Bach is now in Denver and he is able to throw valuable light on conditions in the various cities that he visited.

I'VE had one or two people ask me since my articles have appeared in the News, why I am so "down" on the exhibitor. To these people I explained that far from being down on the exhibitor, I was very much on his side and I was very anxious to see him come into his own. Most of my work in the film business has been done on behalf of the exhibitor and I am deeply interested in his problems.

It is because of these facts that I am so blunt and plain in my articles. I believe the truth should be told, just as it exists and the results, I believe, will justify the means.

There is no use dodging the issue. The exhibitor is the heart of the moving picture industry. Upon him depends its growth and development. He, it is, that meets the great public and "pleases" or "displeases" them, for strangely enough the exhibitor suffers far more from showing a poor picture than the manufacturer does in making it.

He is the retailer of this great business of ours. That is why great manufacturing companies such as the Universal Company and others are establishing service departments and training men to help the exhibitor—not to teach him but to help him. These companies are doing this because they belive that the market must be extended for motion pictures and the logical channel through which to extend and develop it is through the retailer or exhibitor.

But today, the average exhibitor is not a good retailer. No more was the average jeweller, shoeman or grocer a few years ago. Just think back eight or ten years ago and contrast the old grocery store, shoe emporium, dry goods house, with the modern retailing institutions. There has certainly been a wonderful advance.

But the significant point is that there has been this advance. One might argue that it is a far cry from the old store, with its kitchen chairs, to houses like the Rialto, Strand, etc., and that is quite true, but the house alone does not mark advancement. It is the methods of selling the goods that count and in which the greatest progress has been made in all other mercantile lines. And, strangely enough, and most unfortunately, many of our big thousand-seat houses are still laying their wares before the public in the same fashion as they did years ago, when pictures were a novelty and crowds were common and the rule rather than the exception.

The modern exhibitor should remember also that his business differs from the ordinary mercantile crafts, because whereas the storekeper deals largely in standardized articles that are more or less firmly entrenched in the public mind, he, on the other hand, must put over each individual attraction separately—which certainly calls for even greater effort, greater skill, and greater knowledge than the ordinary retailer.

Again, competition is keen. Pictures are not easy to gauge. But the picture-showman should be able to seize upon the vital point of contact or attraction, just as the newspaper headline writer picks his headings from the most vital point of the story.

And upon this base, he should be able to build, to elaborate and to dilate in such a manner that the resulting advertising, display and decoration carries with it punch and dominance that cannot fail to interest and sell the public, which, it is a well known fact, likes but one idea at a time and that one pounded, hammered and blasted into its attention and favor.

And to encourage the exhibitor who is just making a start at advertising and selling his show along new and modern lines, please remember as James H. Collins says:

"Advertising isn't writing a world beating announcement the first time, nor waiting until everything is perfect before beginning. It's making a start somehow and writing a better ad the second time through experience of the shortcomings of the first, and doing better the second year and hitting a good pace and getting a second wind and going on and on, and on."

That's the secret—"going on and on, and on."

Cleveland Theatre Gives Home Product Music

Mall theatre, Cleveland, O., used a novelty last week that could well be followed in many of the principal cities. In connection with the Metro Picture, "A Sleeping Memory," in which Emily Stevens is starred, chief organist arranged a musical program consisting entirely of compositions of Cleveland musicians.

The program was announced far in advance and scores of music lovers who rarely attended a motion picture exhibition were brought to the theatre. The management believes that there are many of these who were convinced of the artistic character of the offerings and that new regular patrons were made.

Sporting Goods Store Aids Clark Film

During the recent showing of Marguerite Clark in "The Amazons," Hundred Per Cent. Fullerton, advertising manager of the Greater Theatres Company, was able to use an excellent advertising scheme in connection with the window display of Piper & Taft, leading Seattle, Wash., dealers in sporting goods. This Paramount picture deals with an athletic young woman and photographs of Miss Clark in gymnasium suits were used. These were combined with pictures of Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy girls in athletic poses.

This same idea could be worked out in the smaller cities with equal benefit to the exhibitor.

Positive Print Used by Ogden in Novelty

Ogden Pictures Corporation, which is now distributing its first release, Lillian Walker in "Lust of the Ages," has evolved an interesting advertising novelty in the form of a film card in which are inserted tinted and toned cubes of positive film showing actual scenes from the production. Jesse J. Goldburg, manager of productions, has applied for a copyright not only on this card, but on all wherein positive film is used for similar purpose.

The film card issued in connection with "Lust of the Ages" is in the nature of a replica of a war chest. The card for the next Lillian Walker production will be a reproduction of the David Graham Phillips novel, "The Grain of Dust."

These film cards cost $1.32 each to produce.

Walter F. Davis, Manager Palace Theatre, Des Moines

Manager Requires "Thank You" with Every Ticket

Walter F. Davis, manager of the Palace theatre, Des Moines, while a believer in good pictures and always careful in his selection, declared that there is no picture so poor that proper exploitation won't benefit the box office, and that none is so good that it does not need all the advertising the theatre can give it.

Lobby decoration is one of his hobbies and he tries to have a new and striking effect for each production through the use of cut-outs and the printed matter furnished by the exchanges and artistically arranged.

Politeness is one point on which Mr. Davis is a stickler. No ticket is ever accepted at the Palace door without a "thank you" from the ticket taker, and this official is required to remain standing. Mr. Davis believes that the employes should do their resting in their hours off. "It's the little things that count in theatre management," says Mr. Davis.

Mutual on Record for Truthful Posters

Mutual has gone on record, according to announcement from the Chicago headquarters as opposing "camouflage" in posters. H. F. Turrill, who is in charge of the poster work declares that while the public demands realism, Mutual will show nothing on its displays that is not shown in the picture in the same way.

"Mutual prepares its posters with two purposes in mind. They are designed to be attractive enough and bright enough to catch the eye of the passerby, even though he is across the street," says Mr. Turrill. "They are prepared to be so attractive that when, once they have arrested the attention of the passerby, they will create a desire within him to see the production.

"Once the passerby is induced to enter the theatre by a poster which misrepresents the attraction, he is apt never to be induced to enter that same theatre again through the medium of the lobby display. Human nature proves beyond a question of doubt, the fallacy of deceptive paper."

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

LAST week we told you about Theatre F., located in a city of 8,000 people. We also told you that the theatre is not in existence now and that the reason for that was Theatre G. The stories of these two houses form a remarkable contrast in good and bad showmanship.

Theatre F. had been long established when the manager of Theatre G. came to the town. The latter had had no experience in the management of a motion-picture house, but he had ambition and energy and the first thing that he did was to make a careful study of local conditions. He determined that the field was there and that the main thing the matter with the established house was that it did not give the exhibitions that the people deserved.

When we visited this little city both of the theatres were in operation, but it was easy to see which of the two would be in operation a year from then. We have already told you that the manager of Theatre F. attended to his own projection and left the front of the house to a young son and to a cashier who paid much more attention to the beaux of the town than she did to business. And we have told you that the manager had to be content with taking such film service as came to him, for he was tied up seven days a week and unable to make trips to the exchange center close by to see the films.

After the prospective new manager had sized up the city, where he had determined to locate, he went to the exchange center and proceeded to buy his films as he would groceries, hardware or anything else. He looked at the offerings of all the exchanges, sat through showings on current releases, features as well as short subjects, and then made his contracts. One thing he bore in mind through all of his purchases. His town was one created by a single huge plant and therefore the greater part of his patrons would be workingmen, though the majority of them were skilled laborers. These were people who came to the motion picture theatre to be amused by pictures of things that they understood. He knew that his competitor was running sensational features, with a large number of pictures that referred to society life. He knew also that a great portion of the men who were located in his city, a new town, had come there with the intention of staying permanently, that they were buying their own homes and preparing to raise their families there. This drew his conclusion that the pictures must also be such films as children could see and understand. He made these points clear to the exchange men, telling them the sort of pictures that he wanted and directing them to send no other kind.

Naturally there was some trouble thereafter with the film service. There are some exchange men who work on the rule that the small town exhibitor will take any old thing and in a couple of cases the exchanges sent pictures in direct conflict with the rules that the manager had laid down. Repetition of this brought cancellations and finally the manager was able to get the very pictures that he wanted.

Then he proceeded to put personality into his house. In the first place he hired an operator for his projection room, in contrast with Theatre F., getting the services of a young electrician. At first he put his wife in his box office and he hired a couple of young men, one to act regularly as usher and the other to spend the greater part of the time at the same duties, but to relieve the management on the door. Then the manager set out to become personally acquainted with every person in the town.

There was one newspaper published in the town. The manager took this proprietor into his confidence and told him that he needed publicity and that he could only pay for results. A reduced priced admission card which was printed along with the advertisement was used as the basis for his rate, which eventually turned out to be a higher rate than the newspaper was getting from any other class of advertiser.

Remember that we have told you that practically everyone in the city worked for the single big manufacturing plant and the others were storekeepers and various businesses dependent on these workmen. One of the first things to which this manager gave study was the physical aspect of the factory. He quickly saw that practically everyone leaving work took one of three routes. So he obtained permission from the company to put up three billboards, one on each route, and on these he made the announcements for the evening at his theatre. It cost a little money, but everyone in the factory knew what he was going to have that night and quickly people who had never been to a "movie" before began coming to his house.

Then the personal part when they did come. He made it a point to find out who they were and to mail them a copy of his weekly program, which was printed on a small sheet and inexpensive. He didn't lose any time in "hooking" a customer and after that time his personal interest never relaxed. There was always a greeting and finally the greeting became conversation, and in hundreds of instances developed into personal friendships.

In less than a year every man employed by the great company began to regard the theatre as a part of the plant—came to feel that it was created especially for them.

Do you think there is any doubt about the reason that Theatre G. is today doing a business that nets the proprietor $3,000 a year and Theatre F. is out of business?

And you can make this your theatre.

UNQUESTIONABLY one of the most remarkable presentations in the history of motion pictures.

That is our opinion of the entire bill at the Rialto theatre this week which has as its feature, Geraldine Farrar in the Artcraft production of "The Woman God Forgot." Please mark well that we have said the entire bill, for the method of presentation had enormous amount to do with the thrall under which one was left at the end of the performance.

Mr. Rothapfel had splendid material in this great feature, but to that he added the resources of his wonder house and the fullest power of his genius. He rearranged his entire program to achieve the effect, for never was the tempo of a performance more artistic, convincing and moving than this.

Ordinarily, the feature is shown in the middle of the presentation. This week it is left to the end. Let us show you why and give you Mr. Rothapfel's reasons for reversing his plans to achieve the effect that he secured. It is amazing what brains applied to pictures and music to accompany them, and the keeping of everything in harmony with the motive can attain.

"Carneval," Op. 92, is the overture and this selection, singing the festive side of life was splendidly played. Rather light, with joy permeating its theme it left one spiritually on one's toes in expectation.

Rialto Animated Magazine this week includes pictures of the Liberty Loan parade in New York, scenes which were met with smashing applause. Note the opening and then the closing numbers of the magazine. This was followed by pictures showing President Wilson signing the food bill, a close up of Hoover and appeals for food conservation. Great applause met the showing of the new Liberty Truck and its inspection by the President and Thomas A. Edison. Then a few views of Thos. W. Lawson's famous dogs, and bucking bronchos at the San Fancisco "Rodeo," which gave a reverse English on the comedy effect. The lumber yard fire scene from St. Louis furnished some thrills, and gave the orchestra a chance for some of its novel musical effects. Then came a lot of laughs with Jeff and Mutt in "Laughing Gas." Following this was another patriotic scene showing U. S. Marines at drill, and this faded into a Hy Mayer cartoon which showed the eagle hatching her eggs from which came a huge fleet of aeroplanes and a deluge of Liberty Bonds. You see how the effect of the opening was brought back —and with the sort of a smash that drives home.

One little touch was added after the showing of the "At Your Service, Boys," of the Rialto, when there was flashed on the screen the names of those who are doing their bit. This was shown to the tune of "Keep the Home Fires Burning," and got from the audience the sort of applause that is a real tribute to the boys that have gone.

Mlle. Madeline D'Espincy, who has won such a warm place in the hearts of Rialto patrons with her wonderful soprano voice, sang the waltz from "La Bohème," a light, airy and joyful song.

"Twelve Good Hens and True," a Drew comedy and one of the cleverest that the pair have ever produced, followed and with the music, "Jump Jim Crow," from "Maytime," "Bees" and "Rooster Rag," played slowly and very pianissimo, made the comedy much more effective.

Now get the presentation of the feature. The lighting effects of the theatre were used to the fullest effect, the red lighting furnishing the flashing effect now strong, now dim, while the orchestra played the prelude of Victor Herbert's Natomah, amplified. Curtains at either side of the stage parted, showing young girls dancing and burning incense in the spirit of sacrifice, an offering to the gods, the theme of the feature to follow.

The capacity audience sat spellbound, not knowing what was to come. And while we think of it, Mr. Rothapfel said to us afterward: "I wish it were possible not to ever have a program in my theatre. I want the audiences to get the fullest effect without anticipation of what is coming." And one who attends the Rialto with regularity gets the atmosphere with each of the presentations and the atmosphere is the added artistic touch. Then came the picture, and with it the most wonderful musical score that a picture has ever been given. There are one hundred and four music cues as Rothapfel arranged them—more than there are in grand opera, and they were rendered by the orchestra in a truly wonderful fashion, especially when one considers that here had been but one partial rehearsal. It is the splendid training that the orchestra has been given, the tireless work of Rothapfel and Dr. Reisenfeld, and the hearty cooperation of every musician that makes this possible.

The lighting of the screen at the beginning of the feature, with red on one side and purple in the middle, and the great effect in the center added an artistic touch that came in strongly with the scenes portrayed.

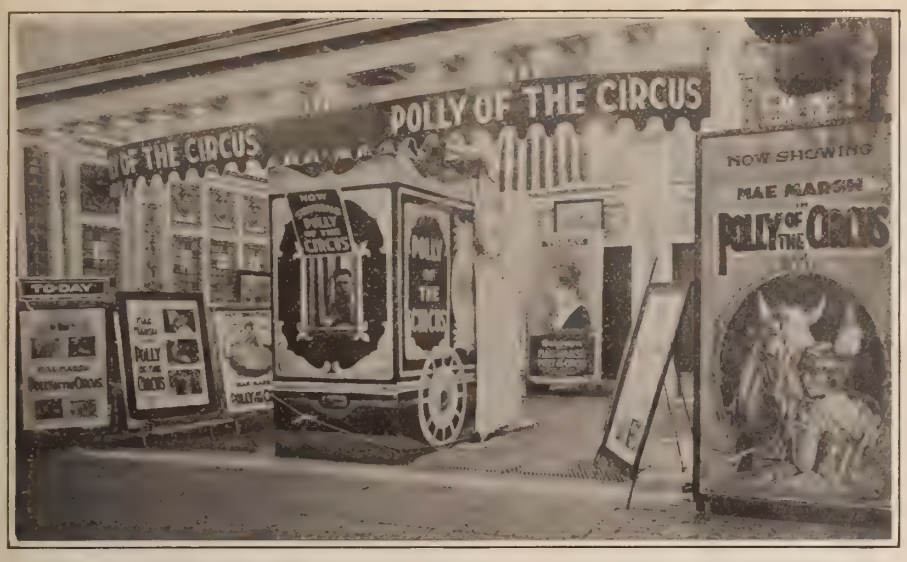
The music incidental to the pictures includes the works of Bizet, Elgar, Moskowsky, Meyerbeer, Debussy, Leroux, Rimsky, Korsakow, Sandonai and Gluck, mainly exotic music which fits into the wonderful story of Montezuma. And do not forget the organ effect, the cresecenda appeal which came with the motive of the production, the flag bearing the cross and the words, "In this sign we conquer." One has not space here to even attempt to tell how this music carried the pictures, and even if there were pages words are lame without the symphonies, the cries to the passion, the voice of the battle, the song of lust and the sonnets of love that were brought from the array of musicians.

And then following the picture was an organ solo by Dr. A. G. Robyn, extemporized music built around his conception of the picture. One could hear the minor keys crying to the major, the voices singing in the reeds, the call of battle, and the triumph of the flag intermingled. It followed the spirit of the picture wonderfully, and we asked what could be this great work that fitted so well, and we would have been surprised to learn that it was extemporized, if we were ever surprised at anything done at the Rialto. But we can never be, for out of the Rothapfel mind that conceives the whole of a presentation had come the perfection of his work—and the result was but one thing—marvelous.

It proves that such presentations gain by being "manipulated" up to the time of the feature all was either comedy or news feature. Then came the marked contrast with the big smashing effect of the feature. And then the haunting "repeal" of the organ music.

All of this made it a picture none will forget and it created "word of mouth" advertising money cannot buy.

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF OCT. 21



MARGUERITE CLARK, at the Strand theatre this week in the second of the Mary Roberts Rinehart stories of the "flapper girl," kept the audiences in a constant roar of laughter at the story of "Bab's Burglar." The same cast which was seen in the first picture again appears and once more the titles are charming and full of joy.

The Strand Review contains a large number of excellent subjects, most of which are from Hearst-Pathe. It opens with pictures of the Liberty Loan parade, showing the Italian aeroplane circling the city and the British tank moving up Fifth avenue. Rechristening the captured German U-boat and the visit of the U. S. mission to Roumania follow. Then there is a Strand special picture showing the methods of aerial photography. Great bursts of applause came with the celebration at Epernay, France, of turning back the Germans three years ago. The marching French troops got a big volume of applause. Paramount-Bray shows harvesting war timbers in Maine, and there were scenes from Redwood City, Cal., showing the building of the merchant fleet, followed by drills of five thousand sailors at the Great Lakes camp and of Marines at Quanico, Va.

Victor Moore is seen in "Faint Heart and Fair Lady," a very funny creation, and the other number is "Smaller Monkeys," a Ditmar's picture.

The overture is "Il Guarany." Herbert Waterous, basso, sang "The Lost Chord" before a special cathedral setting. Grace Hoffman, coloratura soprano, sang "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto." The closing organ solo is Gounod's "Marche Solennelle."

Mae Marsh is next week's star.

Nebraska Theaters Profit Through Capitalizing Patriotism In Pictures

THIS country is just getting a real start into the war. The people are only beginning to realize that there is a great struggle ahead. There's going to be a lot of unpleasant things that come out of it, but just now, before any casualty lists have been reported, the motion picture theatre has a splendid chance to take advantage of any film that offers the patriotic sentiment.

Newspapers have been fond of telling us that the Middle West seems to be less concerned about the Fight for Freedom than any other section, yet one mail brings us in this record of the activities of theatres in the Nebraska section.

The Empress theatre, Fremont, Neb., is advertising in the newspapers, and its lobby displays "The Latest War News" ahead of any feature attraction that may be booked for that day, and the box office is showing excellent returns.

In Beatrice, Neb., the Lyric theatre showed "The Stolen Treaty," a picture that was made before the war began and advertised it as a tale of government affairs and secret service agents. Attention was called to this film as a portrayal of conditions that cause wars.

George Monroe, manager of the Jewel theatre, in the same city, reports that "A Soldier of the Legion" drew big crowds simply because it sounded like a war picture. He used posters in front of his theatre which emphasized the war tone of the picture.

"The Hidden Children," a story which tells of the conflict between the Americans and the British in the War of the Revolution, attracted unusual attention at the Wonderland, Hastings, Neb., because the management emphasized that it told the story of American pioneers fighting for the flag, establishing the right to freedom.

Kearney, Neb., newspapers carried big advertising when "The Star Spangled Banner" was shown there, and newspapers declare that the most enthusiastic crowds that ever saw a film attended.

The Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Nebraska, featured the use of an aereplone when "On Record" was shown there.

There was no faking in the advertising of any of these pictures. There was no effort made to persuade the patrons that they were pictures of the present war. Only the spirit of the film was used in the advertising.

It's well and good to emphasize the patriotic spirit in your pictures, but do not go further than they allow, or there is likely to be a revulsion in sentiment at the cost of your patronage. A patriotic picture, or one with the underlying notice, should be dealt with just as honestly as any other. There's a strong appeal today to any film that deals with the present or the past struggles of this country. But go slow in exaggeration.

Parade Advertises Opening of "Liberty" Serial

Another exhibitor has been converted to the use of stunts to put over a picture. S. E. Koedel, of the Washington theatre, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., at the suggestion of the Make It Pay Department of the Universal Film Exchange of New York, used an old but effective means for starting the serial "Liberty."

Koedel procured a band of forty pieces from the N. Y. Juvenile Asylum and also a number of Boy Scouts. Four little girls were dressed to represent Liberty and Koedel donned his old army uniform and carried a sign giving full information about the opening episode. With this outfit Koedel then led the parade over the main streets of the town and managed to arrive at the public school at the time the children were being dismissed. As an attention-getter the parade was a big success, but what was most important was the fact that the Washington theatre was jammed that evening and the same was true one week later.

Bunny Theatre Resumes Children's Matinees

Under the supervision of Jane Stannard Johnson, who has set a new mark in special children's matinees, these were resumed Saturday, Oct. 20, at the Bunny theatre, 147th street and Broadway. These special performances were begun last year and continued successfully for six months. They are held every Saturday morning at ten o'clock during the winter season at an admission price of ten cents.

The program for the second of these exhibitions was the film fairy tale, "Alice in Wonderland," done in true fairy form, a Paramount Pictograph showing industrial and educational subjects and a Paramount-Bray crayon of "Bobby Bups" and his dog.

Mrs. Johnson is especially pleased with the interest being shown in these performances by the principals and teachers of the schools in the vicinity and the hearty cooperation of parents. Children within a radius of fifteen blocks flock to the Bunny for these exhibitions. The mothers' meetings discuss the performances and the parents associations include these performances on their programs with a qualified speaker to present the subject.

Mrs. Johnson hopes that the whole country will become interested in these special matinees and prove that children do count, and that this series will go.

Farrar and Rothapfel Exchange Felicitations

Just before the first showing of "The Woman God Forgot" at the Rialto theatre Sunday, Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel received the following message from Geraldine Farrar, star of the production, and her husband, Lou-Tellegen, who are now in Boston:

"Our best wishes and hopes that picture will prove a success mutually."

Mr. Rothapfel, after the first showing of the feature, wired back congratulating the star on her splendid work and another message from the house chief told of the capacity crowds. At three in the afternoon it was impossible to get to the entrance of the theatre and all during the day tickets were sold subject to delay, and lines a block long were maintained.

On account of the enormous patronage the Rialto is opening at 10 a. m. each day during the engagement.

Vitagraph Posts 12,000 New 24-Sheets on Serial

Greater Vitagraph announces that it has completed posting of 12,000 additional 24-sheets on "The Fighting Trail," the serial featuring William Duncan and Carol Holloway. This is the third stage of the Vitagraph exploitation, the first being 12,000 24-sheets posted in all cities of the United States and Canada of over 10,000 population four weeks before the first episode and standing for a month, and the second being the issuance of a comprehensive plan book. The second set of different 24-sheets will also remain up for a month.

In addition Vitagraph is furnishing exhibitors free all the 24-sheets they will post.

Gail Kane in "A Game of Wits"—The Woman Wins in This Little Game

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

A woman's wit invariably comes to the rescue of one who is sincere in her desire to do the right thing, not alone for herself but for others. In a late release from the American studios, on the Mutual program, Gail Kane, whose exhibitions before the camera are always marked by quality acting, presents the role of Jeannette Browning, whose father, once wealthy, has lost his fortune over-night and is given the opportunity of retrieving his fortune at the expense of his beautiful daughter whom he must sacrifice to the care of a man whom she does not love. By accident Jeannette overhears the discussion wherein Silas Stone tells her father that if he will consent to give his daughter to him in marriage, he will save her father from financial ruin. Jeannette thereafter proceeds to carry out a plan which she feels sure will settle the argument to the satisfaction of at least one of the contracting parties. Her plan works to perfection and she is not only saved from becoming the wife of the man she does not love but she makes the man pay dearly for his ungentlemanly tactics in choosing a wife. How does she accomplish this? The answer is, "woman's wit." It will all be told in detail on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week when "A Game of Wits" is shown. Gail Kane is the prime mover in this little game of wits and outpoints her opponent in every scene. In the supporting cast are: George Periolat, Spottiswood Aitken and Louis J. Cody.

"The Flaming Omen," a five-part Vitagraph picture, directed by William Wolbert, with Alfred Whitman and Mary Anderson presenting the principal roles, is a picture you all want to see. It is something different from the average run. Novel in its construction, it gets away from the high, romantic drama and runs into the realm of the cave men of long ago. The opening scenes are laid in Peru, in the country of the Incas, the tribe of image worshipers, who still retain the heathenish traits. An Englishman gets into this country and marries a native girl. A child is born, the Englishman strikes riches and deserts his wife and child and returns to his native country, England. Later an English Lord, passing through the country, on a leisure trip, finds the mother and child, lying beside the image of Inti, the Sun God. He adopts the child. Twenty years later the child has grown to manhood and is now known as the "Red Prince" and successor to the wealth and estates of Lord Haviland. His father whom he does not remember, has married again. His daughter is a visitor at the Haviland estate. She loves the "Red Prince." He meets Blanca, a girl from the Incas country who is attending finishing school in London. He has a strange desire to go to Peru. There he learns the secret of his early existence and learns also that the girl who loves him is his own sister. "The Flaming Omen" has a new interest in every foot of its multiple reelage. There is action aplenty and the members of the cast do exceptionally fine work. Otto Lederer, S. H. Jennings and Clara King are other members of the cast.

"The Flaming Omen" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Alfred Whitman and Mary Anderson are in the leading roles.

(Fox Six-Reel Production)

"The Scarlet Pimpernel," by Baroness Orczy, one of the "best sellers" of its time, has been adapted to the screen and produced by William Fox, with Dustin Farnum in the featured role. Adventure, romance, intrigue—every element that goes to make an entertaining picture—are contained in this special production and the management of the ——— theatre has no hesitancy in inviting his patrons, one and all, to see this wonder picture. Full of action and stirring events, this work of Baroness Orczy adapts itself to the screen with all the vigor which the story itself suggests. Dustin Farnum shines forth as an artist in this, his first special production under the banner of Fox pictures. Assisting Mr. Farnum in interpreting the action in this story are: Winifred Kingston, William Buress, Bertram Grassby, Bert Hadley, Howard Gaye, Willard Louis and Jack Nelson. Most of the scenes are laid in France during the time of the French Revolution. Sir Percy Blackeney is known as "The Scarlet Pimpernel," and he is leader of a band of Englishmen who go to France to rescue condemned French aristocrats. Chauvelin, the Revolutionary chief, exerts every influence to discover the identity of the fearless Englishman. He gets information that Pimpernel is the man and he attempts to coerce him through his wife by threathening the safety of her brother. The events that follow the discovery that Pimpernel is the man who is making life miserable for the revolutionary forces, serve as the foundation for some of the best action ever transferred to the screen of a theatre.

At the ——— theatre ——— of ——— week, Dustin Farnum in "The Scarlet Pimpernel."

Betty Brice in "Loyalty"—Drama Depicting Reformation of Drug Fiend

(Oro Pictures Six-Reel Production)

In "Loyalty" patrons of the ——— theatre will have an opportunity to see a gripping photoplay based on this cardinal virtue. It tells the story of an actress who married a worthless fellow addicted to the drug habit. Because of her marriage she loses her position on the stage and is unable to gain another. The man goes from bad to worse and soon becomes almost a hopeless drug fiend. The girl has her opportunity to forsake him, to go back to her old life on the stage at which she was so successful, but instead she remains loyal. It is no easy matter, but summoning all her spare strength and courage she puts the proposition to him squarely—that she will stick by him if only he will make one slight effort to mend his ways. And so in the wonderful mountain air the man's regeneration is begun and the girl has the satisfaction of restoring her husband to his people—the people who once snubbed her—a man in every respect. This gripping drama is the first picture to be presented by the newly formed Oro Pictures, and is certain to be a successful initial offering. Betty Brice, long a stage favorite on the Pacific coast, brings life to the role of the actress, while Jay Morley and Murdock MacQuarrie carry the other principal roles to fine advantage. Do not miss this picture when it comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Belgian" Tells of German Spy System—Presents Romance of Great War

(Sidney Olcott Players, Inc., Seven-Reel Production)

When "The Belgian," a seven-part special production, comes to the ——— theatre, patrons will have an opportunity of witnessing one of the most unusual productions of the year. The secrets of the German spy system which was so complete before the outbreak of the war, but which in these days is being shattered by the steady pounding of the secret service of the Allied Nations, comes in for a striking expose. The agents of the German government went to such extreme lengths, one case of which is exemplified in "The Belgian" as to place their agents in important government positions in their enemy's employ. This spy is postmaster in the little Belgian village where the story opens, and his constant access to all the mails put him in touch with the doings of the entire country around. But the fellow comes to grief when the little army collected by the village shoots him down like a dog. Interwoven with this spy expose is one of the most appealing love stories in the world, which Walker Whiteside, a well-known stage actor, and Miss Valentine Grant, an old favorite with picture patrons, admirably interpret. The picture was written by Frederic Arnold Kummer, whose stories you have seen in many of the popular magazines of the day, and Sidney Olcott transferred it to the screen. You will also be interested to know that the battle scenes in "The Belgian" were personally supervised by a member of the British army who has served two years on the battle front and who came to the United States on a furlough. To this extent has the producing company gone to secure accuracy in its entertainment, but this is only one of the many cases where "The Belgian" stands out from the current pictures of the day. The best thing for you to do is to see it when it comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Herbert Rawlinson Featured in Thrilling Crook Play, "The Man Trap"

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

The injustice of political intrigue, the injustice of the "third degree," and the vindication of an innocent victim of crooked public officials are the revelations that will be made when "The Man Trap," the latest Bluebird featuring Herbert Rawlinson, is shown on the screen of the ——— theatre. Mr. Rawlinson, who is featured in this production, will be remembered for his excellent work in "Come Through." "The Man Trap" is another "crook" play that will thrill with every scene that is thrown on the screen. Mr. Rawlinson has the part of John Mull, a reporter on the staff of a daily newspaper. He is in love with Bess Miller, the ward of a crooked politician. Burton Grange, son of the district attorney, is his rival for the hand of Bess. Mull gives information that assists Steadman and the police inspector to "put over" a grafting scheme. The information is given by Mull in the course of his duty. Steadman and the inspector implicate Mull and he is sentenced to a long term in prison by the court. Mull escapes from prison and sets out to get revenge. The events which follow his escape and the methods which he employs to bring his accusers to justice are set forth in this Bluebird production with all the interest of reality. There is action every minute—action that keeps you guesing until the run of the final reel, when everything is explained and justice prevails over big odds.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "The Man Trap," with Herbert Rawlinson in the leading role.

"The Savage," a Drama of the Great Northwest—Full of Action and Surprises

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

The Mounted Police of the great Northwest have furnished material for many thrilling novels of the adventurous life which members of this police force lead. The Mounted Police, of Northwest Canada and the Rangers along the Mexican frontier are without a doubt the most efficient police protection in the world. They are called upon to risk their lives time and time again and ther lives are in constant danger. Bluebird has produced a five-reel, featured under the direction of Rupert Julian, that of the adventures of this body of police. Ruth Clifford has the principal feminine role and Monroe Salisbury, noted for his characterizations of strong, red-blooded men of the plains, is in chief support. Others in the supporting cast are: Colleen Moore, Allen Sears, W. H. Brainbridge, Arthur Travers, George Franklin and Duke Lee. These stars of Bluebird stock enact a strong, powerful drama—full of life action, adventure and all. There is not a dull moment to be experienced in reviewing this feature. Through it all runs a love romance—a romance such as is experienced by the men of the North—men who know not of the polished manners of their neighbors farther South, but who know the meaning of justice and whose hearts are in the right place. There is fascination in every scene and the beautiful stretches of the Northern country are placed before your eyes.

"The Savage," a Bluebird production, will be at the ——— theatre ——— week. Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury featured.

George Hernandez in "Up or Down"—Something Different in Western Drama

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

George Hernandez, whom you will remember for his comedy in Olive Thomas's last Triangle feature, "Broadway Arizona," and who is conceded by some critics to be among the best droll comedians in the silent drama, is featured in a late Triangle picture titled "Up or Down," a comedy-drama of the Western species. The comedian presents the role of "Dallas" Mike, a victim of circumstance, who has just arrived into the open from the confines of the prison walls. He is "up against" it and has about decided upon a plan to get together some ready money, by the "easy" method, when he meets, by accident, Allan Corey, an aspiring author who is looking for an "idea." He suggests to Mike that they get together on the matter, and Mike agrees. Corey gives up his city apartment and he and Mike strike out for the West. Passing through the Rancho Verde district, an accident happens which brings pretty Esther Hollister on the scene, and she, being the owner of a large and profitable ranch, invites them to stay awhile. Mike is hired as a puncher and Corey continues to look for the "idea." Mike has faint idea of the "idea" Corey needs, so he stages a series of hold-ups, for which a noted bandit is charged, and the entire country is on the lookout for "Texas" Jack, the bandit. As the events and robberies take place, Corey jots them down until he has written a story, and it is accepted by the publishers. The bandits are caught by Corey and afterwards liberated by Mike, who decides to wash his hands clean forever more of crime.

"Up and Down," with George Hernandez featured, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Taylor Holmes in "Two-Bit Seats"—As Good as the Best Comedy-Drama

(Essanay Five-Reel Production)

"Two-Bit Seats," Taylor Holmes's third picture for the screen, is a roaring comedy drama that is guaranteed to make the most sedate personage in a motion picture audience ripple with laughter. It is not "slap-stick," but clean, wholesome comedy, enacted by an artist of both screen and stage. Taylor Holmes is known from coast to coast for his comedy "bits" on the vaudeville stage. In "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" he made a big hit. Those of you who saw this picture will vouch for this assertion. The critics proclaimed the picture one of the best bits of comedy drama seen for some time on the screen. In his latest comedy, "Two-Bit Seats," you will find Mr. Holmes as funny as ever and if anything a bit more so. His leading woman in this picture is Marguerite Clayton, whose work before the camera is as familiar to the millions as some of the best known stars. The play was adapted from the American magazine story of the same name and contains some of the best bits of original comedy ever enacted. The part fits Mr. Holmes to perfection and he takes advantage of every situation and "puts it over" big. He presents the part of a young clerk who, although working for a small salary, insists upon two-dollar seats at the theatre. It happens that on one particular occassion the orchestra is sold out, and he is obliged to go to the gallery, in the "two-bit" section. He is given a seat next to that occupied by a very charming young person who insists upon his attention by jabbing him with a hat-pin. He accompanies her home and thereafter they are sweethearts. His boss, who has seen him in the gallery, commends him for his economy and gives him a promotion. The good news is broken to his charming friend of the "two-bit" seat, and it is decided that his new salary will be sufficient to support two.

Taylor Holmes, star of "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in "Two-Bit Seats," on ——— of ——— week.

Harry Carey in Old-Time Western Drama, "A Marked Man"—Butterfly

(Butterfly Five-Reel Production)

Harry Carey in an "old-time" Western drama —this is what you will see on the screen of the ——— theatre ——— week when "A Marked Man," a five-part Butterfly feature, is shown. Harry Carey is the featured player and characterizes the "old-time" Westerner with all the "tricks of the trade." In the supporting cast are Mrs. Townsend, Harry Rattenbury, Molly Malone, Vester Pegg and William Gettinger—all stars of Butterfly stock. A Western drama carries a touch of interest—real interest that is not aroused within us by any other form of drama. There is always the human appeal. The majority of us have never experienced the real thrill of meeting face to face the life as it was lived in the days of the "wild woolly" West. Here is a chance for you if you like this life on the screen. He knows the life from start to finish. He presents the role of "Cheyenne" Harry, a good-bad man. He receives a letter from his aged mother, asking him to return to her in the East. But he is under the eye of the law. He escapes from his hiding place in the mountains and, in order to obtain money to visit his mother, determines upon one more robbery. He is caught but freed at the request of the daughter of the man he attempted to rob. She had read the letter from his mother. He is allowed to go free, meets an old pal and is induced to rob the stage. He is taken and accused of the murder of the stage driver. His mother, not hearing from him, determines to visit him, and the sheriff gives him two weeks' grace. See how "Cheyenne" makes out in "A Marked Man," at the ——— theatre.

Alice Brady in "The Maid of Belgium"—Pathetic Story of German Atrocity

(World Five-Reel Production)

The story of a Belgian refugee is told in the latest World Picture, "The Maid of Belgium," featuring Alice Brady. This is one of the most powerful dramas ever produced, whose subject matter deals with the terrible conditions which exist in Belgium at the present time. Prior to the time of the German invasion, everything was peace and quiet in that country. After the Teutons had swept through Belgium, they left nothing but waste in their wake. Not only was the country devastated, but the men, women and children were maltreated, the women ravished and the men tortured who stood in defense of their wives and daughters. "The Maid of Belgium," in which Alice Brady appears as the star, deals with this condition and tells of a Belgian girl found by the roadside by a party of American tourists and taken to America, with her mind a blank as to the terrible happenings. She is taken into the home of the Americans and treated as their own daughter would have been. She becomes a mother and her benefactress, whose husband is abroad on business, decides to take the child as her own, for she knows that it is the fondest wish of her husband to have his home brightened by the laughter of a child. Adoree consents to this plan but later decides to steal the child. She does so and is lost in her wanderings. She is injured and her mind restored. Her husband, who is an officer in Belgium and whom she thought was lost, is found, and there is a happy reunion of husband and wife.

"The Maid of Belgium" is one of the best screen dramas in which Alice Brady has been seen. She will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

YOU ARE INVITED TO SEND YOUR IDEAS HERE

¶ We have had scores of letters from exhibitors telling us how they enjoy reading "Your Idea—and Ours." This department is truly the exhibitors' own and we will be very glad to hear from showmen everywhere as to stunts that they are using, clever advertising that they are doing, etc.

¶ And we won't camouflage you by telling you that the idea is a good one when it is not. Helpful criticism is a tonic of the business.

"Peggy Leads the Way"—Mary Miles Minter Is Peggy—Comedy-Drama

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

The little actress whom you can designate by 3 M's—Mary Miles Minter—comes to the ——— theatre in "Peggy Leads the Way." Peggy—or Mary—always has led the way when it was a question of sincere entertainment. She does so in her latest picture. Peggy makes the folks back home sit up and take notice when she arrives in the little mountainous village in California, fresh from the social surroundings of an Eastern boarding school. Ever since she could remember she had been in the East and because her father supplied her with plenty of money, she was under the impression that he was a prosperous business man in California. A woman's curiosity got the better of her and she decides to go to California and investigate. She is more than surprised when she finds that her father is the proprietor of an ill-kept general store, with the usual bunch of "hangers-on." Peggy takes a hand at management and effects a decided change. Roland Gardner, who has bought up the land for miles around, gives notice to the villagers that they are not to trespass. Peggy realizing that this action will mean that many of the villagers will starve, sets out to beat Gardner at "his own game." There comes a heavy storm and flood. Gardner and his guests are left without provisions and are compelled to visit the store. Peggy charges Gardner fabulous prices and in the end he consents to withdraw the order. Peggy is assisted in her plans by Gardner's son, whom she decides to make her husband.

Mary Miles Minter in "Peggy Leads the Way," a five-part comedy-drama, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

William Desmond Characterizes the Weakling in "Fighting Back"—Western

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

A "sure-fire" Western drama, with plenty of action, gripping plot, a popular screen star, a strong supporting cast and last but not least, the scenes at a rodeo or cowboy's outing, at which bare-back riding, bucking bronchos, and daring deeds with wild steers, are the orders of the day—this and more is what you will see when "Fighting Back" comes to the ——— theatre ———. William Desmond is the featured player. In the supporting cast are: Claire McDowell, Jack Richardson, Curley Baldwin, Pete Morrison, William Ellingford, Thomas H. Guise, Thorton Edwards and Josie Sedgwick. In this picture Mr. Desmond gives one of the best characterizations of his screen career. He is called the "Weakling" because the punchers who find him exhausted on the plains, fail in their endeavors to arouse within him a spark of nerve. The "Weakling" accepts their taunts and goes his own way. He is hired by the foreman of the ranch and on pay-day he goes with the punchers to the nearest town for a "blow-out." He meets a dance hall girl and she falls in love with him, but he offers her no encouragement until the day of the rodeo meet, when something happens that shows the true colors under which the "Weakling" is traveling. He shows his skill astride a horse, and for the last time he takes an interest in the dance-hall girl in her defense, gives the boss of the dance hall a beating. Later he visits the dance hall and the boss, seeking revenge, again insists upon a fight. He gets what he is looking for and the "Weakling" and the girl leave for the fort. The "Weaking" is an officer of the army, who had been unjustly accused of a traitorous deed. This is one of the best Western pictures ever produced and the scenes showing the events which take place at a rodeo meet are true to life, full of action and daring deeds by cowboys.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "Fighting Back," with William Desmond in the featured role.

"The Best Man"—How Fate Takes a Hand in Reforming a Drunkard

(General Four-Reel Production)

The man who is addicted to drink or any other habit that is ruining both his health and career, needs a strong incentive to conquer the habit. His friends can counsel with him and even admonish him for letting the habit get the better of him, but all is of no avail. But a pretty girl can come into the life of such a man and unconsciously he will endeavor to break himself of the habit for her sake. This is what happens when Arnold Hammond goes to a small fishing village on the coast, to try and shake off the curse of drink. He is placed under the care of a country doctor, whose daughter Arnold meets. From the minute he meets her the desire comes upon him, to forever abstain from drink and he does so. A villager also loves the girl and she finds it difficult to choose between the two men. Again Fate takes a hand. Arnold invites the girl for a yachting trip and engages the other suitor to man the yacht. During the trip the villager shows his true worth by attempting to force Arnold to drink. He himself drinks heavily. A storm comes up and the yacht is overturned. The party is rescued and the girl no longer is in doubt as to the better man of the two. William Ehfe presents the role of Arnold Hammond. Margaret Landis has the principal feminine role. Others in the cast are: Capt. Nicholson, Mollie McDonnell, Clifford B. Gray and Frank Brownlee. The feature is in four reels and every reel is characterized by strong dramatic action.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "The Best Man," with William Ehfe and Margaret Landis in the leading roles.

Mme. Petrova in "More Truth Than Poetry"—Written by Herself—Enacts Dual Role

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Riches seldom bring happiness—perhaps this is what the author of "More Truth Than Poetry" had reference to when she wrote this story which has been adapted to the screen by Emma B. Clifton and produced for the Metro Pictures Corporation, under the direction of Burton L. King. Mme. Petrova is the author—Mme. Petrova is the one who enacts the dual role of Elaine Esmond and Vera Maitland—and Mme. Petrova is she who endows this appealing drama with a certain vital "something" that seems to speak from the screen. "More Truth Than Poetry" is in five parts. Mme. Petrova's leading man in this production is Mahlon Hamilton, who also presents a dual role. In the supporting cast are: Charles Martin, Violet Reed, Harry Burkhardt, Mary Sands, William B. Davidson and Anthony Merlo. Briefly the story tells of how Vera Maitland, the daughter of a "steel king," sacrifices everything in order that her husband may be successful in the legal profession and then—once traveling the road of success, he forgets the one who has been responsible for his success and showers his affections upon another. Enraged at his apparent neglect, she acts and quickly. She learns that her husband is stopping at a hotel with one of his "friends" and going there she surprises them and shoots her husband dead. A trial is had, she pleads that she does not ask for mercy, but justice. The question arises, "Is there one law for the woman and another for the man?" The last scenes of this appealing drama show Elaine Esmond, the novelist, completing the last sentence of her new novel entitled, "More Truth Than Poetry."

Mme. Petrova, the screen's greatest emotional actress, seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her own screen drama.

THE WORLD MARKET

M. Monat, French Buyer, Arrives in New York

Prominent Paris Film Man Discusses Plans with Motion Picture News Export Editor—Has Nine Subjects—In Market to Buy, Too

M. Monat

MONSIEUR M. MONAT, one of the most important figures in French cinematographic circles, came to this country on a French steamer last Thursday.

M. Monat has been expected in New York several weeks, the announcement of his pending arrival having been published in this department more than one month ago.

A cablegram from Monatfilm, Paris, was received by the export editor last Wednesday, instructing him to accept and hold all mail and telegrams for M. Monat.

Friday morning, Monsieur Monat accompanied by the manager of his Paris office, Maurice Meyer, together with a lieutenant in the French air service, called at MOTION PICTURE NEWS office, where they will make their headquarters during their one or two months' stay.

Messrs. Monat and Meyer have come to New York for a two-fold purpose, to buy and sell. Their chief object is to secure motion pictures suitable to the French taste.

"We have no use for seven, eight and nine-reel subjects," said M. Monat to the export editor. "Our public must have action, and that action must be condensed to suitable lengths, namely, five reels or less. In exceptional cases we can of course become interested in subjects of greater length. We appreciate that many French pictures are not suitable to the American people and the same rule holds true regarding American films in France. I cannot describe one or the other limitation in a few words. I must see the pictures."

Monsieur Monat brought with him from Paris nine French subjects, the titles of which follow:

Series Mistinguette: "Chignon d'Or" ("Golden Hair"), 5 reels; "Fleur de Paris" ("Flower of Paris"), 5 reels. Both these were produced by Hugon.

Series Musidora: "Chacals" ("Jakals"), 6 reels; "Requins" (No literal translation), 5 reels. Produced by Hugon.

Series M. L. Derval: "Sous La Menace" ("Under the Menace"), 5 reels. Produced by Succes.

Patriotic film: "Gloire Rouge" ("The Red Glory"), 5 reels. Produced by Aubert.

"Le Roi de la Mer" ("The King of the Sea"), 5 reels. Produced by Aubert.

"L'Ocean" ("The Ocean"), 5 reels. Produced by Lumina.

"Le Balcony de la Mort" ("The Balcony of Death"), 5 reels. Produced by Andréani.

Monsieur Monat served in the French army for one year and a half, most of that time being spent in the front line trenches. He was permanently retired from active duty a few months ago, suffering from shell-shock and trench sickness. He has been "over the top" half a dozen times.

M. Monat and Maurice Meyer will receive all mail, telegrams, etc., at this office. Letters and telegrams should be addressed to them in care of the Export Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, N. Y.

THE FAR EAST

¶ Important and Interesting facts relative to conditions existing in the film markets of the Far East will be brought out in an exclusive article to be published in this department next week.

Miles Learns Second Hand Films Are to Be Taxed

Joseph Miles, who distributes films to Central and South America and Mexico, informs the export editor that he has received advices from parties close to the administration at Washington that it is the intention of the framers of the new tax on films that the levy also be made on second-hand films, the tax applying on films for export as well as those for domestic consumption.

As much of the film exported from this country is second-hand, the new duty would be ruinous. At the time of going to press no reply to the telegraphic inquiry to Washington regarding this new development has brought an answer.

It is hoped that the report received by Mr. Miles is erroneous. The export editor is of the belief that the ruling handed down by the customs office or by a court when a test case is brought for trial will accede to exporters the right to draw back, as was stated in this department last week. In such case export of second-hand films would be subject to no duty.

Mrs. Howells Return from East

Mrs. Adelle Howells returned to New York recently from a long trip through the Orient with her husband, who represents Selznick, Metro and a large number of independent producers in the Far East. Mr. Howells has just arrived in Singapore, according to a cablegram received by his brother last Friday. He has just completed a trip through Japan, China, the Philippines, Java, Indo-China, Siam and will now proceed to India. Mrs. Howells left him at Manila.

Chaplins Closed for France

William M. Vogel, president of William Vogel Productions, Inc., announces the sale of the First National "signature protected" Chaplins to the Mundusfilm Company of Paris for the countries of France and Switzerland. This sale is the outcome of negotiations through Mr. Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brookliss, Inc., who is the personal representative of Mrs. Schuepbach, one of the directors of the Mundusfilm Company.

Mrs. Schuepbach recently returned to France after several weeks in New York City investigating film conditions. She purchased a large number of films on this market. While here she also considered Chaplin pictures and determined to have them if she could complete arrangements satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Desires to See Foreign Buyers

Mr. A. Ziehm, in charge of the Export Department of the Goldwyn Distributing Company, would appreciate being notified of the arrival of foreign buyers or representatives in New York.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

William Fox Announces the Ascendance to the Glittering Firmament of Sonia Narkova, a Russian Girl, Not Long from Petrograd

Leah Baird Engaged for Six Super-Features

The announcement was made last week that Leah Baird, who has appeared in photoplays for Vitagraph, Ivan and Universal, has been engaged to appear in six super-features. The name of the backers who will produce the features was not made known, but it is said a Wall street institution is concerned.

It is announced that Miss Baird will start work on the first picture within three weeks, and that an allowance of $60,000 will be made with which to stage the feature. The subjects, it is said, will be taken from well-known books.

Nat. H. Spitzer, who probably knows as much about selling pictures as any man in the film industry, is mentioned as the man who may handle the sales end of the Leah Baird releases.

Enemy Plans Exposed in Metro's Patriotic Feature

Enemy plans for the partition and despoiling of the country are said to be exposed in "Draft 258," Metro's special patriotic production in which Mabel Taliaferro has the star role, and which is expected to be released shortly. Metro has promised that audiences who see the picture will be let into the inside workings and proposed arrangements of German agents, plotting abroad and in this country.

Bluebird Prepares Special Christmas Release

"My Little Boy" Is Screen Title, and Ella Hall Will Be Presented as the Star—December 24 Set for Release

LAST year Bluebird issued as its Christmas release the Rupert Julian production of Dickens' immortal "Christmas Carol," under the title of "The Right To Be Happy." The announcement is now made that Mrs. Rupert Julian (Elsie Jane Wilson) has prepared a special Christmas release, based on Eliott J. Clawson's story, "Uncle Oliver's Christmas."

"My Little Boy" will be the screen title of the work and Ella Hall will be presented as the star with a special supporting cast, including Little Zoe Rae, Emory Johnson and Gretchen Lederer, when release date arrives, December 24. The theme combines the Dickens traits of character in "Scrooge," with the juvenile hero of a favorite poem that will be widely recognized.

Incidentally this should be a production of a happy interest in the fact that Universal City's popular bride and groom, Ella Hall and Emory Johnson, who appear together in the leading roles, were married during the time the feature was being produced and spent their honeymoon making the final scenes. Gretchen Lederer, who will be featured along with Little Zoe Rae, was maid of honor at the wedding ceremony and little Miss Rae was the flower girl.

Although the regular schedule lists "My Little Boy" for December 24, it is very likely that the subject will be pre-released during the current Bluebird season at the Broadway theatre. But to all intents and purposes it will represent Bluebird's timeliness in presenting an attraction especially fitted to Christmas week showings, while being serviceable all the year 'round.

Work Rushed on Paralta's Hollywood Stages

Space Needed to Accommodate Companies Now Engaged in Making Feature Productions—Work on Fourth Will Shortly Begin

WORK on the stages on Paralta's new studio location at Hollywood, Cal., is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible to afford the necessary space to accommodate the companies now engaged in making feature productions. One of the 60 x 150 stages has been completed, and two others are progressing so rapidly that they can be used inside of the next week. Work on the fourth will be begun as soon as the stage floors of the two now being built are fully laid. To gain time, all the stages will be put in use before the class roofs and side walls are constructed.

J. Warren Kerrigan had the honor of doing the first work on the first new Paralta stage and completed the final scenes of "Turn of a Card" on it on Saturday, October 20. This production is now going through its final editing and will be forwarded to New York as soon as it is completed.

Technical Director R. Holmes Paul, also mounted a number of sets for the Henry B. Walthall company on the first of the new stages and is installing on the second stage sets for the production in which Clara Williams is now engaged under the direction of Reginald Barker. To protect all of these sets and their properties from inclement weather till the new glass stage houses are built, Manager Brunton has had temporary scene docks and property houses erected along the entire east end of two of the stages.

The production plans of Paralta necessitated quick work in rushing these new stages to completion. Mr. Walthall will have completed his first picture as an independent producer, "His Robe of Honor," this week and will immediately begin a new piece to be called "Humdrum Brown."

Howard Hickman is to appear in a special production called "Blue Blood."

Percy Standing to Join Brothers in Service

Percy Standing, the well-known heavy man, already has two brothers in the British service, and is shortly going away to join the Royal Flying Corps. He expects to train in Canada before going overseas. During twenty-five years of stage and screen experience, Mr. Standing has played many roles, one of them being the invading conqueror in Thomas Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation." Recently he has been playing heavy parts with Vitagraph. He is now playing his last film part before joining the colors, that of the god Vulcan, in Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser's mythological spectacle "The Triumph of Venus," starring Betty Lee as the love and beauty goddess.

Rita Jolivet Raises Flag on U-Boat in Park

Rita Jolivet, survivor of the Lusitania and who has been working all summer on a motion picture feature in which the sinking of the big liner forms the central thread, was selected to raise the flag on the captured German U-boat mine layer which was on exhibition in Central Park as an incentive to Liberty Loan bond buyers.

Vitagraph to Feature Florence De Shon

Was on Speaking Stage Until Year Ago, and Shows Promise of Developing Into Star—Under Long-Time Contract

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, last week added another young artist to his list by signing Florence De Shon to a long-time contract providing for her appearance in feature roles.

Miss De Shon, who was on the legitimate stage until a year ago, is the third feminine artist to be engaged by Mr. Smith in as many weeks and the fifth added to the Vitagraph forces in the last few months.

For some time past Mr. Smith has been giving close study to the work of young women appearing on the screen, his search for new artists being prompted by a desire to get for Vitagraph talented young women as varying in temperament as they are in looks. No two of the quintette which he has selected thus far resemble each other in features or complexion, and each was chosen because of suitability for a specific line of interpretation. His choices, in their work, range from the ingenue type to the tragic actress, but nowhere in the list is there a "vamp." He says that Vitagraph has no intention of putting out any productions in which a "vamp" would be required.

In Miss De Shon the Vitagraph president thinks he has a "find," because before her advent into motion picture work she had had training on the legitimate stage, appearing in a number of successful Broadway productions.

The Vitagraph president has started his scenario department working on a play for Miss De Shon and plans to start her operating at once.

Edmund Breese Engaged to Star in Harry Raver Feature

EDMUND BREESE, one of the best known character actors on the American stage, was last week engaged to star in a forthcoming mystery story to be produced by Harry Raver, it was announced. Mr. Breese is equally as well known in pictures as on the speaking stage.

As the leading character of the new production it is said Mr. Breese will have a role entirely to his liking; one which permits of the exercising of the full scope of his powers of dramatic technique. During the past few seasons he has appeared in "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Third Degree" and "The Master Mind" on the speaking stage, and in pictures was presented in "The Spell of the Yukon," produced by Metro; "The Walls of Jericho," a Fox picture, and in the leading role of the screen version of "The Master Mind."

It is announced that Alma Hanlon and a carefully-selected company of picture players will be associated with Mr. Breese in his first Harry Raver production. The picture, which as yet has not been named, will be directed by Burton King, who staged several of Petrova's vehicles and more recently visualized "The Public Defender" for Harry Raver.

"Public Defender" Titled from Original Drawings

Harry Raver, who recently completed a screen production of "The Public Defender," considers his feature especially fortunate in that it has good descriptive titles. It is said that all the titles of "The Public Defender" were made from original hand-drawn sketches, designed by a magazine artist.

Hutchinson Not Pessimistic Over Tax Situation

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, refuses to be pessimistic over the war tax situation, and, in a statement this week made it understood he does not intend to take the price of the tax out of the quality of American productions.

Mr. Hutchinson said: "Taxation must be heavy in every line of business in war time. We must do our part—and do it without grumbling. It is useless to whimper over spilled milk—but we can take care not to spill any more than is necessary in the future.

"I refuse to take a pessimistic view of the situation. I believe that both the government and the film industry will be the gainer by this taxation. It will bring us in close touch with one another and while the film men will have an opportunity to learn something of the problems of the government, the latter will be able to ascertain something of the difficulties under which the pictures must be produced and the manner in which the money must be raised for expenses. It will do us both good and perhaps the film men will be taught how to protect their interests better than they have in the past.

"I am of the opinion that this tax will speedily bring about a re-organization of the film business that will put it on a sound and enduring basis. The government cannot afford to be without the motion picture industry, for it has become an integral part of the nation. We want to work for the government and with it. Out of this taxation is going to develop a new feature for the motion picture.

"The American Film Company will meet the new condition as we meet any new business condition—and keep right on producing good pictures. We will not impair, in any way, the quality of our productions."

Dolly Dare Engaged for Oro Pictures

Dolly Dare, well known in motion pictures as an ingenue, has been engaged by Oro Pictures, Inc., to appear exclusively in screen productions bearing the Oro trade mark. She left for the Bernstein studios in California last week, where she will immediately start work on a script which is said to be especially suited to her talents.

Miss Dare has been in pictures but a short time, but her ability has already caused favorable comment. Now that she is to appear under the Oro banner in Bernstein productions, under the personal direction of Isadore Bernstein, it is announced that much care will be taken in the selection of material for her use, so that full scope of her capabilities will reflect upon the screen.

Four New Keystone Comedies Get Under Way

Alice Brady Finishes First Select Picture

Alice Brady, whose first Select Picture, "Her Silent Sacrifice," is receiving its finishing touches this week, is deep in the throes of home-making. In order to be within striking distance of the studio at Fort Lee, where she expects to make several of her Select Pictures, Miss Brady has leased a new apartment overlooking Central Park, and all of her moments out of the studio are spent in pursuit of furnishings from kitchen requirments to oriental rugs.

Studios Grinding Out Features for Mutual

Score of Five-Reel Subjects Already Completed and Twenty More Well Under Way—Margarita Fischer on Second American

STUDIOS on both sides of the continent are busy turning out feature productions for release on the Mutual schedule. At least a score of five-reel features are already completed and twenty more are well under way.

Margarita Fischer, who recently joined the forces at the studio of the American Film Company, Inc., Santa Barbara, Cal., has completed "A Daughter of Joan," the first of her Mutual-Americans. Miss Fischer is working on her second production. She is under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, who has been directing the Mary Miles Minter pictures.

William Russell has finished "Snap Judgment," a five-reel picture built on a story of a man and his double and is at work on "Aladdin's Night," a five-reel production based on New York's gay life. Both productions are under the direction of Edward S. Sloman.

Mary Miles Minter is engaged on her first sea picture, "The Mate of the Sally Ann," a five-reel drama scheduled for release on November 26.

At the Empire studio, Glendale, L. I., Ann Murdock has completed "My Wife" and "Please Help Emily," her last stage success, and is at work on "The Richest Girl," a Frohman stage play. Miss Murdock is working under direction of John B. O'Brien.

Olive Tell is producing the second of her pictures, "Her Sister," a picturization of the Frohman stage production. Miss Tell's success in "The Unforeseen," the first of her pictures, indicates big things from her in the future.

At the Horkheimer studio Anita King has finished "Pitticoats vs. Pants" and is at work on "The Princess Incognito," a story of would-be-society. Miss King's first production under the Mutual banner was "The Girl Angle," a five-reel western.

Edna Goodrich, whose first three productions for Mutual, "Reputation," "Queen X" and "A Daughter of Maryland" have proven popular, has finished "American Maid" and is busy on "Her Second Husband," a story of society and business.

"The Planter" Screened Amidst Scenes of Book

"The Planter," the seven-reel film spectacle, adapted from the novel by Herman Whitaker with Tyrone Power in the leading role, scheduled for release by Mutual on November 12, was actually taken in the country in which the scenes of Whitaker's book are laid, it is announced. Mr. Whitaker himself went with the producing company into Mexico and lived in that tropical region with the whole company of actors, directors and cameramen during the month which it took to film the tropical scenes.

The result is said to be some gorgeous scenic effects.

"The Planter" is to be released by Mutual as a special.

Goldman Declines to Delve into Politics

Mayer C. Goldman, the New York attorney who wrote "The Public Defender," the film production sponsored by Harry Raver and based on Mr. Goldman's book of the same title, was nominated last week for the office of President of the Borough of Manhattan by the Progressive Party. He declined the nomination.

Harry Raver, producer of "The Public Defender," speaking of Mr. Goldman's nomination and declination said: "Mayer Goldman is to be commended for his decision. In his devotion to an ideal, the furtherance of the Public Defender movement, he has done what few men in his position would have done—put aside his personal ambitions, in order to carry out a plan, which, when fully consummated, will undoubtedly be a lasting benefit to the entire country."

The Purchase of This Studio Property by Herbert Brenon at a Figure Said to be Well Above the Two Hundred Thousand Mark Places the Producer in the Foremost Ranks of Single Film Men Who Put Scenarios Through Their Plants from Start to Finish. The Studio Is At Hudson Heights, N. J.

Herbert Brenon Buys Hudson Heights Studio

Transaction Said to Involve Sum Over Two Hundred Thousand Dollars, and Places Brenon Among Biggest Single Producers

HERBERT BRENON, it was announced this week, has closed a deal whereby he becomes sole owner of the large studio property at Hudson Heights, N. J., where he has been producing his most recent features. Through this deal Mr. Brenon has placed himself among the biggest single producers in the motion picture industry, and it is not improbable that he will become very shortly the biggest single factor in the business.

A recent acquisition of Mr. Brenon was the complete control of the producing corporation bearing his name, when he purchased the other interests in the organization. This gave him complete control of production. The producer then turned his attention to the actual purchase of his studio, to insure complete freedom and scope for his plans, which are said to be very extensive. Negotiations were progressing for the studio during the past several weeks, it became known this week, but were held up by Mr. Brenon's brief journey to the hospital to undergo an operation for appendicitis. The final papers have been signed, and Brenon has resumed active production at the studio, "Empty Pockets" being the feature now in hand.

The studio property acquired by Mr. Brenon includes some two and a half acres of land, two studio buildings, laboratories, administration building, garage and carpenter shop The studios are of concrete and steel, with every up-to-the-minute detail of equipment They have a complete electrical equipment, with Cooper-Hewitts, etc. The larger studio has a floor space of 101 x 50 feet, while the other studio building has floor space of 50 x 40 feet. The construction of the studios, by means of sliding sides and balconies, permits of unusually long shots, ranging up to 125 feet. One ballroom scene in "The Fall of the Romanoffs" revealed the great depth of shot possible.

A large outdoor stage, said to be the first in the East, is being constructed on the property. Aside from this, there are, atop the studio, two outdoor spaces, each 50 x 40 feet, which are utilized for exterior stuff. The two studio buildings have forty individual dressing rooms and four star dressing rooms.

The office building and stucco garage have just been constructed. The administration building houses the private offices of Mr. Brenon, his general manager, secretary and department of exploitation and accounting.

The Brenon plant, with its completely equipped laboratories, handles a motion picture from actual filming to the finished positive print. This assures Mr. Brenon of just exactly the sort of work that he desires in every department. The Brenon laboratories and factory have an unusual record of efficiency. Only recently a negative print was given the department at five o'clock in the afternoon. At nine o'clock the next morning Mr. Brenon was able to look at a finished positive print being projected in the exhibition room.

The Brenon studio has a staff of two hundred. George Rush is studio manager. The photographic department is headed by J. Roy Hunt, who has been cameraman for Mr. Brenon for four years. Mr. Hunt also supervises the film cutting department. Charles Ritchie is assistant cameraman.

A Moment of Indecision Seems Apparent in This Triangle Scene from "Up or Down?"

Paralta Announces Cast in Two New Productions

Paralta announced last week the cast of principals in two of its new productions. Supporting Bessie Barriscale in "Madam Who," Edward Coxen, Howard Hickman, Joseph J. Dowling, David M. Hartford, Fanny Midgley, Nicholas Gogley, Eugene Pallette, Wallace Worsley and Clarence Barr head the cast.

Supporting J. Warren Kerrigan in "Turn of a Card," the leading players are Lois Wilson, Eugene Pallette, David M. Hartford, William Conklin, Eleanor Crowe, Roy Laidlaw, Clifford Alexander, Albert J. Cody, Wallace Worsley and Frank Clark.

Preparations are being made for an early trade showing of these productions.

"Miss U. S. A." to Head Fox November Releases

William Fox's production of "Miss U. S. A.," in which June Caprice is starred, has been selected to head the November releases of the Fox Film Corporation. It is scheduled for the first public showing on November 4, and is one of the regular Fox Special Features of the 52-a-year series.

In "Miss U. S. A." June Caprice is declared to have made a great impression upon the producer, and the picture is even claimed to be the best in which she has appeared. The action centers principally about five characters, played by June Caprice, William Courtleigh, Jr., Frank Evans, Tom Burroughs and Al Hall. The production was directed by Harry Millarde and the scenario prepared by R. G. Lewis.

Twenty Thousand Extras in William Fox's "Cleopatra"

From the William Fox offices this week comes an announcement that, although it was not made prior to the release of the production, "Cleopatra," starring Theda Bara, is certain to create a great amount of interest among exhibitors. It is estimated, by the Fox publicity department, that twenty thousand extra people were used in the making of "Cleopatra," which had its first showing at the Lyric theatre in New York. In one scene alone, it is said, that 3,000 men and 1,000 horses were used. J. Gordon Edwards directed the feature.

Two Fox Directors Make Change in Location

Immediately following the completion of special work away from their "home grounds," two of William Fox's directors changed their scenes of activities last week. J. Gordon Edwards, who directed Theda Bara in "Cleopatra," now running at the Lyric theatre, returned to New York from California, where the picture was made. Frank Lloyd, who made the forthcoming cinema version of Victor Hugo's novel, "Les Miserables," left New York for the West coast the day that Mr. Edwards departed from there. The latter had been in California since May, and "Cleopatra" was the first motion picture he had made on the Pacific Coast. Within the next two weeks he will probably start work on a new photoplay at one of the Fox Studios in New Jersey.

It is announced that Frank Lloyd was brought East for the sole purpose of filming "Les Miserables," in which William Farnum appears as the star. The director's next production will be made in Hollywood, where his earlier pictures were screened.

"Within the Cup" Strong on Emotional Drama

Bessie Barriscale believes that in Monte M. Katterjohn's original story, "Within the Cup," which she is now producing at the Paralta studios in Hollywood, Cal., she will have one of the most powerful emotional dramatic roles she has ever played.

What is expected will be a very novel scene in "Within the Cup" will be a grotto restaurant which will quite graphically picture the odd and bizarre resorts which have now become the fad of the frequenters of Greenwich Village, the home or haunt of Bohemia in New York.

"Troublemakers" Has No Studio-Made Settings

William Fox, it was announced this week, incurred heavy expense in the production of "Troublemakers," a Fox Standard Picture featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, transporting the entire company to villages, towns and cities where necessary scenes could be filmed, rather than depend upon studio made-to-order sets. One scene required destruction by fire of a big farm barn and its contents of hay and grain. This was secured near Trenton, N. J. A village church was also utilized, as was also a suburban railway passenger station, trains and even some of the road employes.

Helen Holmes Film Makes Hit in Denver

Helen Holmes in "The Lost Express" opened at the Iris theatre, Denver, to 5,000 people, and the second chapter brought out 6,500, it was announced by Mutual Film Corporation last week. A. H. Haagen, manager of the Iris, is said to have written the following to Mutual:

"Personally, I think this is the best Helen Holmes has ever worked in. Its drawing power is immense. On my opening day I showed to 5,000 people and on my second showing to 6,500. My patrons have taken greatly to this serial and they like the mystery."

Triangle Has "Man Hater" Ready for Showing

Is the First Published Story Under Recently Announced Policy of Screening Widely Read Literature—Winifred Allen Featured

IN keeping with its recently announced policy, Triangle will issue in the next few months several film versions of stories by well known authors that have appeared in various publications, it was announced this week.

The first of these to be released is "The Man Hater," by Mary Brecht Pulver, which appeared in a June issue of the Saturday Evening Post. The picture was produced under the direction of Allan Dwan, with Winifred Allen in the title role, and is scheduled for the program published this week.

It is announced that H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of Triangle, has purchased several stories that have appeared recently in the Saturday Evening Post. "The Alley of Flashing Spears," by Donn Byrne, will shortly be made into a seven-reel feature for the regular program, it is said. Jack Cunningham, of the Culver City scenario department, is completing the picturization of "The Prince for Tonight," by an author well known to readers of current magazine fiction.

Winifred Allen will appear during November and December in two plays adapted from widely-read stories. The first on the schedule is "For Valour," picturized from "'Melia No Good," by I. A. R. Wylie, published a few months ago in Good Housekeeping. The screen title is taken from the inscription on the Victoria Cross, which figures prominently in the action. Richard Barthelmas, a young player, has the leading role opposite Miss Allen.

"From Two to Six," a novel tale by Arthur Stringer, will be the December feature in which Miss Allen stars. The entire action of the play transpires between the hours of two and six o'clock in the afternoon, as the title indicates. It is described as a whirlwind romance with lightning flashes of comedy. Earle Fox appears as a young man of action who marries the heroine fifteen minutes after he meets her. Albert Parker directed the production.

The Cosmopolitan magazine furnishes another contribution to the program in the story, "Cassidy," by Larry Evans. Dick Rosson is featured with Pauline Curley in this production, which was made under the supervision of Allan Dwan. It numbers among the recent program releases.

Melbourne McDowell in Paramount-Ince Features

Melbourne McDowell, converted to motion pictures from the legitimate stage, has been re-engaged by Thomas H. Ince to appear in a new feature to be released by Paramount and starring Dorothy Dalton. During his previous appearances with Ince as supervisor, McDowell was presented with Miss Dalton in "The Flame of the Yukon" as the "heavy."

It is announced that McDowell's first appearance under the new auspices will be in Miss Dalton's second Paramount picture, following her most recent feature, "The Price Mark," a current release.

Ralph Ince Plans New Feature in New York

Returns from North Carolina After Completing Final Scenes of "The Battle Cry"—Next Production Called "Step by Step"

RALPH W. INCE, the producer and screen authority, returned to New York last week from Andersonville, N. C., where the final scenes of "The Battle Cry" were completed in the Blue Gap Mountains.

Mr. Ince has announced his intention of remaining in New York for some weeks, and it is expected that he will shortly begin work here on "Step by Step," in which it is planned to star Lucille Lee Stewart. The screen production, which has been adapted from the stage play of the same name, is said to be replete in dramatic situations, and there seems little doubt that it will mark up another success to the credit of Ralph W. Ince.

In reference to the Jewel feature, "The Co-Respondent," which a few days ago closed a run at the Broadway Theatre. with Elaine Hammerstein in the title role, Mr. Ince brought the information that it was completed in three weeks' time, this proving the speediest feature Ince has yet directed. "The Argyle Case" and "Today," former Ince successes, occupied four and five weeks each, in production, said Mr. Ince. Most of the scenes of "The Co-Respondent" were made in New York City. The rural scenes were made near Bangor, Me., and a stretch of clear weather resulted in the very fewest retakes that Mr. Ince has so far encountered.

That a smooth continuity and a perfect understanding on the part of each player of his role prove the most vital factors of the success of any photo-dramatic offering, is the contention of Mr. Ince. "I consider a smooth continuity the most essential working factor in the success of any screen offering," said Mr. Ince last week. "It is the foundation on which I have always tried to build. This idea of jumping the spectator, without reason, from one scene and situation to the other, just as he is becoming interested and his subconscious mind is figuring out the scheme of development, seems to me all wrong. I think a story should unfold logically, and it is a fact to be deplored that more stories today do not reveal themselves in this simple fashion.

Charles Ray at Work on Third Paramount

There has been no delay in production work for Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, whose current and first Paramount production is "The Son of His Father." "His Mother's Boy," from a Rupert Hughes story, directed by Victor Schertzinger, under the supervision of Ince, is the second feature, already completed and scheduled as a December Paramount release. Ray has now started work on the third production under the new regime. full particulars of which have not been announced.

Another Chambers Romance as Vitagraph Feature

Another Robert W. Chambers romance supplies the story for the Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "The Fettered Woman," announced for the week of November 5 by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. Alice Joyce, star of many of the biggest productions put out by Vitagraph, is featured in the title role.

This is the second Chambers story to appear on the Vitagraph lists during the present year, the first having been "The Girl Philippa," featuring Anita Stewart. "The Fettered Woman" is an adaptation from Chambers' story, "Anne's Bridge," and was produced under the direction of Tom Terriss.

Dorothy Dalton Busy on Second Paramount Feature

"The Edge of Sin," by Shannon Fife, has been decided upon as the next and second Paramount feature for Dorothy Dalton, who is now at work on the picture under the direction of Roy Neill. Thomas H. Ince is supervising it.

Like "The Price Mark," the first Paramount production starring Miss Dalton, which was released October 29, "The Edge of Sin" is said to be of the intensely dramatic type. The latter part of December has been set for the release of the feature.

"Young Mother Hubbard" Makes Hit with Exhibitors

"Young Mother Hubbard," the Essanay comedy-drama featuring little Mary McAlister and a group of other children, has proved its popularity with exhibitors, according to reports from the George Kleine Service. It is claimed the success of "Pants" and other recent McAlister pictures has done much to create a demand among both exhibitors and fans for little Mary McAlister's work.

It is also contended that "Fools for Luck," the comedy-drama featuring Taylor Holmes, and "The Fibbers," with Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli, are continuing in brisk demand.

Bluebird Director Takes Forces to California

With Miss Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury, his leading players, and a large company, Director Rupert Julian, of Bluebird Photoplays, left last week for the San Bernardino Mountains in Southern California, where he will film the exteriors of a new picture of the rugged West. The story is by Elliott J. Clawson, but its title has not yet been decided upon.

Director Julian himself will appear in this picture, playing the role of a miner who has many trying experiences in his dealing with his fellow men. Miss Clifford is said to have a very congenial role in the forthcoming Bluebird photoplay and Monroe Salisbury, who plays opposite has been cast for a part that Director Julian says will be certain to add to his screen laurels.

The company will be away from the studios for at least three weeks, working in a new region of the San Bernardino Mountains, never before invaded for motion picture purposes, and Director Julian declares that the attractiveness of the scenes will be added to materially by the scenic beauties that will be transferred to the film.

Paramount Shows Sea Crawler in New Serial

Through a strange coincidence, Paramount was making a "sea crawler" and putting it into its new serial, "Who is Number One?" at about the time Simon Lake, a Bridgeport inventor, announced that he had invented a boat that crawls on the bottom of the sea and which is equipped with an apparatus so that divers can leave and enter the boat while it is under water.

The third episode of "Who is Number One?" which was completed several months ago, according to announcements this week from Paramount, is a submarine episode, and a feature of this episode is an underwater battle between divers from the "sea crawler" and their antagonists from a supersubmarine. Both bands of men are seeking sunken treasure.

Empire All-Star Announces New Fitch Feature

The next production of the Empire All-Star Corporation will be Clyde Fitch's play, "The Girl and the Judge," it was announced last week.

Olive Tell, Empire's newest luminary, is to play the part created on the speaking stage by Annie Russell, and, as in "The Unforeseen" and "Her Sister," David Powell will have the leading male role. John B. O'Brien will have charge of the direction of the feature from the scenario prepared by Marc Edmund Jones.

Jewel Changes Title of Dorothy Phillips Film

Jewel Productions, Inc., announced this week that the name of the feature, "The Boss of Powderville," in which Dorothy Phillips has the leading role, has been changed to "The Grand Passion," and will shortly be added to the growing Jewel gallery. The story was written by Thomas Addison, and is said to be of unusual dramatic appeal.

Petrova Personally Selects Cast for New Production

MADAME PETROVA, having completed "Daughter of Destiny," the first Petrova picture, is engaged in the making of the second of her personally supervised productions, it was announced last week. It is said the star personally selected the cast.

The scenario for the second Petrova picture was written by Mrs. L. Case Russell, author of several of Mme. Petrova's previous successes. The theme is said to be startling and dramatic in the extreme and presents Mme. Petrova with an opportunity for the display of her emotional powers. The Biograph Studio will be used for the production of this picture.

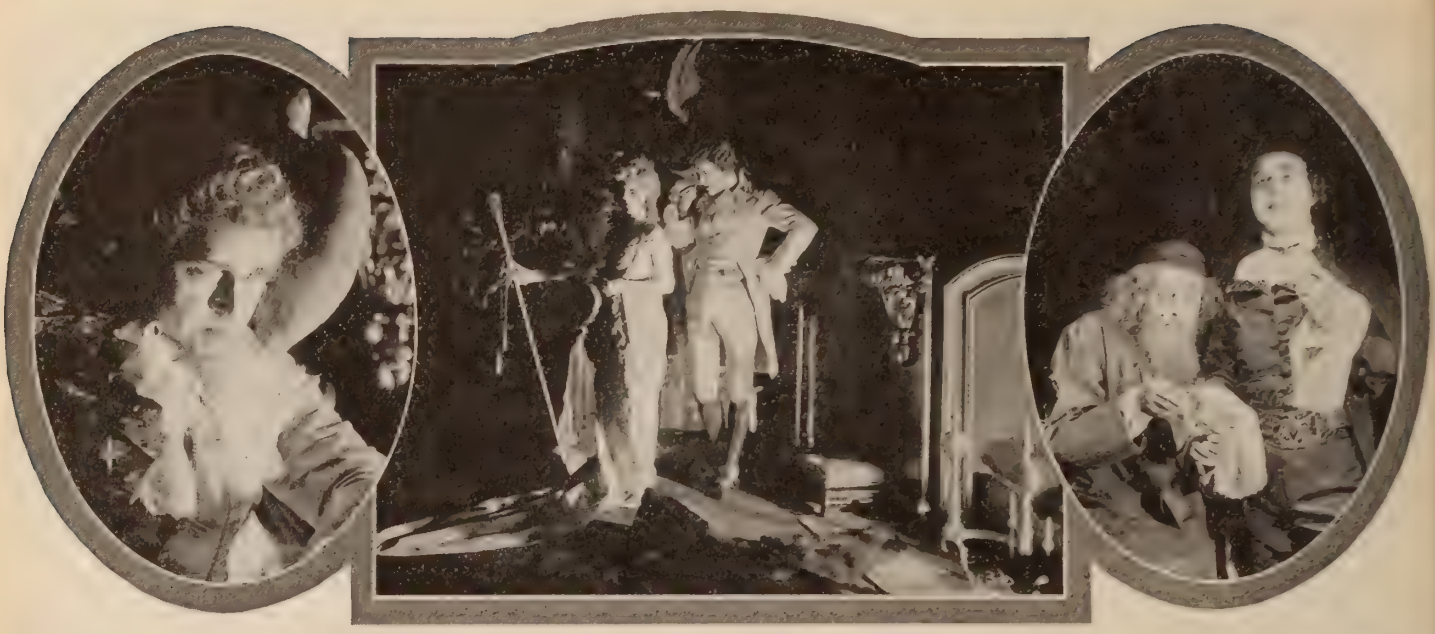
Mme. Petrova has personally selected the following supporting cast: Thomas Holding, leading man, will play the part of the young doctor who wins the young nurse after many twists of fortune. Mr. Holding was Mme. Petrova's leading man in "Daughter of Destiny" and also played with Clara Kimball Young in "Magda" and with Pauline Frederick in "The Moment Before."

Lumsden Hare will play the part of Clinton Durand, a middle aged millionaire of an aggressive, domineering disposition, with whose life Laurel Carlisle's is seemingly inextricably woven. Mr. Hare was the leading man in the World production, "Friday the 13th," and in the Pathe production, "The World's Crucible."

Others in the cast are Clarence Hermitage, who plays the part of Wesley Raines, a lawyer; Fred Jones, who takes the part of an Italian chauffeur; Evelyn Dummo, as Rosa, wife of the chauffeur, and Freddie Verdi, a six year old boy who plays the part of the young son of Clinton Durand. Larry Trimble has been selected by Mme. Petrova to direct this second Petrova picture. Mr. Trimble directed the recent Goldwyn film, "The Spreading Dawn," and also directed several pictures for Vitagraph. Robert North will continue as studio manager. Philip Rosen will be cameraman and Henry Meurmessier will be technical director.

San Francisco Exhibitor Endorses O. Henry Stories

The Rialto theatre of San Francisco, which has been featuring the O. Henry pictures produced by Broadway Star Features, has been placed in the booster class for the O. Henry stories.



President Louis R. Lurie, of the Rialto Company, wrote the following letter to H. W. Schmidt, manager of General Film in San Francisco: "I cannot recall a short-reel feature that we have shown that has met with the success that the O. Henry stories have. With their human interest and tremendous appeal, there seems to be an almost universal demand for these subjects, and I can truthfully say that they have met with unanimous approval and commendation from our patrons. Their excellence is unquestioned and their drawing power is supreme, and many phone calls are received each week inquiring the name of the O. Henry story we are showing. This is in itself ample proof of their popularity.

Trimble Now Directing Second Petrova Feature

Fenimore Cooper Towne, who keeps the trade and public informed concerning certain important people and things, this week announced that Lawrence Trimble, after directing "The Auction Block," by Rex Beach, and "The Spreading Dawn," with Jane Cowl as star, is now engaged in directing the second Petrova Picture, with the star at the head of her own company.

Fox Expansion Indicates Confidence in the Industry

CONFIDENCE, not only in the general future of the motion picture industry, but in the immediate prospects for greatly increased business, is indicated by William Fox in announcements made this week regarding arrangements for strengthening and increasing the numerous companies under Fox Film Corporation management.

In the face of war taxes on positive and negative films and on theatre admissions, Mr. Fox, who has been described in print as having "an uncanny sense of foreseeing public taste and demands," is going steadily ahead with the development of ambitious plans for expansion. He has announced the creation or employment of five new stars and the association with his organization, for leading roles, of two more actors prominent in comedy.

Tom Mix, who has been elevated to stardom in dramatic productions and who henceforth will specialize in the Western type of pictures, already is working in California in his new capacity.

Sonia Markova, Fox's new Russian star, this week will complete her initial Fox production, "The Painted Madonna." She has done most of her work at the Fox studio in Grantwood, N. J., where the last set has been completed. For some of the locations, the star and her director, Oscar A. C. Lund, went to western New Jersey, in the Delaware Water Gap district, but all of the work of this sort has now been finished.

Jewel Carmen, henceforth to be starred, has returned to California where her activities will shortly be centered.

The creation of these three new stars, which, of course, means the organization of a company for each, has been followed by the statement that Gloria Swanson and Bobbie Vernon would have leading roles in one of the several companies working under the direction of Henry Lehrman in the production of the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies. Mr. Fox also gives publicity to the fact that his forces have been augmented by the employment of Georgie Stone and Gertrude Messinger as the stars of a new company—the third under Fox management producing spectacles in which juvenile actors and actresses are featured.

Ex-Ambassador Takes Part in Universal Feature

James W. Gerard, ex-Ambasador to Germany, recently paid a visit to Universal City, and is said to have consented to enact a part in one of the scenes of "Beloved Jim," a Christmas feature in which Priscilla Dean is to be starred. Gerard is an old-time friend of Carl Laeemmle. Director Stuart Paton is the man who is said to have presided over the megaphone during the Gerard scene.

Essanay Directors Make Hay While Sun Shines

Essanay directors have been taking advantage of every clear day recently for location stuff for pictures requiring summer scenes, in preparation against winter weather. As a result, they are said to be well up on summer scenes for pictures in the making and even a snowstorm would not frighten them. It is the usual thing nowadays on a sunny day to find most of the studios deserted. On days when clouds that loomed in the early morning cleared away later, action in studio sets, planned to continue through the day, has been suddenly abandoned for outdor work.

Oscar Depue Twenty-five Years with Holmes

Oscar Bennett Depue, for twenty-five years associated with Burton Holmes, rounds out his quarter century of service in this work with Mr. Holmes this year.

The first magic lantern used in the initial public appearance of Burton Holmes, long before the motion pictures were a successful enterprise, was operated by Mr. Depue. He has traveled and projected his pictures up to 1915, when the studio and laboratory for the making of Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures was established at 7610 North Paulina street, Chicago. He then assumed directorship of the plant, said to be one of the most complete in the country. Much of the excellence of the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures is the result of the careful handling of the technical details by Mr. Depue and his staff.

Exhibitors Pay Cash for Run of Paramount Serial

A large percentage of exhibitors booking "Who is Number One?" the Paramount serial, starring Kathleen Clifford, are reported to be taking advantage of Paramount's discount offered to exhibitors who pay in advance for the entire fifteen-weeks run.

Second Lillian Walker Feature Adapted from Phillips's Work

"A Grain of Dust," the second Lillian Walker feature, now under production by the Ogden Pictures Corporation, is expected to be ready for release about November 1. Harry Ravier, who is directing the production, has practically completed the exterior scenes and is now engaged in the studio taking the interior scenes.

"A Grain of Dust," is a screen adaptation from the book by David Graham Phillips. The story calls for several night scenes and Mr. Ravier and his company were engaged for three nights "shooting" these exterior scenes. It is said that of the 2,000 feet which have been taken, more than a thousand feet were consumed camera and light effects.

Lockwood Real Drawing Card, Says Metro Offices

According to the summary of many reports at the Metro offices from exhibitors in all parts of the country, Harold Lockwood has developed into a genuine drawing card upon the screen, and is now one of the best money-getters in the Metro lists, it is claimed.

Metro estimates that Lockwood's work in recent releases, which are said to be the best he has ever done, has considerably enlarged his circle of friends. "Love Me for Myself Alone," which Lockwood feature is to be released shortly, is expected to rank as one of his finest efforts and to give additional impetus to his popularity.

Hobart Henley Starts Work on New Astra Picture

Pathe's producing plans, according to developments last week, are maintaining a great amount of interest. The most recent announcement from Pathe is that Hobart Henley has been engaged by Astra, and has started work on a picture with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale. The story is by Agnes C. Johnston, and will mark the first appearance of Miss Hulette and Mr. Hale together. It is also the first Pathe feature to be made by Astra under any other director than William Parke. The latter remains, however, with Astra, and expects to begin work shortly on a new feature.

Beban to Have Studio at Lasky Lumber Camp

It is planned to build a permanent studio in the very near future at Hoquiam, Wash., primarily for George Beban, who is making "Jules of the Strong Heart," for Paramount, but also for the use of other pictures requiring a lumber camp setting. The studio is to be built at the Lasky lumber camp in the heart of the woods. Two baggage cars will be used to carry the furniture and a complete lighting plant, while other scenery and furniture will be made on the ground, it is announced. A full force of workmen from the Hollywood studios is to take part in the expedition, besides members of the company, under Donald Crisp's direction, and the technical staff. About fifty people appear in the cast, and camp will be pitched in the woods, where all hands will remain for about a month.

Metro Acquires "Daybreak" for Emily Stevens

Albert Capellani, Most Recent Addition to Metro Directing Staff, Will Produce It—Work Expected to Begin at Once

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announced this week that it has acquired for the use of Emily Stevens the photoplay rights of "Daybreak," the drama by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin, which had its premiere on Broadway at the opening of this season and which is now on the road.

It is announced that Albert Capellani, the most recent addition to Metro's directing staff de luxe, will direct Miss Stevens in "Daybreak," work on which is expected to begin at the Metro Studio as soon as the star has completed work on the Blair Hall story, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," under the direction of William S. Davis. Capellani and June Mathis are adapting "Daybreak" for the screen.

Julian L'Estrange will play the leading male role, opposite Miss Stevens. Mr. L'Estrange has been seen in Famous Players and Pathe releases. His stage career includes five years with Sir Herbert Tree, Billie Burke and Maxine Elliott. A cast of special excellence will support Miss Stevens in her new production.

A production of more than usual interest is expected from this combination of star, play and director. Capellani, in Emily Stevens, has a star of the first magnitude to inspire his efforts. Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is well pleased over the prospective working alliance, and is confident that the forthcoming production of "Daybreak," directed by Albert Capellani, starring Emily Stevens, and produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, will be one of the most notable in the history of the organization.

Clara Kimball Young Completes "Shirley Kaye" Story

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG has completed scenes of "Shirley Kaye," the second release of her own organization under the management of Harry I. Garson, and the picture is said to equal, if not surpass, anything in which Miss Young has appeared. The screen version of "Shirley Kaye" is from the stage production which had a run in New York with Elsie Ferguson in the star role. It is said to be rich in interest, comedy and dramatic situations.

The story is centered about the control by the Kaye family of the Union Central Railroad in the East, and introduces a newcomer from the West who has made most of his fortune in Western roads. He takes over the Union Central because Edgerton is crowed out, and then induces a young Western friend to come East. The plot thickens when the new boss of the road gets Kaye's daughter, Shirley, to secure for his own daughter a foothold in society to satisfy her social ambitions. Another Westerner, a "diamond in the rough," enters the story, and some complications follow, only to be straightened out in the end.

In the cast are Corliss Giles, George Fawcett, George Backus, Claire Whitney, Nellie Lindrich, John Sunderland, F. D. Winthrop, Frank Otto, and Clara Kimball Young.

The production is under the direction of Joseph Kaufman.

Frank Keenan Starts Work on His First Pathe Play

FRANK KEENAN, the new Pathe star, has lost no time in getting to work apparently for this week it was announced that the first Pathe play of which he is the star is already in the course of production at the Sanger Studio in New York, which Pathe recently rented. This studio has been completely equipped with everything needed in high class production and a strong story has been selected for Mr. Keenan's premiere as a Pathe star, it is said.

Frank Keenan was born in Dubuque, Iowa, on April 8, 1858. His first appearance on any stage was made at the Boston College Hall in 1876. His professional debut was made with the veteran actor, Joseph Proctor, at Lawrence, Mass. For some years Mr. Keenan had an extended experience in stock, and acting with many players of repute derived all the benefit of such an association. Some of his earlier successes were made in plays written by Jas. A. Hearne, the author of "Shore Acres." In several of these he played the star part and made a particular success in "Hearts of Oak." Later at the Boston Opera House he made a big hit as Fagin in "Oliver Twist." At this theatre he was associated with Joseph Haworth, Annie Clark, Sadie Martinot, and William Mestayer. Among the plays in which he appeared at this period were "Rosedale," "The Lyons Mail," "The Bells," and "A Texas Steer."

Mr. Keenan's screen career began with the Universal. Later he became connected with Thomas Ince and was featured in "The Thoroughbred," "The Sin Ye Do," "The Bride of Hate," and "The Crab."

"Mother" in Story Form to Appear in Women's Magazine

EXHIBITORS throughout the country will no doubt be much interested in the announcement made this week by McClure Pictures that the story of "Mother" will apear in reading form in forthcoming issues of The Ladies' World. It was this magazine that printed in story form what are said to be the first serials ever produced for the screen, "What Happened to Mary," the continued story starring Mary Fuller, and "The Strange Case of Mary Page," released by Essanay with Henry Walthall as the featured player.

The publication in The Ladies' World of the story version of "Mother" is thought to be particularly appropriate because of the fact that the film itself is a domestic drama built around the sacrifices and lifelong service of a loving mother for a headstrong and erring son. Pathos and comedy have been intertwined throughout the entire length of the feature production and the published story should afford deep human interest and appeal for the thousands of mothers who are readers of The Ladies World.

An additional significance is loaned to the event by the prominence of the author of the novel from which George Loane Tucker has produced the six-part picturization of the film starring Elizabeth Risdon. Eden Philpotts is the writer.

"The Mother," from which Mr. Tucker made the newest McClure production is now in its fourth edition.

The story of "Mother" in The Ladies' World is to be illustrated by actual scenes from the film play, together with a series of posed art photographs of Elizabeth Risdon, who assumes the title role, and is at present playing a part in William Faversham's production of "Misalliance" at the new Broadhurst theatre.

"His Robe of Honor" Completed by Henry Walthall

Henry B. Walthall has completed work on "His Robe of Honor," the seven-act production, adapted for the screen by Julian Louis Lamothe from the novel by the same name written by Ethel and James Dorrance. The production is now in the final cutting and will mark Mr. Walthall's debut as a star in Paralta plays.

"His Robe of Honor" was made under the personal direction of Rex Ingram, and is said to provide Mr. Walthall with a most exceptional role suited to the style of dramatic interpretation which has won for him his laurels.

Two leading women support Mr. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor." Miss Mary Charleson, Walthall's leading lady with the Essanay Company, will be seen in the role of Roxana Frisbee, an adventuress in love with Julian Randolph (Mr. Walthall), and Lois Wilson, who appeared as leading woman with J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Man's Man," will be seen in the role of Laura Nelson, the woman whom Julian Randolph sways the courts to win.

King and Hale Sell Bonds in Big Drive

Mollie King and Creighton Hale, immediately after completing work in "The Seven Pearls," the Pathe serial in which they are featured, went to Washington on Wednesday of last week to participate in the drive made in selling Liberty Bonds. The booth from which they sold bonds was located in front of the Capitol.

Coincidentally, Pathe announced that the filming of "The Seven Pearls" has been practically completed, and the members of the company are looking forward to a rest.

The Pathe Exchange managers from all sections of the country report that big business on "The Seven Pearls" is continuing, and that both exhibitors and audiences are pleased with this serial.

Exhibitors Seem Pleased at Goldwyn Proposition

The announcement made last week by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation that all Goldwyn contract exhibitors would be given its production of "Thais," starring Mary Garden, at no advance in rental prices, seems to have won the nation-wide approval of exhibitors.

Samuel Goldfish and all of his associates in Goldwyn feel, it is announced, that the basis of exhibitor confidence, as in any other business, is honorable treatment of a company's customers; that all Goldwyn customers are entitled to the biggest, best and most costly pictures the company creates. They know, of course, that no producing organization ever formed has been able to make all of its productions attain one hundred per cent perfection, and it is their feeling that the exhibitors who obtain all the regular output of the company are entitled to the exceptional productions at the same rental prices they are called upon to pay for all pictures under their contracts.

"Feet of Clay," Falcon's New Detective Story

From glowing reports issued from the offices of General Film it is anticipated that one of the most thrilling detective stories yet discovered in the Falcon Features, released through General Film, makes "Feet of Clay," the twelfth story in the series, good entertainment for both young and old.

R. Henry Grey, as Richard Armstrong, the juvenile lead, and Margaret Landis, as Dorothy Glenister, the heroine, are said to have especially sympathetic parts. They are supported by Bruce Smith, Frank Erlanger, Charles Edler and others. H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer supervised the making of this feature attraction.

Kathleen Kirkham and R. Henry Grey are featured in the next Falcon release, "Brand's Daughter."

Wm. Brady Meets Notables with Exhibitors in Boston

WILLIAM A. BRADY, general manager of World-Pictures Brady-Made, was the guest of honor last Tuesday night at the banquet of the New England motion picture exhibitors, held at the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston.

The occasion was of more than ordinary importance, and at the speakers' table, in addition to Mr. Brady, were Mayor Curley of Boston, former Governor Walsh of Massachusetts, and other men of national renown. After Mr. Brady had finished his address to the assembled guests, he took occasion to make himself personally acquainted with as many of them as he could in the time at his disposal.

"I found these men an exceptionally thoughtful and clear-headed body," said he upon his return to New York. "About three hundred of them were present, representing Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut, doing business in all the cities of consequence in what is the most thickly populated section of this country—with as high a range of intelligence as you will find anywhere on earth.

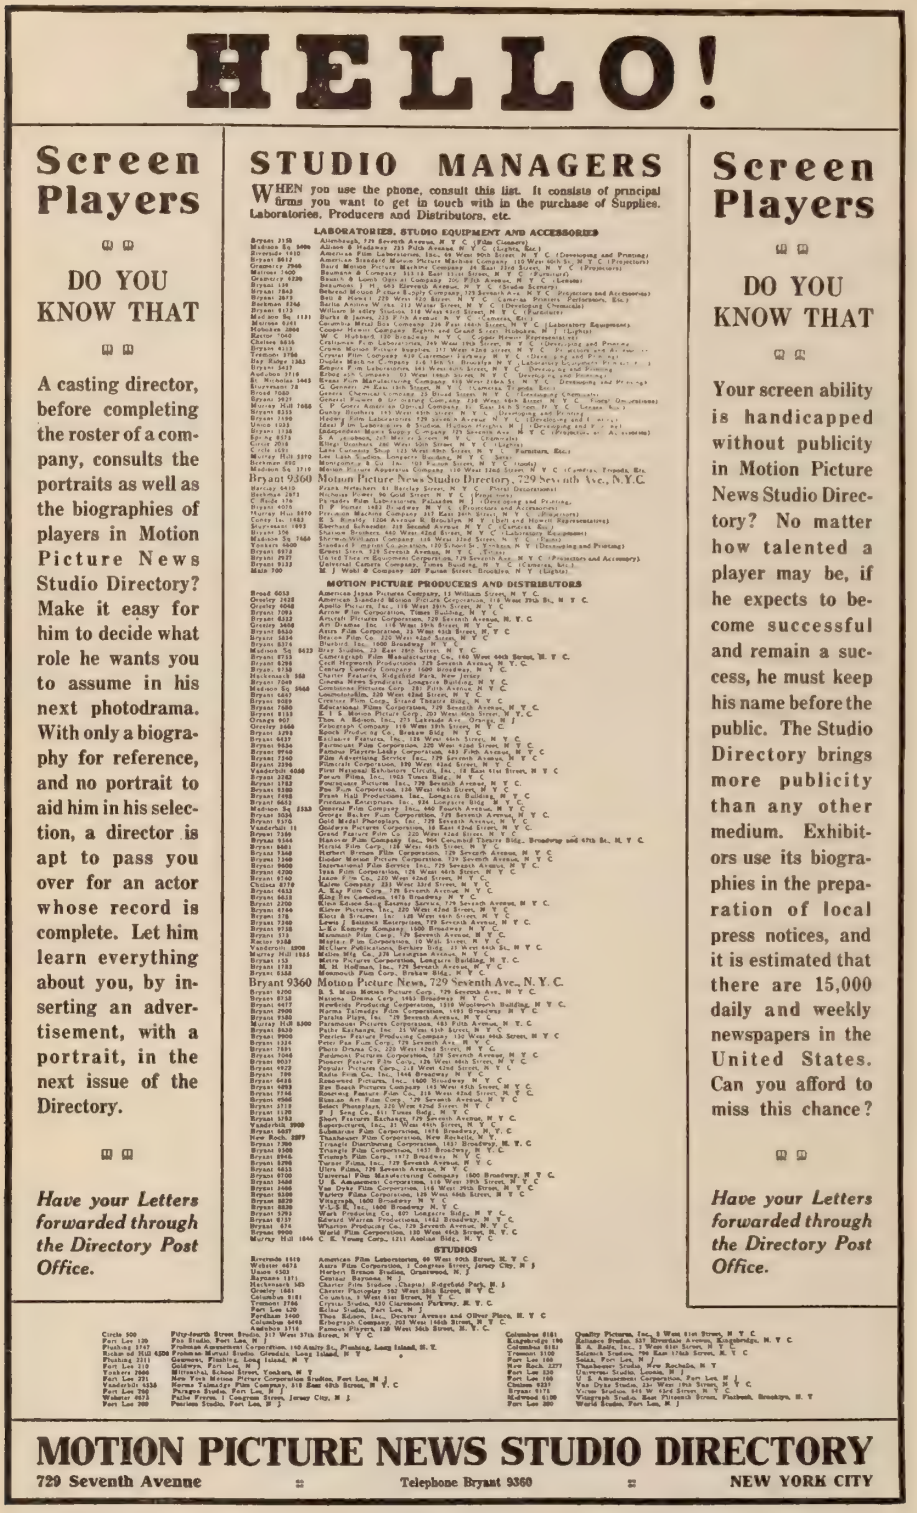
"I particularly wanted to get the views of these men on certain matters—more especially the program vs. the special price features, and I was entirely surprised as well as gratified with the result. I found the opinion to be practically unanimous that the program was increasing in strength every day, and that its ultimate survival over all competition was regarded as a sure thing.

"I suppose at least a score of those with whom I conversed went out of their way to commend the World for having given exhibitors 'Rasputin' on the regular program at regular prices, and they also took pains to speak in very high terms of 'The Burglar,' 'The Maid of Belgium,' and the general line of pictures we have been producing—which, of course, was very pleasant to us, and all of which is more than ordinarily appreciated."

Mary Garden Returns from Scene-Taking Florida Trip

MARY GARDEN is back at work in the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., after her hurried trip to Florida, which was made for the purpose of securing some desert scenes. It is announced that twenty scenes were taken at St. Augustine.

The Goldwyn studio staff regards the diva's long jump as a record one for the number of scenes involved. Had the weather been favorable Miss Garden and her party would have been but one day on the desert she went so far to seek. As it was she spent but two days in St. Augustine and put in but six hours in actual work. In this time she and her leading man, Hamilton Revelle, the Paphnutius of the film, were photographed in a dozen or fifteen scenes highly important in the story.



Twenty-five hundred feet of film were exposed by David Abel, Miss Garden's chief cameraman, under the supervision of Frank H. Crane, her director. Despite the brilliancy of the sunlight, reflected with almost blinding intensity from the superwhte sand of Anastasia Island, it was deemed wise to use reflectors to insure proper lighting effects.

Miss Garden laughingly observed after two or three hours' work in this blazing brilliance that the studio lights she had been warned to regard with fearsome awe could never try the eyes as did the intensified Florida sunshine.

In the diva's party besides Messrs. Crane, Revelle and Abel were Assistant Director George C. Bertholon, Miss Garden's sister and a maid and Miss Margaret Townsend, who plays a nun in the picture.

"News" Directory 'Phone List Fills Want

Placard Containing Names, Addresses and Telephone Numbers of Firms in the Industry in the East, Compiled for Desk Use, Is Well Received by the Trade

THE hanger containing telephone numbers of the principal studios, manufacturers, exchanges and accessory dealers in New York City and its vicinity, recently sent out for use in the film offices located in the metropolis, has proved a convenience appreciated by everyone who has received one of these telephone lists.

The placard was originally designed for the convenience of studio managers, but others have found the ready reference of names, addresses, and 'phone numbers equally convenient. It measures fourteen by twenty-two inches and is printed in heavy cardboard, fit for hanging over a desk.

The reception of the placard met with instant success among members of the trade who have received a copy. Some of the comments from these firms indicate an appreciation of the desire on part of MOTION PICTURE NEWS to furnish them with something which is of real service. A few of the commendations are as follows:

The International Film Service, Inc., says: "We wish to take this opportunity of thanking you for the placard sent us containing 'phone numbers and addresses of the firms connected with the motion picture industry.

"We have placed this in a convenient position in our office, and will no doubt thank MOTION PICTURE NEWS many times for its thoughtfulness in arranging this card."

The Kalem Company says: "This is a very handy card."

Klotz and Streimer, Inc., says: "Kindly accept our thanks for the 'Hello' card that you were kind enough to send us. Again you prove that at all times you are ready to assist in saving time."

The George Backer Film Corporation says: "Permit us to thank you for your kindness and to assure you of our appreciation of the fact that you are trying to make things convenient for us."

The C. P. Goerz American Optical Company says: "We have placed this in a conspicuous place in our office for immediate reference. We also wish to thank you for placing our name and telephone number on this card and trust it will result in our mutual advantage."

Sharlow Brothers Company says: "We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your telephone directory card, which will be of great service to us, as it contains the names of telephone numbers of a great many of our customers."

Kliegl Brothers say: "We thank you for your kindness, and think it will be of much use to us."

Bausch and Lomb Optical Company says: "We wish to express our thanks for the card containing telephone numbers of people in the trade."

There is not sufficient space to print any of the other communications, but these will suffice to indicate the reception of the card by those in the trade.

Any office in New York City and its vicinity which desires one of these hangers can obtain it by sending a boy to the office of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. This distribution will continue as long as the supply lasts. They are too bulky for mailing, otherwise we would not request offices desiring a copy to send a messenger for a placard.

The telephone list has been issued in connection with MOTION PICTURE NEWS STUDIO DIRECTORY, the fourth edition, which will be out in December.

Select Pictures Says "Magda" Was Not Censored

Select Pictures last week made the announcement that despite the fact that the reports that Clara Kimball Young's production of "Magda" had been severely censored and cut and the rumor gained wide credence, there was absolutely no foundation for the rumors. Select Pictures declares that not only are the reports totally untrue that the Chicago censors made any eliminations in the production, but the very reverse of this is shown in the fact that a white permit was issued on "Magda." In Chicago the white permit is the highest form of permit issued, and indicates that the production is judged a suitable attraction for children to see.

Viola Dana Leaves for Work on West Coast

The staffs at the Metro studio in Sixty-first street, New York, suspended work one afternoon last week when little Viola Dana, the Metro star, left for California. The entire studio force accompanied her to the station in automobiles and taxicabs. Just before she left, the studio working force presented her with a silver loving cup, as a tribute of affection and esteem, and a reminder that "the boys" will be thinking of her while she is away at Metro's west coast studio.

Accompanying the star were her director, John H. Collins; his assistant, Albert H. Kelley; John Arnold, cameraman.

Preparations have been made at the Hollywood studio by B. A. Rolfe, Metro's Western representative, for the work of the little star and her company to begin almost immediately after her arrival in California. Her first picture to be produced on the West coast will be "The Winding Trail," by Katherine Kavanaugh and June Mathis.

Metro Works at Night on Viola Dana Feature

Universal's "Mystery Ship" Presents One-Man Cruiser

WHAT is said to be a very novel feature of the new mystery serial, "The Mystery Ship," which is being filmed at Universal City, is a one-man armor-clad cruiser. This craft, which roams the seas alone, is forty feet long and completely enclosed in armor plate, and was built especially, it is said, for the productions from plans prepared by Milton Moore, technical director of the Universal Company. It is propelled by electrical current, and is controlled entirely by a single operator in the observation cupola rising above the deck. The pilot is a mysterious figure, whose identity is concealed in a helmet of curious design. His control station also serves as a turret for a rapid-fire gun. The operator has at his finger tips the steering-wheel motor switches, wireless key, and all the instruments necessary to keep every piece of mechanism in the ship within his command at all times.

"The Phantom" skipper is a master scientist. The helmet which he has invented intensifies his senses a hundredfold, so that he can hear people talking in an ordinary tone at a great distance, or see things that are not visible to the ordinary eye. He also has at his command a powerful light-ray capable of making walls transparent, melting steel plates or dealing death at will.

Nigel De Brullier, who had a part in Universal's serial, "The Gray Ghost," appears in the role of the scientist, and is said to have created the most unusual characterization of his career.

Georgie Stone Heads New Fox Company of Youngsters

THE nation-wide approval which greeted William Fox's advance of the motion picture through the presentation of "Jack and the Beanstalk," and, more recently, "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," is said to have led Mr. Fox to organize still another company of juvenile players.

The new company, it is announced, will be headed by Georgie Stone, not formerly connected with the Fox Film Corporation. His leading woman will be Gertrude Messinger, said to be talented and accomplished far beyond her age.

Mr. Fox retains, of course, the services of Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, the featured players in "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin," and who have the stellar roles in several other films soon to be produced.

The Stone-Messinger Company will make motion pictures in the Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal. The new aggregation makes the sixth group of players now screening dramatic subjects for Mr. Fox on the West Coast.

Georgie Stone was one of the assets of the Franklin brothers, C. M. and S. A., before they affiliated themselves with Mr. Fox. He appeared in leading roles in some of the most important productions the Franklins made prior to joining the Fox forces.

Gertie Messinger, even younger than Georgie Stone, rose to fame through her characterization of Yasmini, the maid to the Princess (Virginia Lee Corbin) in "Aladdin" and has been adding materially to her successes ever since.

Mutual Issues Eight-Page Press Book on "The Planter"

THE Mutual Film Corporation has issued an eight-page press book on "The Planter," the seven-reel dramatic spectacle starring Tyrone Power which is scheduled for release on November 12. They are now ready for distribution to exhibitors.

The book is a comprehensive and complete aid to the exhibitor who books the production in addition to being an attractive piece of printing. It is done in two colors, orange and dull black, profusely illustrated and printed on high-grade enameled stock.

The press book illustrates all the accessories available on the production, two sets of one-sheet posters, two sets of three sheet posters, a six and sixteen sheet, two art slides, a throwaway, two double-column cuts, a single and thumbnail and a set of ten lobby photos.

It carries a musical setting prepared by Joseph O'Sullivan, director of music service for the Mutual Film Corporation, prepares cues for all of the Mutual star productions. Mr. O'Sullivan has used standard music in his setting which will eliminate the necessity for buying an elaborate library for the musical accompaniment of the picture.

In addition to these features, the press book contains two pages of newspaper publicity, written by trained newspapermen, a page of advertising suggestions and a complete outlay of material for the exhibitor's program.

Fox's Sunshine Comedies Built on Natural Events

IN the Sunshine comedies, William Fox announced this week that he believes he has struck a new note in the comedy field, and one which will be appreciated by both exhibitor and public.

Instead of relying upon the customary custard pie for comedy situations, it is disclosed in the Fox announcement that Henry Lehrman, who is producing for Mr. Fox, has set out to build these laugh-making situations through natural sequences of events.

Some of the funniest situations in Sunshine comedies are secured through the introduction of animals, both wild and domestic, it is said. The laughable situations in which these animals appear are not forced, but are natural and might happen in actual life.

"Take, for instance, Mr. Lehrman's handling of three lions in the first Sunshine comedy release—'Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells,'" said Mr. Fox. "In this comedy there is real humor and farce. Two porters are lying asleep in bed. The lion jumps upon the foot of the bed in which the men are sleeping and awakens them by tickling their feet by switching his tail."

Ida May Park Devotes Whole Time to Films

Ida May Park, who is directing Dorothy Phillips in a series of emotional screen dramas, is among the few women devoting themselves entirely to photoplay productions. She is, in private life, Mrs. Joseph DeGrasse, whose husband has worked in conjunction with her in preparing for the screen a number of Bluebird features. Miss Park's latest work is the Jewel feature, "The Grand Passion," with Miss Phillips, and which it is expected will be released shortly.

"Enchanted Kiss" Is Thirtieth O. Henry Feature

"The Enchanted Kiss," the thirtieth O. Henry story to be screened, is the current release in General Film's Broadway Star Feature subjects, and is said to be one of the most charming of the two-reelers issued thus far. In the picture are featured Chet Ryan and Frances Parks, who have been appearing in nearly all of the O. Henry Western stories.

Last week it was announced by General Film that the producers have made good progress in picturizing the fourth series of ten O. Henry stories, thus insuring that the demand for these subjects will be satisfied for some time to come. O. Henry subjects selected for early releases are: "The Renaissance at Charleroi," featuring J. Frank Glendon and Agnes Eyre, four reels; "One Dollar's Worth," Chet Ryan and Frances Parks, two reels; "The Skylight Room," Jean Paige and Carlton King, four reels, and "Two Renegades," Chet Ryan, and W. L. Rodgers, two reels.

"Believe Me, Xantippe," Is Paramount Production

"Believe Me, Xantippe," which was given its premiere as a stage production in 1913 at the Castle Square theatre in Boston, is to be produced for the screen by Famous Players-Lasky for Paramount release, with Wallace Reid in the leading role.

Full details concerning the screen production have not been announced, but it is expected the actual work on the feature will begin the latter part of the year.

Sparkling Laughs Promised in New Sparkle Comedy

Kate Price and Billy Ruge, co-operating in creating laughter, if they live up to the promise made for them by General Film, will create the biggest bundle of hilarity they have yet turned out in the current release, "In High Speed," in the new series of Sparkle comedies being distributed by General Film.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Kosloff, the Russian Dancer, as He Appears in the Artcraft-Farrar Spectacle "The Woman God Forgot"

Desmond Feature Released by Triangle November 4

"Fighting Back," with William Desmond in the role of a U. S. officer who struggles to clear his name of military disgrace, and "Up or Down?", relating the adventures of an author in pursuit of an idea, are the two subjects for the Triangle program for the week of November 4.

"Haunted by Himself" is the Keystone comedy for the week. It presents Blanche Payson, the Amazonian star of comedy, as a champion shrew who assists her husband in conducting a gymnasium. Dale Fuller, Maude Wayne and Eddie Gribbon assist in the riotous action.

"A Hero's Downfall" and "An Interrupted Honeymoon" are the Triangle Komedies supplementing the features on the November 4th program. Harry Depp, Jay Dwiggins, Blanche Phillips and Rae Godfrey are the chief participants in "A Hero's Downfall." Harry Depp and Rae Godfrey are also featured in "An Interrupted Honeymoon," assisted by Earl Rodney and Tom McFarlin. Charles Avery directed both productions.

"Queen of Spades," Pathe Release, November 18

"The Queen of Spades" is announced for release November 18 as the second of Pathe's series of Russian Art Films and is described as even better for the American market than the first picture, "The Painted Doll."

As in "The Painted Doll," the star of "The Queen of Spades" is Ivan Mozukin.

Vitagraph Announces Favorites for November

First Release Is Two-Reel Drama Starring Edith Storey, with Good Cast—Clara Kimball Young Comedy Is Included in List

GREATER VITAGRAPH last week announced that its list of Favorite Film Features for release during the month of November will be as follows:

November 5: "The Strength of Men," a two-reel drama, with Edith Storey, Ned Finley, Tefft Johnson and Herbert L. Barry. "Captain Barnacle's Legacy," a one-reel comedy, with Van Dyke Brooke, Flora Finch, Kate Price, Hughie Mack, Robert Gaillard and Helen Costello is also released this day.

November 12: "Just Show Folks," one-reel drama, with Norma Talmadge, Courtney Foote, Leo Delaney and Helen Costello. "Jerry's Mother-in-Law," two-reel comedy, with Clara Kimball Young, Sidney Drew, Kate Price and Rogers Lytton.

November 19: "Sisters All," one-reel drama, with Edith Storey, Florence E. Turner and Courtney Foote. "Never Again," two-reel comedy, with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, S. Rankin Drew, Ethel Lloyd, Jane Fearnley, Arthur Cozine and Lillian Burns.

November 26: "The Portrait," two-reel drama, with Naomi Childers, James Morrison, Mary Maurice, James Young and Donald Hall. "How Fatty Made Good," one-reel comedy, with Lucille Lee Stewart, Hughie Mack, E. K. Lincoln and Dick Rosson.

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, is personally supervising the re-editing of favorite Film Features, which are said to constitute one of the most popular units of Vitagraph service, and declares that the standard of quality established with the first program put forth will be maintained at all times. He now has in preparation the programs for the month of December and announces that they will be given out shortly, so that exhibitors may fill up their programs for the balance of the year.

Triangle Making Good on Program Promises

Nine Directors Working Daily on Stories Varying from Comedy to Melodrama—Over Hundred Stock People Kept Busy

THE Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City plant and its big ranch studio, Hartville, are the scenes of unusual activity, in keeping with the recently announced intention of Triangle to furnish exhibitors and their patrons with a program diversified as it is possible to make it. Nine directors are busy daily shooting scenes of stories varying from melodrama to comedy and drama, and more than one hundred stock people are employed. Scores of extra people are being used, and a great deal of location work is being done while the weather is agreeable.

Three directors, Ferris Hartman, Lynn Reynolds and Jack Dillon, are waiting for stories, and it is expected that the end of the week will see the completion of three pictures, "Fanatics," which is in charge of Director Raymond Wells; "The Sudden Gentleman," in which Thomas N. Heffron is directing William Desmond, and "The Ship of Doom," on which Wyndham Gittens is handling the megaphone.

Triangle pictures now completed and awaiting shipment include "Regenerates," featuring Alma Ruebens and Walt Whitman; "Indiscreet Corinne," starring Olive Thomas; "The Fuel of Life," in which Belle Bennett is featured, and "Easy Money," with Charles Gunn in the leading role.

Jack Conway, who directed "Doing Her Bit," has begun work on "Because of the Woman," in which Belle Bennett is being featured. The supporting cast includes Jack Livingston, George Chesebro, George Pearce and Lillian Langdon.

Director Gittens is putting the finishing touches on his first Triangle offering, "The Ship of Doom," a narrative of the sea, which includes such spectacles as a fight between the officers and a mutinous crew while the vessel is burning at sea, and a battle between a man-eating shark and sailor.

"The Passion Flower," is the latest picture to be selected for Alma Ruebens. A great part of the action is laid in sunny Italy and France before the world war. The production is being directed by Walter Edwards, who recently completed "The Fuel of Life." Life in the Latin quarter of Paris will be depicted in this film, and the scenic effects will be under the personal supervision of E. McCaskill. Others cast in "The Passion Flower" include W. L. Lawrence, Francis McDonald, Joe Gregory, John Lince and Harry Mann.

"Hugs and Hubbub," Big V Comedy This Week

"Hugs and Hubbub," described as a thousand feet of snappy action and humor, is scheduled as the Big V comedy release of Greater Vitagraph for this week. It was written and directed by Graham Baker, and features Montgomery and Rock, with Patsy DeForest and Adele DeGarde as the principal feminine characters. Incidentally, it marks the return of Miss DeForest to comedy after several months devoted to straight dramatic work in Blue Ribbon features.

Gail Kane Tops Mutual's Release Schedule

Is Starred in Five-Reel Drama Produced by American and Released November 5—Comedies Also on Program

GAIL KANE tops Mutual's release schedule for the week of November 5 in "A Game of Wits," a five-reel comedy drama produced by the American Film Company, Inc., under the direction of Henry King. The schedule carries two comedies, a topical subject and a two-reel serial.

"A Game of Wits" is said to be a clever story, well told in the picture and showing Miss Kane to advantage. It is said to be a superior production even to "Souls in Pawn," Miss Kane's most pronounced screen success. Supporting Miss Kane in the picture are Spottiswood Aitken, George Periolat and Louis J. Cody.

The comedy releases of the week are "Mary's Merry Mixup," a one-reel Strand and "Jerry and the Vampire," a one-reel Cub. Miss Rhodes is cast as a flirting bride in "Mary's Merry Mixup." Jay Belasco is the sufferer, banned by Mary's pa, who sneaks into her house as a butler and is exposed in the arms of a vampirish maid by his own wife.

Mutual Weekly hereafter goes to the screen on Monday instead of Thursday. The release of the week of November 5 is No. 149, which will be composed of photographs of current events up to the hour of the shipment of prints.

"The Mountain King" is the title of Chapter VIII of "The Lost Express," the fifteen-chapter Matual-Signal serial. The chapter introduces another mystery into the sensational photoplay, the Thurston gold mine known as "The Mountain King." The conspirators begin a struggle to prevent the Thurston estate from working the property and failing in that, attempt to steal the gold which has already been smelted.

Chester Conklin in Sennett Comedy, November 4

Chester Conklin is announced as one of the chief fun-makers in "The Pullman Bride," the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy scheduled for release November 4. The picture was directed by Clarence Badger under the supervision of Mr. Sennett, and in addition to Conklin will present Gloria Swanson and others. Following "The Pullman Bride" will be "Are Waitresses Safe?" on November 18, with Louise Fazenda, Ben Turpin and Slim Summerville in the leading comedy roles.

Freedom from offensive touches, plenty of slapstick humor and other points which have made the Sennett comedies desirable, are said to characterize both these pictures.

R. Cecil Smith Joins Ince Scenario Staff

The Thomas H. Ince scenario staff has been augmented by the engagement of R. Cecil Smith, the author, who henceforward will be busily occupied at the Ince studios in Los Angeles preparing material for the stars of that organization. Mr. Smith has written many photoplays under the Ince banner, and when the latter went to Paramount and Artcraft, Mr. Smith decided to go along.

Francis Ford Is Star of New Butterfly Subject

Francis Ford is announced as the star of "John Ermine of the Yellowstone," the Butterfly production of Frederick Remington's novel of frontier days, which is scheduled for release November 5.

In the feature Ford is supported by Mae Gaston, William Carroll, Marc Fenton, Duke Worne, John Darcloud, Burell Hamrick, and several hundred real Indians. Maud Grange picturized the Remington novel.

Paramount Elated Over Miss Clark's Late Features

Paramount, in its announcements this week, considers it already safe to declare that never in her career as a Paramount star has diminutive Marguerite Clark made a more pronounced hit than in "Bab's Diary," first of the Mary Roberts Rinehart stories. From every part of the country, according to Paramount, exhibitors have been wiring their appreciation of the film.

"Bab's Burglar," second of the series, is the current release. It was given the first public showings on October 29, and is to be followed in November by "Bab's Matinee Idol."

Mary Pickford Sticks to Short Skirts in Films

In "The Little Princess," the Artcraft release scheduled for November 5, Mary Pickford will be presented again in short skirts, and there is little doubt that the audiences who appreciated her recent 'kid" features will turn out en masse.

As Sara Crewe in "The Little Princess," Mary Pickford plays the part of a girl who is suddenly plunged from wealth to poverty. She has been reared in India, where her father was a captain in the British army, and when misfortune overtakes her and she becomes a scullery maid in the fashionable boarding school where she has been a favored pupil she accepts her fate with pathetic stoicism and finds comfort in the companionship of Becky, the little slavey of the institution.

Next Fairbanks-Artcraft Release in November

Artcraft is planning to release on November 26, "Reaching for the Moon," in which Douglas Fairbanks is expected to out-Fairbanks himself. He is shot, stabbed, dumped into a canal, has his food poisoned, and battles on a narrow ledge, high above ground. Attacked by a half dozen conspirators, he impersonates a whirlwind, and the air is full of human bodies. The rooms and furnishing are said to be completely wrecked.

All these troubles come to Douglas because he discovers he is the heir to a throne and claims his kingdom.

General Promises Action in New Releases

General Film Company this week announced three current releases that are expected to provide an unusual amount of action, inasmuch as they include as stars Helen Gibson, Ollie Kirby and Lou Marks.

"A Race to the Drawbridge," the first release in the new Kalem series of "A Daughter of Daring," is said to be replete with action of the well-known kind furnished by Helen Gibson in her earlier pictures. She is supported in this subject by George Routh and A. G. Williams. It is announced her next picture will be "The Munitions Plot," in which she is said to go through new perils.

"Grant, Police Reporter," rescues a Western heiress from the clutches of a master criminal in "The Sign of the Scarf," the third of the new series of the police reporter stories being released for Kalem by General Film.

Lou Marks, the "Three Comedy" star, attempts to be a Lochinvar in "Stealing a Sweetheart." Pearl Shepard, his leading woman, is the stolen sweetheart. Oom Paul is the third entertainer featured in the one-reel subject, which is the sixth in the new series of comedies. The seventh, it is announced, will be "A Hash House Romance," with the same featured players.

At Last! Clues to Missing Train Show Up

The first indication of what happened to the missing passenger train in "The Lost Express," Mutual's fifteen chapter photo-novel starring Helen Holmes, comes in Chapter VIII of the serial, released by Mutual November 5 under the title "The Mountain King."

Helen Thurston (Miss Holmes) and Murphy, the railroad detective, follow the crooked secretary, Pitts, into the mountain and from the people of the hill country get the first clues to the whereabouts of the train which mysteriously disappeared in the first episode of the serial.

Chaplin Reissue Among Current Perfection Releases

WHAT is expected to be one of the big drawing cards of the current Perfection pictures program is the Chaplin-Essanay reissue, "By the Sea," said to be one of the funniest subjects in which the comedian has appeared. Other releases announced are two comedy-dramas and two George Ade fables.

"Two-Bits Seats," Taylor Holmes' third Essanay production, is said by reviewers who have seen advance showings to be the best of the trio. The scenario was adapted from the American magazine story written by Gladys E. Johnson. Marguerite Clayton plays the leading feminine role. The picture has a screen time of 65 minutes.

Little Mary McAlister is the star of the second comedy-drama, entitled "Young Mother Hubbard." The cast is composed chiefly of children. "Young Mother Hubbard" has a screen time of 65 minutes.

The George Ade fables are, "The Fable of the Girl Who Took Notes and Got Wise and Then Fell Down," and "The Fable of the Back-Trackers from the Hot Sidewalks."

The fables and the Chaplin picture have a screen time of 25 minutes.

New Elsie Ferguson Film Released November 12

The release date for the next Elsie Ferguson feature has been set for November 12, acocrding to an announcement from President Walter E. Greene, of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. The name of the production is "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," from the book by Mary S. Watts.

"This second play of Miss Ferguson," says Mr. Greene, "presents the star in a radically different role than the last film, 'Barbary Sheep,' and was selected because of the wide range afforded her to display her talent. It is a strong story, fearlessly discussing modern tendencies of society, and dealing with a question which is now being generally discussed: What is our duty toward orphan children?

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Mills Gets Southern Atmosphere at Savannah

Genuine Southern atmosphere, which the North has never been known to provide, was needed for the O. Henry story, "The Renaissance at Charleroi," a Broadway Star feature for release through General Film Company, and Director Thomas R. Mills hied himself and company to Savannah, Ga., to get it first hand. All of the exterior scenes of the production were taken at an abandoned plantation near the city.

Members of the company who accompanied Director Mills were J. Frank Glendon, Agnes Ayres, Eleanor Lawson, Webster Campbell, Marguerite Forrest and Ethel Northup. The camera work was done by Fred Held.

Ann Pennington Does Antics in New Production

The adventures of a harum-scarum seminary girl are said to form the basis of Ann Pennington's forthcoming Paramount release, "The Antics of Ann," which Paramount expects to have ready for the public on November 5. This will mark the first appearance of the little star in some time. Edward Dillon directed the production and a strong supporting cast was supplied for the star. The scenic effects will include a cabaret interior, beach scenes, dance interludes, a football scrimmage and, in fact, almost everything that could be imagined of an unusual nature.

Elsie Ferguson's Second Picture on November 12

Elsie Ferguson's second photoplay, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," has been slated for release by Artcraft on November 12. Miss Ferguson made her screen debut in "Barbary Sheep."

"The Rise of Jennie Cushing" was shown privately in the executive offices of Artcraft, and much satisfaction was expressed at the production. President Walter E. Greene heartily congratulated Miss Ferguson upon her artistic work.

The photoplay is taken from the book of the same title by Mary S. Watts and deals with the duty of society toward homeless and friendless children.

New Blackton Feature Follows Book Closely

The story of "The Judgment House," which has been announced for release through Paramount, on November 19, as the first of the J. Stuart Blackton productions of Sir Gilbert Parker's novels, is said to be one that is particularly powerful and in which the producer has followed the lines of the story with fidelity.

Wilfred Lucas will be seen as Byng, Conway Tearle as Stafford, Violet Heming as Jasmine, Paul Doucet as Fellowes, Crazy Thunder as Krool, Florence Deshon as Al'mah and Luciel Hamill as Lou, the coster girl.

Marcus Loew Makes Another Trip to Cleveland

Marcus Loew spent a recent Friday in Cleveland, evidently looking for more theatrical plums to pick. Just two months ago he bought almost all the shares of the Stillman theatre stock, and followed by securing control of the largest house in Toledo. Last week he went back to Cleveland, where it is reported he is planning to take over three more houses, one of them being the Duchess and the others suburban theatres. It is also considered likely that a new theatre will be built in Cleveland by Mr. Loew, equal to the Stillman.

Jack Kuhn, who has been managing the Stillman since it was taken over by the Loew interests, accompanied Mr. Loew to Toledo, where he will remain temporarily in charge of the new Loew house.

Baby Ivy Ward Has Emotional Role in "Draft 258"

When Metro's patriotic special production, "Draft 258," starring Mabel Taliaferro, is released, Metro promises exhibitors and fans that some clever and exceptional emotional acting will be disclosed in the work of three-year-old Baby Ivy Ward, who has the part of a Belgian child. She was presented in Metro's previous patriotic production, "The Slacker," which was made by William Christy Cabanne, director of "Draft 258" and co-author with June Mathis. The picture is expected to add new laurels to Miss Taliaferro's list of successes on stage and screen.

Hearst-Pathe Shows Our Soldiers in France

What are claimed by the International Film Service, Inc., as the first pictures actually showing the training of the American soldiers in France are presented in the Hearst-Pathe News No. 85, a current release. Not only are these pictures said to be remarkable in showing what the American boys are doing, but they are also reputed to be exceptional from a photographic standpoint.

Included in the pictures are scenes wherein General Pershing and General Petain, the French Commander-in-Chief, are shown reviewing the troops at the close of the day's work, and the shoulder to shoulder allied comrades' march to their barracks.

Delayed in Publication, Conditions Are Changed

Through a delay in the publication of an article describing conditions in Canada, over the signature of W. A. Bach, in Motion Picture News of some weeks ago, conditions which the writer mentioned in his article had changed when the story appeared, thus giving rise to contradictory remarks from other sources, one instance of which was disclosed in an article of refutation published over the signature of L. Ernest Ouimet.

Coincidence Crops Out in Florence Reed's Career

If there is such a thing as coincidence, that thing has been disclosed in the career of Florence Reed, screen and stage star.

It is told that a few years ago Miss Reed did not number among her treasures a Broadway reputation as an actress, although the populace of a Massachusetts town, where she was appearing in stock, simply went "wild" over her. And maybe it was this fact that gave Miss Reed the ambition to play the part of "Body" in "The Struggle Everlasting," which was to be produced in New York. Nothing but Broadway reputation could turn the trick, and, alas, Miss Reed had it not—then.

But how times have changed! After knocking them off the seats in Morosco's stock company in Los Angeles Miss Reed felt herself getting closer to that Broadway reputation, but it had not yet appeared, as it did later.

In the meantime, other ambitions were aroused by "The Struggle Everlasting," it is told. James Kirkwood suddenly acquired the ambition to direct it, and Bennett Musson opined that he would like nothing better than adapting the piece for for the screen. Naturally, they did not know Miss Reed wanted the star role reserved for her.

Then Larry Giffin, play broker, took the piece in hand and put it before Harry Rapf, who arranged to make a picture of it. Royle, the author, asked who Mr. Rapf had in mind for the role of "Body." "Florence Reed," said the manager. "And whom to direct the picture?" And the answer was, "James Kirkwood." "And to adapt the play?" And again came the answer, "Bennett Musson." And thus the ambitions were brought together.

Can you beat this coincidence stuff?

General to Release Physical Culture Screen Magazine

A NEW wrinkle in the way of screen novelties is casting its shadow upon the horizon of the industry, according to an announcement made by General Film last week concerning a new feature which it plans to release in the future.

The subject which General Film expects to be one of the most unique and novel film features produced in many months is Bernard Macfadden's Physical Culture Screen Magazine, scheduled for release monthly in one reel. The first number of this new screen magazine is dated for November 5, and is expected to offer something refreshingly new for the motion picture audiences. In view of the trend of thought stimulated by the drafting and training of huge armies for service abroad, the Physical Culture Screen Magazine promises to strike a popular chord. The prominence of the editor, Bernard Macfadden, as a physical culture expert, predicts that the magazine will carry something of real value to every man, woman and child anxious to improve his or her own health through the medium of strengthening and graceful exercises. The subjects to be included in the first number of the Physical Culture Magazine will be muscular poses, wrestling, deep breathing, gymnastic exercises for girls, classical dancing, laughing as an exercise, and recreative stunts for youngsters, to be followed by more strenuous exercises.

These various subjects will be pictured with the aid of some of America's men and women athletes. Miss Vera Roehm, George Bothner, middle-weight wrestler, and Miss Margaret Crawford, classical dancer, are among the best known experts who assist Editor MacFadden in preparing the first release.

The Physical Culture Screen Magazine will be produced by the Physical Culture Photo Plays Company, of which Bernard Macfadden is president and treasurer; M. Macfadden, vice president; Robert R. Reynolds, secretary and managing director. The executive offices of the company are located in the Flatiron Building, New York. The company will produce photoplays dealing with physical subjects of which the magazine will be one of the most important factors.

Essanay Announces Titles of Its New Scenic Series

ESSANAY this week announced the titles of its new series of scenic pictures, which are to have a screen time of about fifteen minutes each. The pictures, it is said, are of such nature that they may be used in connection with any sort of program, whether the feature picture be comedy, comedy-drama or tragedy. The fact that they are short is also cited by Essanay as an advantage.

It is planned to release the subjects weekly, beginning about the first of December. The titles of the first ten are: "Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick," Northeastern Canada; "Lake Louise. Visiting a Fairyland Which Artists of Book and Brush Have Proclaimed the Loveliest Spot in North America"; "Banff National Park. A Trip Through the Great Playground of Canada, Covering an Area of 2,000 square miles in the Heart of the Rocky Mountains Park"; "The Great Natural Industries of Canada"; "Water Powers of Western Canada"; "Through Canada from Coast to Coast"; "How Canada and the Farmer Co-operate in Grain Raising"; "Agricultural Opportunities in Western Canada"; and "Scenes Among the Navajos."

The first series of pictures covers a range of territory all the way from Canada to the Southwest of the United States. The photography is said to be excellent, showing the scenery to the very best advantage. The pictures show many of the scenes familiar to tourists, but also get away from the beaten path and give many glimpses of out-of-the-way places of rare scenic beauty, and depict also the habits and characteristics of the natives.

Army Camps of Hearst-Pathe Arouse Interest

Much interest has been aroused wherever the Hearst-Pathe has been shown in that company's enterprise in getting out special editions for each section of the country showing the National Guard troops in camp. Pathe announced this week that exhibitors have not been slow in trying out the local "pull" of these special editions.

The first of these subjects was issued the week of October 21, showing a bird's-eye view of each National Guard cantonment, close-ups of the higher officers and other interesting points. The sixteen camps of the National Army are now covered in the same way, but release dates have not yet been announced.

Mutual Weekly Changes to Sunday

Mutual Weekly, the one-reel news feature released through the Mutual Film Corporation, will hereafter be available to exhibitors on Sundays instead of on Wednesday as heretofore. Mutual Weekly is produced by the Gaumont Company. It is made up of current news pictures, assembled at the latest possible moment before shipment to exhibitors.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Mutual Weekly Shows Acceptance of War Motors

The acceptance of the newly designed heavy service war trucks by the Government is a feature of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, No. 148, it was announced last week. The reel is scheduled as a current release, being put out October 28. The acceptance of the trucks marks the completion of a task which sets a new record in the designing of fifty engineers selected from automotive industries who designed it in less than one month, the complete truck being ready for inspection in three-fourths the usually required time.

President Wilson is pictured again in this issue of the Mutual Weekly, the second time in the act of affixing his signature to the Food Bill, which will guarantee the success of the United States and its allies in the war.

One subject in Weekly, No. 148, which calls for special mention, shows the presentation to General Joffre by General Pershing of the "Golden Book Memorial," which contains all press notices published about the hero of the Marne during his recent trip to the United States.

Trench Battery Shown in Baltimore

Intimate and extensive views of the Maryland Trench Mortar Battery, which were taken especially for Baltimoreans, were shown in Baltimore last week. These men are now at Camp Mills, Mineola, Long Island, and are a part of the "Rainbow Division" which will soon be fighting in France. Under Captain Bob Gill, the boys are shown at drill, on review and at their games.

Paralta Vice-President Now a Soldier

Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta Plays, Inc., has become a soldier in the National Army, and is now in training at Camp Lewis, Washington.

The night before Mr. Kane's departure for camp the Paralta studios staff and producing companies gave him a farewell dinner in Los Angeles. Nearly two hundred people were present, and every branch of the company was represented. Nat I. Brown, general manager of Paralta, represented the New York interests.

Hart and Fairbanks Reissues Good in West

Manager Bromley, of the Triangle Exchange in Omaha, Neb., beamed an optimistic smile last week, according to reports, when he declared that every town of over 5,000 population in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Northern Kansas has been booked with the Fairbanks and Hart reissues.

Nelson Visits Home Office

A. J. Nelson, branch manager for General Film Company at Washington, D. C., was a visitor at the home office of General last week. He reports a strong demand for the O. Henry and George Ade releases, as well as an unusual amount of interest in the de luxe production of "Camille," with Helen Hesperia, just released.

BRAY STUDIOS SECURE VALUABLE ALLIANCE

Every exhibitor who has learned the wisdom of giving his patrons the best the producer offers will see the immediate value to himself in the new alliance entered into between the Bray Studios, Inc., and six of the leading periodicals of the day.

The Bray Pictograph has always been noted for its artistic and entertaining quality, but its producers have felt that without sacrificing this essential, they could add greatly to the esteem in which it would be held if they could assure exhibitors and patrons that the subjects treated and the manner of their presentation would resemble in character that of a high-class magazine.

In the field of the printed magazine were periodicals of the nature and with the class of readers aimed at by the Pictograph, and it needed only the enthusiasm and effort of Mr. N. H. Friend, Business Manager for the Bray Studios, to effect an alliance of practical co-operation between the two. That the editors, Bruce Barton of Every Week, John A. Sleicher of Leslie's Weekly, Gertrude Land of the Woman's Home Companion, E. F. Warner of Field and Stream, Waldemar Kaempffert of The Popular Science Monthly, and Carl Hovey of the Metropolitan, met Mr. Friend more than half way is proof of the respect in which the screen is now held as a dignified and powerful medium of communication between author and public. Nor is their co-operation merely nominal. The editors of the respective publications will furnish, from articles which they have accepted, material for screen purposes and will supervise its editing and titling. Members of their staffs, and contributors whom the film men could not otherwise reach, will also assist. While not yet at liberty to give details, Mr. Friend promises some extremely interesting surprises in the names which the Pictograph will bear in its Table of Contents.

The periodicals named give an idea of the scope of the new venture. Leslie's Weekly is about to cover the foreign field with some entirely new and exclusive war material; the Woman's Home Companion is a leader in all matters which concern the progressive mother and house mistress, and has already, through its Better Films Department, shown how heartily it is in sympathy with every effort of the exhibitor to reach a better public; Field and Stream and The Popular Science Monthly each occupy a unique and long-established place, Metropolitan numbers among its contributors the most thoughtful of the radical leaders of the country, while of Every Week it is sufficient to say that it is the child of Bruce Barton.

The exhibitor who books and who advertises the new Pictograph has at his back the best editorial minds and the most eminent writers on special subjects who are now contributing to the public press. He has, as a possible patronage, the eight or ten million readers already familiar with the periodicals listed. The "short special" has for some time been demonstrating its ability to "pull"; here is more power to its elbow.

WITH OUR BOYS IN FRANCE

For three months past we have had glimpses of American soldiers in France, usually marching in review. But the Pathe two-reel film, "Under the Stars and Stripes in France," just released, is devoted entirely to every phase of the life of the men composing the first section of the American army abroad.

It is a busy and apparently happy life. There is plenty of hard work, when trenches are dug, machine guns fired, and bombs thrown under the direction of French officers. The men build barracks, have strenuous running exercises, and training in charging, falling flat, and in carrying wounded. But work over, a man can sit at ease and enjoy the good food provided from the field kitchens, sharing it perhaps with a French comrade; he can help with the harvest and with the harvester's bottle of native wine; he can exchange experiences with a veteran of 1870 and play with the kiddies, or learn French grammar from demoiselles in the charming old French villages.

There is not a foot of the film that is not vividly human and interesting, while the beautiful country in which the army is encamped adds to the attractiveness of the scenes.

The film closes with a review of the troops which gives more than a hint of the enormous number of men already "over there."

WHERE EGGS COME HIGH

When a bird is so bold that he plucks fish right out of the camp frying pan, and so greedy that he discloses the whereabouts of his 11,500-foot-high nest, just for the sake of an extra meal, he is properly named the "camp robber." These are a few of the tricks of the Rocky Mountain jay, as disclosed in Gaumont Reel Life, No. 78. The pictures were taken in winter and include a number of beautiful snow scenes.

Not all eggs are as "steep" as this, but they are much steeper than they used to be, if the double-exposure film entitled "The High Cost of Living Then and Now" tells the truth. A five dollar bill in 1848 was not a bad week's salary and seemed to do the trick even better than five times the amount at present.

Anyone who dines in a Pullman wonders at times how the thing is managed. Gaumont takes us behind the scenes of a dining car running eighty miles an hour and discloses the culinary machinery. Supplies, coal, and ice are stowed away underneath the car. In the six by fourteen-foot kitchen two cooks and two helpers prepare all the food served. In the diner itself, when not in use, new waiters learn every detail in the correct setting of the table and removal of dishes. It is amusing to see how many corrections in small matters the experienced teacher finds necessary, though to our eyes the pupil waiter has performed his task with quickness and exactitude.

SKY HIGH PATRIOTISM

There are more ways than one of being a patriot. To boost the Liberty Loan, "Daredevil Ward" of the United States Aviation Corps (Universal Current Events, No. 24) shows how entirely at home he is in high altitudes by riding a bicycle round the coping of a building hundreds of feet above the street. For pluck and a cool head he must have found a close second in the cameraman.

The enemy that above all else is to be conquered by the dollars we are loaning Uncle Sam is the vicious submarine. The British Government has sent us one of these monsters captured by her navy, and this issue of Current Events shows it being landed in New York.

Engineers who are making ready to do their part demonstrate their ability at bridge building, landing fighters, and covering an advance, while President and Mrs. Wilson applaud. Two devoted children of France, Marshal Joffre and Mme. Maitre, receive tokens of the admiration and heartfelt respect in which the sister republics hold them.

TIMELY INFORMATION

Uncle Sam's third of his Hints to Housewives takes the form of a meatless meat loaf, a handsome and appetizing article made of a cup each of carrots, boiled rice, tomato, and chopped peanuts.

How an aeroplane gun operates is shown in the very clever drawings of J. F. Leventhal, assisted in an editorial capacity by Waldemar Kaempffert of the Popular Science Monthly. As the highest speed can be obtained in a flying machine whose power is located in the front, the gun must be so arranged as not to interfere with the operation of the propeller. The drawings demonstrate how the gun is automatically fired between the revolving blades. A type of hand-operated gun is also demonstrated in a lively aerial combat.

Hunting humpback whales for their valuable oil is shown in a series of pictures which include the harpooning of the monster and the manner of drawing it on to the deck, with brief glimpses of the method of securing the blubber and rendering out the oil.

LITTLE FRIENDS

In his latest reel, "The Smaller Monkeys" (Educational Films Corporation), Mr. Ditmars introduces to us some quite likable little beasts from South America and Africa. All of them are tiny enough and seemingly gentle enough for pets, and all have unusually large and lustrous eyes. The South American saki, who sees fit to show his tongue and bad manners before the camera; the spider monkey, all legs and arms; the Woolly Monkey from the River of Doubt; and the Sumatra Gibbon who literally "walks like a man," would endear themselves to any audience and would cause shouts of pleasure at a children's matinee.

GUNS AND FISHES

Happy Hooligan has shown notable powers of "imaginative memory" on other occasions, but nothing to equal his "Tale of a Fish" (Pathe). You see, Happy as a fisherman was once guilty of an act of kindness to a little fish, and apparently fishes have memories. Also they grow big. So when Happy and the crew of the pirate ship had a difference of opinion and Happy found himself in the watery depths and about to emulate Jonah, he reaped the reward of his past performance. The cartoon is more than a little funny.

On the same reel with the above is a short subject produced by International showing how government rifles are made. The reel displays the fine photography and careful editing characteristic of all the Pathe productions.

FOOD, AND SHIPS TO CARRY IT

In its Reel Life, No. 79, Gaumont handles in admirable fashion two of the liveliest industrial topics of the day—our food supply and the building of the ships needed to hurry it across the water.

The Argentine has come in for a great deal of publicity these days. The probability of her definitely allying herself against Germany is strong. So that timely interest of the keenest is felt in pictures such as are here displayed showing the extensive scale on which her beef and wheat industries are carried on.

Building Our Wooden Fleet is an extremely interesting picture, taken at an immense mill and ship-building yard in the yellow pine section of the South. Here the great trees are felled and trimmed, and sawed into planks which in turn are trimmed and bent to the curve of the ship's hull. The subject concludes with the launching of the largest freight and passenger steamer ever constructed in the South.

A Dry Land Periscope affords a novel and amusing method for watching the game without paying an entrance fee. But why the closing scene, Mr. Editor? Impropriety is bad enough; when it is associated with children it is entirely offensive.

TELLING ABOUT THE MARINES

While most of the actual training for fighting is being given our boys in France, the United States Marines are meeting conditions here which are made to duplicate exactly those at the front. Universal Animated Weekly, No. 95, has a fine series of pictures taken "Somewhere in America" which show the men at work. The first "shot" of the camera is made head on at and above the marching body of men, so that rank behind rank is seen receding in the distance. Other pictures show a heliographer at work, and the answer that comes in the shape of a field gun hauled over the ground by a caterpillar tractor. This last too is taken head on, and affords an excellent idea of how these new "army mules" operate.

Colonel Teddy may not go to war, but he is keeping fit, just the same, and is here seen hiking over the grounds of his training camp with a body of followers notably less in numbers at the conclusion than at the beginning of the tramp.

The Oriental Pageant given by British Indians on the beautiful Hampstead Grounds of Lord Levershulme in London lends charm and variety to the more prosaic subjects. An unusually fine cartoon by Hy Mayer concludes the reel.

FLAMES

While there are several interesting and attractive subjects in Mutual Weekly, No. 147, notably a scene in the town of Fresno, California, which is collecting a mountain of shoes for the needy in France, its most striking feature is a series of notably fine pictures of the great fire that destroyed 800,000 bushels of grain at the Brooklyn docks. Views of fire fighting and snapshots of plunging walls are interspersed with pictures of the towering flames that no painter could surpass in splendor.

MARCHING FOR DEMOCRACY

From all over our broad land comes the sound of tramping feet, in the great forward move of democracy's army, Mutual Weekly, No. 145, shows two battalions of these, animated by one purpose, yet strikingly unlike in character. At West Point the cadet corps is seen marching with its marvellously machine-like precision before the Japanese Commission. The footage of the film is generous and allows the spectator ample time to catch the rhythmic swing of the marching and the beauty of the scene. Another fine army is the band of 30,000 trained nurses who paraded so impressively on New York's Red Cross Day.

The hearts and footsteps of these splendid young men and women are still light. But France bears the weight of sorrow and fatigue. Yet in the latest pictures taken on the front of men returning from the battlefield there is no sign of faltering. The even ranks march steadily, though a hard day's fighting has just been completed.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Paramount in St. Louis Likes New Offices

The new Paramount offices in St. Louis, at 3927 Olive street, have been occupied by G. E. McKean and his assistants for only a short time, but already the difference that plenty of room and much new equipment has made is being felt by the entire force. The building was erected for the Vandeventer Trust Company, and the four commodious vaults are ideal for a film exchange. The ground floor is used for a waiting room, cashier's office and the booking department. The second floor is taken up with the executive offices, three in number, another waiting lobby, and the poster, slide, and advertising departments. The location is about a block from Film Row at Grand and Olive, and is within easy walking distance from that point. The exchange, which is known as the K. C. Feature Film Company, handles also the Artcraft productions.

Middle West Conditions Good, Says Select

Conditions in the middle west are most favorable for high-grade pictures, according to the report which C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager for Select Pictures Corporation, has made to General Manager Arthur S. Kane on the conclusion of a three weeks' trip which embraced St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines and Pittsburg in its itinerary.

Mr. Shurtleff has been visiting Select branches in that territory, as well as establishing the recently announced branch opened at St. Louis and placed under the management of E. W. Dustin.

According to Mr. Shurtleff, there is a very general recognition on the part of the exhibitor of the advantages accruing from showing only the highest grade pictures and running them for more than one day. Runs of two or more days are becoming much commoner than heretofore. With this movement is the accompanying demand for star pictures, and only the very best of these. Also there is a willingness on the part of the exhibitor to pay a much better price for these attractions than he has been accustomed to paying for the program features which he has been showing under a policy of daily changes.

Rosenthal District Supervisor for Universal

Barney Rosenthal, head of the Universal exchange at 2116 Locust street, St. Louis, has been made district supervisor over the Kansas City and Cairo, Ill., offices, and other branches which take in part of Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Illinois and Kansas territory. Mr. Rosenthal's headquarters will continue to be in St. Louis, where he got his first experience in the film distributing business, with the old Swanson-Crawford exchange in the early days.

Here and There

B. C. Steele, former manager of the Lucier theatre, Lakewood, Cleveland, has joined the Vitagraph sales force and expects to cover Northern Ohio. It is also announced that next week Charles W. Schweitzer will sever his connection as treasurer of B. F. Keith's Hippodrome in Cleveland to sell Vitagraph pictures, traveling out of Cleveland.

Charles Hall has been appointed manager of the Union Film Company in Cleveland, taking the place of Tom Colby, who has been drafted. Maurice Lebensberger, treasurer of the Standard Film Service Company, has also joined the colors.

Ira Aaronson, who has been Pittsburgh salesman for Jewel Productions, Inc., since the formation of that company, has been appointed manager of the Detroit office, succeeding Ralph Pielow. This office has just changed its headquarters from 120 Broadway to the new film building at 59 Elizabeth street. Mr. Aaronson before joining Jewel was manager of the Cameraphone theatre, Pittsburgh.

The Pathe Exchange of Omaha gave a private showing of "Stranded In Arcady," Mrs. Vernon Castle's first Pathe Play, last week, which was attended by quite a number of exhibitors. Among those present were Mr. Brown and Mr. Scofield, of the Dundee Theatre Company; LeDioux and LeMarquan, of the Empress theatre; Mrs. Ellsworth, of the Orpheum, South Omaha; Eleanor Duffy, society editress; Mr. Hallgren, Suburban theatre; Mr. Jansen, Hamilton and Lathrop theatres; Mr. Harding, Princess theatre; Miss Hetherington, of Pathe, and Mr. Holan, manager of Pathe.

District Manager A. D. Flinton and H. C. Wreath, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, were in Omaha, Neb., a few days ago, seeking a location for a Paramount Exchange. It is said that the exchange in Des Moines is to be moved to Omaha.

Branches of the General Film Company are reporting that the weekly releases of George Ade fables and the monthly Chaplin re-issues are growing in popularity.

Milton J. Goldbaum, who has been traveling representative for the St. Louis branch of the Universal Film Company for the past two years, has been appointed manager of the Cairo, Ill., office, to take the place of H. W. Talbot, who has been sent to Kansas City, to be assistant manager of that office.

Cecil Mayberry has been added to the Hoffman Four Square forces in the Empress Building in St. Louis, under the management of S. J. Baker. Mr. Mayberry has been identified with the film business for a number of years, and understands both the exhibitors' and the exchangemen's side of the business.

Harold Rodner, former Philadelphia manager of the Peerless Film Exchange, having gone to Camp Meade at his country's call, J. M. Flynn, assistant manager, has been made manager. Mr. Flynn was with the World in Philadelphia as assistant manager for several years before joining the Peerless on its formation last year.

M. Milder, manager of Select Pictures in Philadelphia, has appointed as his assistant Herbert W. Given, former manager of Triangle and previously acting manager of Paramount in Philadelphia. A. G. Buck, formerly manager of K-E-S-E for Philadelphia, is special traveling representative for Select in that territory.

The Popular Film Exchange, having as its slogan "Popular Stars in Popular Films," is being established at 1331 Vine street, Philadelphia, under the management of Barrist & Goodman.

The Pan American Film Company, David B. Gally, director, has established an office at 1337 Vine street, Philadelphia. This company will make any kind of film, paying special attention to commercial work. Pictures will also be booked for church and other similar entertainments. Mr. Gally was with the old Lubin Company and has had other experiences in the producing lines.

J. O. Brooks, former manager of the Madison Film Exchange in Detroit, and for two years with Paramount, has gone with Goldwyn as traveling representative in Michigan. Mr. Brooks much prefers the road work to being inside. A. I. Shapiro continues as manager at Detroit.

Ira Aaronson, formerly an exhibitor in Pittsburgh, has been appointed manager of the Jewel Productions Exchange in Detroit, succeeding Ralph Piewlow.

Ray J. Branch, former manager of the United Theatre Equipment corporation branch in Detroit, is now Michigan traveling representative for Select Pictures.

Milton Feld Manages Jewel Kansas City Branch

Milton Feld, formerly with Vitagraph in Kansas City, Mo., has been appointed Kansas City manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., succeeding R. M. Ward. This marks Feld's return to the industry following his retirement recently owing to an injury.

The Kansas City Jewel Exchange is one of the largest on the Jewel list, occupying almost the entire fourth floor at 1,025 Main street. Harry Berman, manager of the New York office, has been in Kansas City aiding Feld in getting things under way, incidentally superintending the bookings of "Come Through" and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

Perry Succeeds Farrell for Pathe in Boston

Edward J. Farrell, who has been in charge of the Pathe office in Boston for the past year and a half, has severed his connections with that organization, and has been succeeded by C. W. Perry, formerly manager of the Pathe exchange in Detroit. The change in management of the Boston office came as a distinct surprise to Boston film circles.

Omaha Bluebird Moves to New Quarters

The Bluebird Exchange in Omaha, Neb., has moved to 214-216 South Fourteenth street, where it is occupying the entire second floor. The change was made necessary through the fact that the branch outgrew its former quarters. The new location is nearer the center of the business district.

Attractive announcement cards were sent out by Manager C. D. Calvert.

Alfred Tanzer Joins Paramount Chicago Forces

Alfred Tanzer, for the past year or more assistant manager of the Mutual Film Exchange in Milwaukee, has resigned that position to go with the Paramount people to their Chicago office. Mr. Tanzer will take charge of the office detail and help arrange the new exchange which Paramount will shortly open on the twenty-first floor of the Consumers building, Chicago.

"According to the plans now under way," said Mr. Tanzer, "the new exchange will be a model of efficiency."

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Hall and Oldknow Busy Organizing Sales Forces

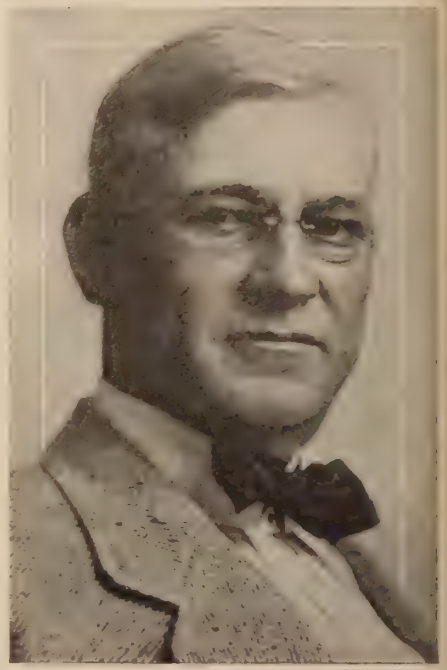
U. S. Booking Corporation Announces Personnel of Membership—Country-Wide Campaign Begun, Salesmen Already on the Job—First Release Soon

HAVING completed all arrangements for the launching of the newly-organized U. S. Exhibitors Corporation, for which Frank Hall and William Oldknow are sponsors and executive heads, active steps were taken during the past week to organize "live-wire" sales force to cover the entire country. A number of representative salesmen are now actively engaged in placing the new organization's plans before the exhibitor, and from reports that have been received at the home office indications are that the plan is being well received by those exhibitors to whom it has been announced.

Among those who have cast their lot with the new organization are: Joseph Partridge, one-time general manager of the V. L. S. E. New York exchange and who also served as a special representative in Canada for the General Film Co. and was for two years its Canadian manager. Later Mr. Partridge was with the McClure series department of the Triangle Distributing Corporation; William Alexander, who has been with the Fox Film Corporation, and who has had long experience both in the theatrical and motion picture fields and is particularly well equipped to handle the foreign business of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, having served for two years as foreign representative for Fox in all parts of the world. In that period Mr. Alexander established twenty-five exchanges for the Fox enterprises. Mr. Alexander exploited "The Daughter of the Gods" in London; Lynn S. Card, who left the L. S. Card Booking Corporation, the New Jersey exchange of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, to join the U. S. organization. Mr. Card was formerly the Jersey manager for the Mutual Film Corporation and also manager of the Civilization Film Corporation, a New Jersey state rights organization, of which Frank Hall is president. Mr. Card will devote his efforts to the development of the New York territory for the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation; and Louis D. Lyons, who will represent the new organization in Jersey, in which territory he has had long experience. Mr. Lyons formerly represented Pathe in New Jersey and served with the Mutual and the Civilization Film Corporation, and is generally accredited a live wire in the business.

Newly Organized Company to Produce Comedies

The Film d'Art Company, recently organized for the purpose of producing one and two-reel comedies, announces through its president, John D. Perry, that within the next week a series of one and two-reel comedies written by Mr. Perry will be shown to the trade. The comedies are being produced under the personal direction of Mr. Perry, who has acted before the camera and who for some time served in the capacity of general manager for the New Art Film Company. He was, also, affiliated with the dramatic stock and repertoire companies. Before taking up the production end of the picture industry, Mr. Perry made a careful study of the conditions and concludes that there is a big market for refined comedies.



"Auntie's Triumph" and "Cousins" will be the first releases of the new company. These will be shown to the trade within the week. Mr. Perry has under production, "Poor Uncle Ted" and "Peace." Those featured in the Perry productions are: Albert Roccardi, Jeanne Hall, Aurora Wells and Charles Ascott. The method of release has, up to the present, not been announced.

The officers of the company are: John D. Perry, president; S. H. Wells, vice-president, and William H. Wells, secretary and treasurer.

All But Six States Sold for "Lust of the Ages"

THE Ogden Pictures Corporation announces that during the past week eleven territories were disposed of for "The Lust of the Ages," the first Lillian Walker production for the independent market. With the exception of the rights included in the States of Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, all territory has been disposed of, including the foreign rights. S. Greiver of Greiver & Herz, Chicago, who last week bought the rights for Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois, says that he will use seven prints in this territory. Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia were bought by Mayer Silverman, representing the Liberty Film Renting Company of Pittsburgh, and the New England States were bought by Harry Segal, representing the Globe Feature Film Company of Boston.

Jesse Goldburg, exploitation manager of the Ogden Pictures, announces that the second Lillian Walker production, adapted from David Graham Phillips' novel, "The Grain of Dust," is now well under way and every effort is being exerted to conclude the making of the film that it may be ready for release early in November.

Wm. H. Clune

Olcott's "The Belgian" Shown for Review at Strand

"The Belgian," Sidney Olcott's production for the independent market, was shown last week for review at the Strand theatre. Walter Whiteside and Valentine Grant are featured. Mr. Olcott announces that he will follow "The Belgian" with three other productions, to be produced under his personal direction within the coming year. Mr. Olcott will be remembered for his production of "From Manger to the Cross." He has directed Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and other prominent stars.

Edward J. O'Donnell, who is handling the exploitation of Olcott's feature, left for Chicago immediately after the trade showing at the Strand last Thursday, where he expects to give a trade showing for Chicagoans at one of the large theatres.

Noble's Production, "Shame," Shown for First Time

John W. Noble's first production for the independent market, "Shame," was shown last week for the review of prominent state rights men in Joseph Miles' projection room. The production was shown in sixty-eight hundred feet. The story opens with a prologue. It is said that the feature is a strong offering. Zena Keefe is featured. In the supporting cast are: Niles Welch, Joyce Fair, Jack Dunn, Lionel Belmore, Paul Daucet and Dell Boone. Herbert Carleton did the camera work. The picture has not yet been shown for review, but an early showing is announced.

Deposit System Works Fine in Omaha, Says Manager

J. W. Rachman, of the Omaha branch of the Standard Feature Film Company, Neb., writes that he has adopted a deposit plan that is new in the Omaha territory. A deposit covering the full price of the picture is required for the first booking, after which the exhibitor is carried on an open account. Mr. Rachman announces that the first trial given this plan proved a big success, and since its inception a better business and better collections have been noted.

General Enterprises Acquires Rights to "The Liar"

General Enterprises, Inc., announce the purchase of the world rights to "The Liar," produced under the direction of William A. Haddock. The production is in six reels. Gail Kane and Stanley Walpole have the principal roles. Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin negotiated the transaction. The story deals with the dangers that face a young girl who comes to New York without the protection of friends. General Enterprises is offering the feature on the independent market. The foreign markets are in charge of M. R. Fink.

Star of Tucker's Production, "Mother," an Author

Elizabeth Risdon, the star of George Loane Tucker's late production, "Mother," has written a book dealing with the subject of "make-up" and character study. Miss Risdon, although not yet twenty-four years of age, is featured in the title role of Mr. Tucker's production and, it is said that she gives a characterization of a mother that would be hard to equal. Miss Risdon is now appearing in George Broadhurst's stage production, "Misalliance,' running at the new Broadhurst theatre.

"West Progressive, Likes Novelty," Says Bob

Maurice Bob, President of Master Dramas, Says That the Western Buyer Demands Something New to Advertise His Purchase—Novelties in Demand

MAURICE H. BOB, president of Master Dramas Features, Inc., who is exploiting "Who's Your Neighbor?" through the Western territory, has written to Herman Becker, general manager of the company, in New York, that he is meeting with much success with this production. Mr. Bob is a well-known man in the picture business, and during his trip through the West he has made some interesting observations, which he gives in the following interview:

"You've got to come West to see the new bustle in the business. I don't say this to discredit the East, where the theatres and exchanges are also doing well, but you don't get the note of real prosperity, real activity and real optimism you find in the Middle West. Particularly in Chicago. It may be that the better business wave that has hit the picture houses reached the Middle West first. I don't know, and I am not enough of an expert to give reasons. I am only telling what I see. I took samples of all our advertising aids to show the Middle West buyers that what would appeal to one man might not appeal to another. A certain buyer came in and insisted upon seeing all our advertising matter. I showed him the two styles of window cards and half sheets, the different sets of lobby display photos, the sets of hand-colored photos, the display frames, the announcement slides and banners, the advertising mats, the newspaper cuts of scenes and players. But do you think I could suit him? He looked over each piece of material carefully, and then when I got through gave a grunt of evident dissatisfaction.

"'What's the matter?' I said, 'isn't there anything in this whole collection that appeals to you?'

"'Why, of course, there is,' he answered; 'I like the whole collection, but as a matter of fact it isn't enough!'

"I soon learned that he wanted a certain advertising novelty that is seldom put out with features, but which I had to promise to have made up in order to get his business. Perhaps that is why these Westerners seem to do better than the Eastern film men—they go to the very limit in advertising and in hustle!"

Mr. Bob announces that the states of Washington, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon, California, Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana and Northern New Jersey have been closed and that he will close ten Middle Western States before he leaves Chicago, where he writes Mr. Becker from the Hotel La Salle.

In the East General Manager Becker announces that deals are pending for the New England states, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Los Angeles Company to Make State Rights Features

A new film producing company, named Vista Films, Inc., has been organized at San Diego and will make five-reel subjects for the state rights market. M. De La Parelle is director, and is also author of the first story, titled "Stripped for a Million." Crane Wilbur is starred in this picture.

Cleveland Exhibitor Quits the Industry

Motion picture circles in Cleveland, O., were much surprised to learn last week that Louis Becht has decided to retire, and quit the industry. Becht was president of the Mall Company, and actively managed the Mall Duplex theatre. For twenty-five years he has been associated with amusement in various forms in Cleveland.

Becht's interests in the Mall have been transferred to Edward P. Strong, Fred Desberg and Joseph Laronge, and E. P. Carroll, former assistant manager, has been made manager of the theatre.

Florence Reed's Greatest Ambition Was Said to Have Been to Play the Leading Part in "The Struggle Everlasting," a Harry Rapf Production. Her Wish Has Been Gratified

Clara Kimball Young's Second Picture Completed

"Shirley Kaye," Adapted from the Stage Play in Which Elsie Ferguson Originated the Title Role, Is Said to Be Miss Young's Best

"SHIRLEY KAYE," Clara Kimball Young's second production, by her own company, is completed, announces Harry I. Garson, manager of the organization. Mr. Garson says that Miss Young's late picture is everything that he expected and that he feels that it will impress the public likewise.

The screen version is adapted from the stage play, which had a successful New York run a few seasons ago. Elsie Ferguson originated the title role, which part Miss Young presents in the screen version. In the supporting cast are: Corliss Giles, George Fawcett, George Backus, Claire Whitney, Helen Lindroth, John Sunderland, F. D. Winthrop and Frank Otto. Joseph Kaufman directed.

The story tells of the adventures of the daughter of the president of a large railroad who meets a young Westerner and plays "hide and seek" with him until she is assured that he really loves her. Another powerful factor in the financial world has a daughter whom he desires to be a social leader. He entrusts the task of "putting her in society" to Shirley Kaye. His daughter is engaged to the young Westerner. The Westerner, angry because he meets defeat at every turn at the hands of the Eastern girl, resolves to win her. It is said that the story offers opportunity for strong, dramatic acting and that Miss Young finds in it every opportunity to display her talents and not in a single instance does she slight these chances.

The release date for this production has not been announced..

Rankin Reports Success with "A Modern Lorelei"

CHARLES RANKIN, who recently acquired the world rights to "A Modern Lorelei," the Marine Film production, is now in the West arranging for the exploitation of this production. He reports that negotiations are now under way for the sale of practically the entire Middle West territory and he states that he will be in a position to announce the territory disposed of, within a few days.

"A Modern Lorelei" is in six reels. Tyrone Power is featured, with Frances Burnham carrying the principal feminine role. Ray Belasco has the juvenile lead. Joseph F. Lee, who is handling the Eastern territory for Mr. Hansen, showed the feature before the Pennsylvania Board of Censors and he reports that it was passed with only one or two minor changes. The production has been passed also by the Illinois board, without change.

When "A Modern Lorelei," under the title of "Lorelei of the Sea," was shown for review a month or so ago, critics pronounced it a picture of scenic beauty. There are more than two hundred and fifty diving girls shown in as many different scenes. The production was made off the coast of California. Henry Ott, who directed "Undine," is responsible for the direction of "A Modern Lorelei." Mr. Ott was six months making the production. Richard Willis wrote the story and made the adaptation.

SERVICE BUREAU MAKES ALL SUGGESTIONS PASS THE TEST

When the Exhibitors Service Bureau was launched by the NEWS it was announced that this should be the gathering place of the industry for men with ideas.

Turn to this department today and see how near this ideal has been reached, how well it represents the best suggestions that come from every branch of the industry.

And these suggestions are not printed because of their source, but because of their value to the exhibitor. No matter who may be the author each suggestion must pass the test of absolute worth. You'll not find any idea recommended to you as a good one simply because some one powerful in the motion picture field submitted it.

Here is a department dedicated to the exhibitor and the exhibitor alone. If you fail to read this department each week, you are deliberately avoiding something that will help you.

Read it now, and write to us your troubles, your ideas, your successes.

Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges Established in Canada

Arrangements have been completed for the establishing of Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges at the principal distribution points in Canada. The Canadian exchanges will be operated in conjunction with the Metro Pictures Service in Canada, it is stated. The exchanges will cover the three chief distributing points in Canada. Offices will be located with the Metro Pictures Service in Montreal, Toronto, St. Johns and New Brunswick. Northeastern Canada will be covered by the St. Johns office. Mr. Hoffman says that he has informed J. J. Unger, of the Metro Service, Montreal office, that special salesmen have been engaged to handle the Hoffman-Foursquare business.

Rights to "20,000 Leagues" Sold for Canada

Superfeatures Limited has closed all negotiations for the purchase of the entire Canadian rights to the feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and has secured bookings in the larger theatres. Charles Stevens is general manager for Superfeatures Limited. He has announced that he has "cleaned up" on "The Whip," which he controls in Canada, with the exception of a small bit of Ontario.

"Lust of the Ages" Booked Heavily in Canada

Globe Films Limited announce that the first Lillian Walker feature, "The Lust of the Ages," has been booked heavily through Ontario and will have its first showing in the Madison theatre, Bloor Street, Toronto. This theatre also played "Birth," to women only, which film is being released by Globe Films, Ltd.

General Enterprise, Inc., Report Good Sales of "Warrior"

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, who are handling the exploitation of "The Warrior," the rights to which were bought by General Enterprise, Inc., from Harry Raver, who introduced the seven-part feature, starring Maciste, the giant Italian, in America, report that they have met with success throughout the country in the disposition of territory. The Northwest, Alaska, Canada and many of the large Eastern States have been sold and Messrs. Lubin and Sawyer announce that they expect to have the entire country disposed of within the next few weeks.

Welfare League to See Tucker's Production, "Mother"

General Enterprise, Inc., which is handling "Mother," George Loane Tucker's late production, featuring Elizabeth Risdon, has received a request from Edward J. Meagher, chairman of the Mutual Welfare League, Sing Sing prison, for a showing of this picture before the inmates of the prison. General Enterprise has made arrangements to show the picture at the prison October 17th. It is expected that Mr. Tucker will be present at the showing.

The theme of "Mother" deals with the mother-love instinct and shows the influence of a mother's love over a wayward son whose headstrong tendencies eventually lead him to a prison cell.

Lesser to Go to Cleveland for Conference

Sol L. Lesser plans to be in Cleveland the early part of November for a conference in connection with the National State Rights Buyers Association of which he is the head. While here he will be the guest of Leon D. Netter, with whom he is associated in the Masterpiece Film Attractions.

"The Warrior" Show to Members of Union League Club

Through the courtesy of Arthur H. Sawyer of General Enterprises, Inc., the screen spectacle, "The Warrior," starring Maciste, "the strongest man in the world," was shown on Tuesday evening October 11th, to the members of the Union League Club, Fifth avenue, New York.

Raver's Feature, "Public Defender," Praised

"The Public Defender," Written by Mayer Goldman, Prominent New York Attorney, Is Praised by Sing Sing Inmates—An Appeal for Official Public Defenders in Courts

"THE Public Defender," Harry Raver's late production, which was shown recently for review and is now ready for distribution, has been passed upon by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Mr. Raver announces that the Board sent in a special report, which stated that "The Public Defender" is a fine example of a photoplay with a purpose.

Mr. Raver stated, also, that one of New York's most successful playwrights has communicated with him asking permission to dramatize the story of "The Public Defender." The playwright stated, announced Mr. Raver, that the theme possessed potential possibilities for a stage version and that it could serve as the basis of an exceptionally strong drama for the speaking stage.

The "Star Bulletin," an illustrated monthly, published by inmates of Sing Sing prison, contains in its current issue a criticism of this picture and the critic writes that the picture will make a profound impression with the powerful message which it will bring to everyone who sees it. "The picture," writes the 'Star Bulletin's' critic, "combines all the painful truthfulness of the 'Third Degree' with the tense heart interest of 'On Trial.'"

Mayer Goldman, prominent criminal lawyer of the New York bar, who started the movement which resulted in the appointment of nineteen Public Defenders in the United States and co-author of the story from which "The Public Defender" was adapted to the screen by Frederick Rath, has received hundreds of letters praising him for this effort. Acting on the suggestion of several lawyers and judges who witnessed the trade showing at Hotel Astor, two weeks ago, Mr. Goldman has decided to utilize the picture as a help to a series of lectures which he will give on this subject in New York during the winter.

Smaller Houses Insist Upon Star, Says Goldburg

JESSE GOLDBURG, exploitation and production manager for the Ogden Pictures Corporation, who has just returned from a trip through the Middle West, reports that, while there, he made a study of conditions in connection with the exhibiting end of the business. Mr. Goldburg states that until recently he has not paid particular attention to the theatre charging less than a ten cent admission. On his trip through the West he states that he took particular pains to get in touch with the exhibitor who charges a minimum of five and a maximum of ten cents admission. Following are his deductions:

"The smaller house insists upon a production with a star, regardless of the age of the picture; the bigger house insists upon a worthy production and the star is of secondary importance.

"It is important to note the changing viewpoints, not alone of the exhibitor but of the public. For instance, the use of heralds is rapidly on the wane, and I would say that outside of five cities in the United States the use of twenty-four sheets will be abandoned within six months, and the use of six sheets will be lessened materially, if not altogether abandoned within the same period. And instead of making the accustomed two style one sheets, the line-up of lithographs will more likely run toward the making of four style one-sheets, four style three-sheets and two style six-sheets.

"There is lots of room for original ideas that will materially assist the exhibitor in packing his house, not necessarily ideas along the lines of circus ballyhooing, but dignified methods of advertising.

"Great White Trail" Breaks Record in Canada

J. C. Green, manager of the Temple theatre, Galt, Ontario, writes that "The Great White Trail," Wharton, Inc., production, handled through Canada by M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has broken all records at the Temple theatre. He says that it made the best record of any picture he has ever shown.

Hoffman to Distribute W. J. Flynn's Serial

Chief Flynn's Serial Revealing German Spy System and Activities of U. S. Secret Service Men Now Under Production at Wharton Studios

M. H. HOFFMAN, INC., has purchased the distributing rights to William J. Flynn's serial dealing with German intrigue in America, and revealing the activities of the United States Secret Service Department, of which Chief Flynn is head, in apprehending German spies. The serial is now under production at the Wharton Studios in Ithaca, New York. A title for the serial has not been announced.

For the first time, the untold story of what German spies have done and tried to do to us will be set forth on the screen. The public has only the faintest idea of the lengths to which Germany has gone to cripple the United States, and when all these details, in proper sequence, are shown in the William J. Flynn serial, its importance as a source of pictorial entertainment can be realized.

Mr. Hoffman said, in commenting on the work of Chief Flynn:

"It requires a method of distribution which will enable every motion picture manager in the United States to show Chief Flynn's serial.

"Freed from the necessity of having to devote attention to too numerous features, and not being tied to program procedure, the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange managers and attaches will be able to devote their energies to this serial in the measure required to put it into the thousands of motion picture theatres which will want it.

"Selecting our product with the utmost care, we are enabled to concentrate our selling efforts upon each feature without taking from it any energy or thought necessary to its most extensive booking.

"Having been chosen to distribute Chief Flynn's serial, I feel that our organization has been honored. I have gone over the episodes already in preparation, and I can state frankly that never have I seen a serial possessing such a wealth of superlative material as this one. Here, I believe, we may well use the term 'super serial' without fear of contradiction. It will be found to be 'super' in the richness of incident in each episode; it will prove to be 'super' in its quality of entertainment, and lastly, it will stir to the fullest depths within every loyal American his or her patriotism.

"As I regard Chief Flynn's serial, it excels in dramatic elements even the finest creative effort of pure fiction. Pioneers in the producing of serials, the Whartons will make Chief Flynn's serial something to remember for all time. Nothing that can contribute in the slightest degree to the perfection of the whole production will be slighted.

"Therefore, I can confidently pledge to the American exhibitors a serial which will entertain their patrons to the limit of entertainment possibility, and which will send every person away from each episode with patriotic endeavor."

Herbert Brenon is Now in Full Control

Director and Producer Enters the Distributing End of the Business—Executive Offices on Fifth Avenue Will Supervise Every Detail

HERBERT BRENON, who recently disposed of his interests in the Selznick enterprises, has incorporated under the name of the Brenon Distributing Corporation, and will actively engage in the distributing end of the motion picture business as well as continue his work in the producing field. Mr. Brenon has acquired full control of the film organization bearing his name and this week marks the beginning of his career as a distributor. Mr. Brenon has acquired, also, full title to the Brenon studios, Hudson Heights, New Jersey, at a cost, it is announced, of $250,000. He now has full and complete control of his productions. The executive offices of the Brenon Distributing Corporation are established at 509 Fifth avenue.

Mr. Brenon's studios at Hudson Heights, are complete in every detail and can accommodate the largest or the smallest set that a director may want to use. From the "shooting" of the initial scene to the developing of the finished positive print, Mr. Brenon's studio can accommodate every detailed move essential to the complete product.

The new distributing corporation will handle Brenon productions for New York State and northern New Jersey. Mr. Brenon has made arrangements with the syndicate which recently purchased the New York rights to his production of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," for $100,000, to distribute this feature through the Brenon Distributing Corporation. Sol. J. Berman will handle the production for the syndicate. Mr. Berman has been engaged by Mr. Brenon to handle the sales end of all his future productions. Mr. Brenon announces that he has the controlling interest in the new corporation.

Mr. Brenon is one of the few directors who give his personal attention to every detail in the production of a picture—from the initial "shot" to the finished print. He has acquainted himself with every phase of the business and under his new regime will supervise every move from studio to laboratory and from laboratory to exchange and from exchange to the exhibitor, thus insuring every satisfaction.

Beynon Writes Musical Score for Ivan Production

Ivan Film Company announce that George W. Beynon, has completed the musical score for "Sins of Ambition," the latest production from the Ivan studios. The "Aria" from Verdi's masterpiece, "La Traviata" is the accompanying selection for one scene of this production and Flegier's "Love Song" for another. The accompanying selection for the comedy scenes, is Godard's "Canzonetta." Throughout the score runs a musical setting from "Othello."

Four Laugh Makers by L-Ko in November

Exhibitors who take their comedies through Universal exchanges will have, according to the promise of J. G. Blystone, director general, four good subjects for laughter in L-Ko's now ready for circulation during November. The deliveries to Universal exchanges have been made, and release dates will bring two comedies by Archie Mayo; one by James Davis, in which Hughie Mack, late of Vitagraph, is introduced to the program, and a fourth comedy by Frank Clark.

"Double Dukes," directed by Mr. Mayo, will be released November 7, with Eva Novak, Eddie Barry, Chester Ryckman and Bob McKensie featured. The November 14 release will be "Hula Hula Hughie," presenting Hughie Mack as an L-Ko comedian, directed by James Davis. November 21 brings "The Joy Riders," with Lucille Hutton, Billy Bevan and Bob McKenzie featured, in a merrymaker produced by Frank Clark. The attraction Thanksgiving week will be "Cute Kids and Kidnappers," an Archie Mayo comic, featuring Gladys Varden and Eddie Barry.

Mme. Nazimova Christens New Liberty Theatre

Mme. Nazimova, who has just returned from New Orleans, where she made the exteriors for her first Metro production, "God's Message," had the honor of christening the Liberty theatre, the new house of the Boehringer Amusement Company, formerly owners of the Triangle and Columbia theatres in that city. Mme. Nazimova broke a bottle of champagne over one of the steel girders as she cried "I Christen Thee Liberty."

The Liberty will be one of the handsomest houses in the south. Mr. Boehringer has embodied some of the best ideas in theatre construction in this country and in Europe and is personally responsible for a large portion of the plans.

According to the present arrangements, "God's Message" will be the opening bill at the Liberty and this will be the first time on record in which a great star has christened a theatre in which she will play the opening picture.

France Films First Production to Be Shown at Broadway

"THE NATURAL LAW," the first production of the France Films, Inc., for the independent market, has been completed and will be shown to the trade Wednesday morning, October 31, at the Broadway theatre. Marguerite Courtot, who was a featured player with the Kalem Company, and who has appeared in the leading roles of a number of independent productions, is featured in "The Natural Law" Howard Hall has the principal male role and George Larkin, the star of the "Grant, Police Reporter," series, produced by Kalem, will be seen as the juvenile lead.

"The Natural Law" is adapted from the stage play of some years ago. It is a problem play and has for its chief character a young schoolgirl and tells of the problems that confront every girl who faces the world alone.

Exhibitors in Small Cities Take Notice

THE expenditure by Jewel Productions, Inc., of the great sum of $50,000 in sending people into your theatre to see "The Co-Respondent," has been so arranged as to work precisely the same beneficial result for you, in the small town, as for the big cities.

Read the list of giant newspapers in our circular on your desk. "The Co-Respondent's" dominating half-pages and quarter-pages will reach out hundreds of miles into the country from every newspaper center. They will cover your section exactly as the great New York dailies do in New York territory.

In Addition—

Having played to capacity at The Broadway Theatre, New York and being fully reviewed by the Dramatic Critic they depend on and advertised in the journal they trust your patrons will mark down "The Co-Respondent" as one photo-play they cannot afford to miss.

On this firm conviction we have closed arrangements to spend $50,000.

"The MYSTERY SHIP"

spent in the first episode of "THE MYSTERY SHIP" for a few feet of film. A fortune laid out for a few scenes to give the people something they have never seen in their lives in serial pictures. Nothing ever attempted in serials even compares to this daring coup, and this amount spent for the filming of these scenes in the first episode alone. Thus the exhibition of the first episode of "THE MYSTERY SHIP" guarantees capacity at the remaining 15.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

JULIAN ELTINGE has completed his engagement at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood. The final scene for his third Paramount release, "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," has been filmed this week by William C. DeMille, director, and Mr. Eltinge is leaving in a few days for New York, where he expects to complete negotiations for either a permanent engagement in films or for release of subjects in which he is starred. In any event Mr. Eltinge will make Los Angeles his future home and whatever subjects are made will be filmed here. He recently purchased a three-acre residence site in Silver Lake Hill and a residence there is now nearing completion.

It is understood Mr. Eltinge has a very good offer from Pathe and that other organizations have flirted with him for a series of pictures. It is very probable, however, that he will follow the example of Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart and, shortly, there will be a Julian Eltinge Film Company. Mr. Eltinge, it became known this week, has been looking for a studio site and it is very probable options have been taken.

Lasky Company Goes Lumbering

The Lasky Company, which has George Beban as star and Donald Crisp as director, has gone to Hoquiam, Wash., to spend two weeks filming exteriors for "Jules of the Strongheart," which has a North woods atmosphere. Properties taken by the players required two baggage cars, and included in this is a lighting outfit which may be used for night effects when scenes are made in the big woods. There were about fifty people in the party, with a complete staff of carpenters, electricians and property men. Telegrams from Mr. Beban state weather conditions in that section of the country are very unfavorable because of rain and fogs, and it is probable a longer period will be necessary for the taking of scenes.

The filming of "Nan of Music Mountain," adapted from the Frank H. Spearman novel, will be completed this week. Ann Little appears in the main role of this subject and Wallace Reid is playing a featured role. The direction is under George H. Melford, and he has the co-operation of the author, Mr. Spearman, who resides in Hollywood.

Herbert Standing has been engaged to play in the next Mary Pickford Artcraft, which was put in production this week. Marshall Neilan, who has been excused from army service, is to continue as Miss Pickford's director. Conway Tearle will be the leading man in this subject.

The eleventh episode of "The Lost Express" is receiving the attention of the Signal Mutual Company, and Director J. E. McGowan is staging a number of mob scenes showing a battle in which more than three hundred men take part for the possession of the Mountain King Mine. This episode will show a series of scenes made near the entrance to Yosemite Valley at the Mountain King Mine.

Privilege to use the ore carriers, which go down a 36 per cent grade for 8,000 feet, was secured on condition the mine company be absolved from any damages in case of injury to any of the players.

Dalton-Ince Company Goes North

The Dorothy Dalton-Thomas H. Ince Company, directed by R. William Neill, left this week for Russian River district in Northern California, where exteriors for a story of the West will be taken. Thurston Hall and William Conklin will have the leading parts in support of Miss Dalton. The company going to the North included about fifty people, and the baggage contained a movable lighting equipment. Prior to the company's departure the last scenes for the second Dorothy Dalton release on Paramount, "The Edge of Sin," was filmed. Two-thirds of this photoplay is said to have been made at the Ince Studios after the regular working hours, this being done to secure special effects.

Jack Gilbert, of Triangle-Ince Kay Bee, Is Causing Comment by His Good Work.

Another Ince company is working at the Edendale Studio filming "The Hired Man," which will offer Charles Ray, supported by Dorris Lee, Charles K. French, Carl Ullman and others.

J. G. Hawks, who did his first scenario writing for Thomas H. Ince almost three years ago, and since has been identified with the New York Motion Picture Corporation and its successor, the Triangle, has completed his contract with the latter company and has been engaged by Mr. Ince as a member of the scenario staff. Hawks began work at his new position this week.

William S. Hart and company have completed the second Artcraft release, "The Silent Man," and the star is now working in the preparation of his next story from a scenario by Dennison Clist, a recent addition to the Thomas H. Ince scenario staff. In the new photoplay Mr. Hart will be seen as a railroad man of the early western days, an entirely new characterization for the western player. In "The Silent Man" Mr. Hart rode a new bay horse standing sixteen hands high, which was purchased following the retirement of "Fritz," who has been pensioned for life. "The Silent Man" gives William S. Hart a number of love scenes, which in former productions have been foreign to the nature of his characters. Those who have been fortunate enough to see the scenes projected claim that Hart is a real for sure lover, and the publicity department admits it by calling attention to Mr. Hart's several years as leading man with Julia Arthur in the presentation of "Romeo and Juliet."

Fox Companies Complete Stories

The Fox Studio is rather a quiet place this week, because most of the companies have just completed stories and it will be a few days until new ones are started. The only organizations working at this time are those under the direction of the Franklin Brothers, in which the Fox children appear in "The Mikado" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." The latter has a decided Persian atmosphere, with all specially constructed sets.

The last scenes for "Responsibility" are being made by Director Richard Stanton and company, which includes Enid Markey as star, and Director Bertram Bracken has completed "The Awakening," with Gladys Brockwell, Lewis J. Cody, Colin Chase and Vivian Rich.

General Western Representative A. Carlos arrived home this week after spending a short time at the offices of the William Fox Company, at New York. He was accompanied by Frank Lloyd, a director, who has been in charge of the making of William Farnum subjects at the Eastern studio. Farnum is having his annual vacation and will not come to the Coast for several weeks. In the meantime Lloyd will film one photoplay, which will offer Jewel Carmen as star. Billy Foster, a cameraman for Lloyd, is now on his way to Los Angeles from the East and is accompanied by other members of the Lloyd producing staff.

It is expected there will be considerable activities at the studio of the Sunshine Comedy Company, which occupies a portion of the William Fox plant. Henry Lehrman is completing a hospital comedy, in which wild animals and automobile chases predominate. Within the next few days additional companies will start working here, now that the comedies are being released by the Fox organization. Billie Ritchie, Lehrman and Winifred Westover will be the principals of one company; Lloyd Hamilton, Charles Conklin and James Adamas of the other.

The new stage at the Fox Studio, to be used exclusively for the children, is to be directed by the Franklin Brothers and is now in use.

Weber Company Strikes Storm

The Lois Weber Productions Company encountered the most severe sandstorm of the season Thursday of last week when they were working on exterior locations at Chattsworth, a small town thirty miles north of Los Angeles, in the mountains. At this place the principal street of the town, which has a decided frontier appearance, was the scene of action. The producing company and about one hundred extra people were working there when the storm hit the section. It rained for several hours and a number of the players were injured by falling limbs from trees and portions blown from buildings.

The subject in production has been titled "The Man Who Dared God." It is being made from an original story and scenario by Miss Weber herself. William Stowell, who was borrowed from the Universal Company, is appearing in the main role, and the principal members of the supporting cast are Mildred Harris and Clara Whipple.

Universal Experiences Lull

This has been a quiet week at Universal City. Two new productions were begun. One is being directed by Ida May Park and will offer Dorothy May Phillips as star in "Broadway Love." William Stowell, Lon Chaney and William Burress are principals.

Director E. J. Le Saint has gone to Bear Lake Valley with a company to get exterior scenes for the "Wolves of the North." Louise Lovely is to be the featured player of this and Hart Hoxey will play opposite her. Betty Shade and Alfred Allen have important parts in this story of the Northwest Mounted Police.

Universal City was invaded by a great number of boys from the Strickland Home for Boys. They were entertained by Production Manager Henry Ray and M. Systrom, special representative of President Laemmle. F. B. Silverwood, vice-president of the Home, was in charge of the party.

Metro Makes Foreign Feature

The schedule at the Metro Studio provides that the first western-made subject, "The Legend of Death," in which B. A. Rolfe will present Edith Storey, is to be finished by November 3. The company has worked at the studio a portion of the time this week, where scenes showing the boudoir of the Czarina were filmed. Furnishings for this were borrowed by Property Man Danny Hogan of the Italian Ambassador to the United States, who has his winter home at Pasadena. The exteriors were made at Monrovia, Cal., where a church, said to be more than one hundred years old, was the centre of action. Both the interior and exterior of this was used. Todd Browning is in charge of the direction, and the principals supporting this story are Philo McCullough, Charles Gerard and Pomeroy Cannon.

John Collins, who was detained in New York in the finishing of a subject because of an accident which befell Bruce Edwards, his leading man, is scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles the middle of the coming week. Mr. Collins will direct Viola Dana, and the first subject to be made will be "The Winding Trail," which is from a scenario by June Mathis.

Western Representative B. A. Rolfe is "cashing" in on the circus experience that he had in his younger days and has planned a canvas-enclosed studio that may be used during rainy weather, with artificial lighting, and transformed into an open stage about as quick as a "big top" can be taken down. A great quantity of lighting equipment and a giant generator have been purchased and are now being installed at the Metro Studios.

Three American Companies Busy

All three companies of the American Studio at Santa Barbara are at work. A new photoplay was put in production by the William Russell company, which is the fifth of the present series of six. This deals with an Aztec treasure hunt in South America and gives "Big Bill" an entirely new role. As with former Russell productions, Edward Sloman will be in charge of the production.

Russell is said to add considerable to his reputation as a screen fighter in the film just finished, "His Arabian Night," which is being edited by Director Sloman.

"A Daughter of Joan," the first of the Marguerita Fischer series being made by Director Lloyd Ingraham, is nearing completion, and the scenario department already has prepared the second subject, which has been titled "Molly, Go Get 'Em." The story is by Beatrice Van, who, with William Parker, is author of the film now being made. The new story is a comedy drama.

Final scenes for "The Mate of the Sally Ann," which features Mary Miles Minter, are to be made this week by Director Henry King. Miss Minter in this story appears in many scenes in the attire of a ragged sailor boy. In other scenes she wears some decidedly fashionable gowns. Alan Forrest is the leading man. George Periolat takes the role of a slightly demented sea pilot.

The American Film Company is having prepared a million postcards showing views of the studios at Santa Barbara, with inserts of the heads of the five stars working at this plant. These will be distributed throughout the country.

Triangle Ranks Making a Change

Members of the Triangle producing plant at Culver City are preparing for an invasion. The coming week will be moving day for the Triangle-Keystone aggregation, which has been working at a Hollywood studio. Numerous suggestions have been made as to the recepton that should be accorded the six comedy companies. George du Bois Proctor has suggested a plan which may be followed. In the absence of General Manager H. O. Davis, who is in the East, Mr. E. G. Patterson, studio manager, will be master of ceremonies. The new stage will be christened in an appropriate manner, and the Keystoners have been assured they will be treated as royal guests—on the first day, at least.

Nine of the twelve Triangle directors are at work this week, three companies waiting for stories. Three new subjects have been put in production in the past few days.

A photoplay depicting life in the Latin Quarter of Paris and sunny Italy before the world war began, is now being filmed by Director Walter Edwards, who has Alma Ruebens in the featured role of "The Passion Flower." The supporting players include W. L. Lawrence, Francis McDonald, Joe Gregory and others.

Another new photoplay, which now has a working title of "Without Honor," is being made by Director E. Mason Hopper. It features Margery Wilson, supported by

Walt Whitman, Darrell Foss, Laura Sears and Diana Carrillo.

Life in the Northwest is to be shown in "Until They Get Me," a photoplay now being made with Frank Borzage. It will show man-hunting by the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Pauline Stark, Jack Sertis, Joe King, "Curly" Baldwin and Anna Dodge take part in this picture.

Jack Conway is directing the filming of "Because of the Woman," which is to have Belle Bennett in the featured role, supported by Jack Livingston, George Chesebro, George Pearce and Lillian Langdon.

A mammoth shark captured by fishermen of a Japanese village on the beach near Santa Monica was used in a number of scenes for the Triangle photoplay, "The Ship of Doom," which is being made by Director Windham Gittins. Monte Blue, Claire McDowell and Frank Brownlee are principals in the subject.

G. P. Hamilton, directing the making of "The Maternal Spark," has during the past few days worked his company both night and day in order that all scenes in which Rowland Lee appears might be taken before it was necessary for him to depart to an Eastern officers' training camp. Irene Hunt, Joey Jacobs, Edward Jobson and F. A. Newberg appear in this picture.

Exterior scenes are being made at Hartville this week by the Roy Stewart Company, directed by Cliff Smith, which has in the making "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Fritzi Ridgeway is leading woman, taking the part of a schoolmarm, and other roles are taken by Edward J. Brady and Walter Perry.

Subjects reported completed this week at the Triangle Studio are: "Fanatics," directed by Raymond Wells; "The Sudden Gentleman," directed by T. N. Heffron, and "The Ship of Doom," by Windham Gittins. Others ready for shipment now are: "Regenerates," featuring Alma Ruebens and Walt Whitman; "Indiscreet Corinne," with Olive Thomas; "The Fuel of Life," with Belle Bennett, and "Easy Money," which will introduce Charles Gunn as the featured player.

Joe King has been engaged by the Triangle as leading man, and will play opposite Pauline Start in "Until They Get Me," being directed by Frank Borzage.

Keystone Prepares a Burlesque

An early release from the Triangle-Keystone Studio will be a burlesque on the popular Western drama. Exteriors for this were made last week by Reggie Morris, who has Ray Griffith burlesqueing the gunman character. The supporting cast includes Rose Carter and Franklin Bond.

Harry Williams has completed the direction of his third comedy and is now starting a new Keystone subject with a cast that includes Mal St. Clair, Eddie Gribbon, Max Asher, Alatia Marton, Dora Rogers, William Irving, Marianna de la Torre and Alice Davenport.

H. Raymaker has a Keystone Komedy in the making with Dale Fuller, Maud Wayne, Lloyd Bacon, Milton Sims and Dorothy Hagar taking part. In a comedy just completed by Raymaker a ton of coal and several barrels of flour were consumed regardless of the high cost of living.

Record for speed was made at the Keystone plant this week by Triangle-Komedy Director Charles Avery, who, with a company including Harry Depp, Fritz Schade, Myrtle Lind, Jack Henderson, Ruth Langston and Lee Forbes, completed a one-reel comedy in two days and two hours.

SERVICE BUREAU IS FOR YOU, OF YOU AND BY YOU

If you have passed it by in the past, turn now to the EXHIBITORS SERVICE BUREAU in this issue.

It is a department for you, of you and by you.

The fact that it is not even more BY you, is your own fault.

It is not a department of press agent boosts, manufacturers' recommendations, exchange solicitations. It is a department that reflects the best thought of the industry with the exhibitor's interests in view.

You have here a place to bring your suggestions and your criticisms, a place to get help of any sort, for there are no limits on the real SERVICE that this bureau furnishes.

It is a place where you should give other exhibitors the benefit of your good ideas, accounts of your successes.

Either you are doing something well or you are doing it badly. There's no middle ground.

Let us hear about it. Write the EXHIBITORS SERVICE BUREAU TODAY.

Mitchell Engaged by Balboa

Howard M. Mitchell has been engaged by the Balboa Company to make the new subjects of the Horkheimer Mutual series starring Anita King and is now at work on the second of the releases. Miss King will be supported in this by Henry Gray, Bruce Smith, Ruth Lackaye and Charles Dudley. The scenario is by L. V. Jefferson.

Roscoe Arbuckle and company have begun work on the first subject for Paramount to be made in the West, and he and his staff are busily engaged at the Balboa Studio at Long Beach. Arbuckle was accompanied West by Lewis Anger, business manager, and his entire staff. Since arriving at Long Beach Arbuckle has subscribed for $40,000 worth of the second issue of Liberty Bonds.

Gifts for Film Men-Soldiers

Former members of the Los Angeles film colony, who are now soldiers at the several training army and navy camps on the West Coast, will shortly receive sporting goods costing forty-five hundred dollars. Funds for the purchase of this was raised at the Douglas Fairbanks-Billy Sunday baseball game recently staged in Los Angeles. The merchandise includes boxing gloves, punching bags, football, basket ball and baseball outfits complete, together with dumbbells and other athletic paraphernalia that may be used at the army camps. Each camp will receive two outfits, and former film colony boys will be the custodians. There are six camps on the west coast located at Linda Vista, American Lake, Fort Rosecrans, Camp Arcadia, the Naval Reserve and Fort McArthur.

Directors Prepare for Ball

Motion Picture Directors' Association has already made plans for its annual ball, which will be held on Thanksgiving Night, November 29, at the Rose Rooms of Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles. At a recent meeting the committee on arrangements was named, and includes Joseph deGrasse, chairman; Frank Beal, Allen Curtis, William Russell, T. N. Heffron, Phillips Smalley and Bob Daily. Plans already made provide for a number of features for this annual event, which is expected to be far more elaborate than in former years. Each member will have five guests and the price will be ten dollars each.

Chairman deGrasse and committee have received a number of suggestions, and one that will in all probability be carried out provides for a number of prizes to be given some of the most successful players of the screen for aiding with the program. These prizes, it is understood, will personify releases of the stars.

Arbuckle to Work Again

Work of producing the first Roscoe Arbuckle Western made comedy has been started at the Balboa studio, where Arbuckle has leased space and producing privileges.

"Just Twins" is the title of the picture selected as the first starring vehicle for Kathleen Clifford, which will be made for Paramount program and serve as one of the six releases of this star.

All members of the Mena Film Company are at the Hollywood studio attending a directors' meeting, at which arrangements will be completed for the erection of a permanent studio in Los Angeles, and the organization of a releasing system for the company's multiple reel subjects. The officers and directors are C. G. Kuehn, president, of Toledo; John Kuehn, vice-president, of New York; R. R. Hollister, foreign representative, of Dayton, Ohio; Dr. L. W. Jones, secretary and treasurer, of Chicago, and C. C. Driscoll, general manager. All members of the company are successful business men, having been identified with other lines, and are now devoting their attention entirely to the film business.

The scenario for the second production of the Mena company is now in preparation and the work of filming it will be commenced as soon as their first feature, "By Super Strategy," is completed.

Authors' Film a New One

The Authors' Film Company, organized by Sam H. London, who was a former Government investigator of white slave traffic, is a new organization for Los Angeles. Space has been rented at the Bernstein studio, where a seven or eight reel production is being made under the direction of Frank Beal, with James Crosby as cameraman. The cast includes Ana Luther and Billy Garwood as principals, with Ann Schafer, Alida Jones and Tom Walsh taking important parts.

California Cinema Company is a new producing company that will make comedies for the General Film Company. The studio on Ninth street, in Glendale, has been leased.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

ARTHUR RYAN, erstwhile assistant cameraman for Robert G. Vignola, at the Famous Players studio, was presented with a kiss by Pauline Frederick, Paramount star, on the eve of his departure for Yaphank as a member of the National Army. A purse of goodly proportions, made up by the studio folk, accompanied the donation, but it is said Ryan values the farewell remembrance from Miss Frederick more than the coin.

VACATION time is "when you can get it" in the studios, and several Paramount stars are taking advantage of temporary lulls to hie themselves to the hills or elsewhere between productions. Marguerite Clark, having finished the third "Bab" picture, is taking a week's rest at her home near Rye, N. Y. J. Searle Dawley, her director, is also improving each shining hour before time to grasp the megaphone again. Elliott Dexter, having completed work in Lina Cavalieri's first Paramount production, has been hovering in the neighborhood of Excelsior Springs. Mo. Pauline Frederick has returned from a trip, and is at work on a new production.

THE studio folk of the Empire All-Star Corporation have been congratulating themselves upon the acquisition of R. H. Kelly as their new manager. He was recently with Selznick, assisting in the direction of Eva Tanguay's feature, "The Wild Girl," but has spent most of his time in the Western studios. Kelly was two years with Thos. Ince and three years with Selig, and is now putting the experience of those years to use in the Egyptian sets that are being made for "Her Sister," the Clyde Fitch play that is serving Olive Tell as a starring vehicle. The sets in this feature were designed and executed under Kelly's supervision.

WHEN scenes were being "shot" for "The Hidden Hand," the Pathe serial, a few Sundays ago, Wall Street was called into play as a location, and as a result the widely heralded banking and financial thoroughfare was the gathering spot of more people than has been the case on the Sabbath in these many years.

In addition to taking the scenes on Wall street, itself, one of the stunts in the episode, called for Doris Kenyon, star of the serial, to jump into a water tank. The crowds that gathered to see the scenes taken were said to be so large that the police reserves were called out to handle them.

ARTHUR ALBERTSON, of the Kalem Company, who was one of the first to enlist in the service of his country, is now a seaman with a "mosquito fleet" in a Southern Atlantic port. He has written a friend in New York that he hopes soon to be in European waters.

EDWARD EARLE, who is fast earning the reputation of being the most persistent patriot in the Vitagraph ranks, has again failed in his attempts to persuade Uncle Sam to let him enter military service. This makes the third time he has tried—and the third time he has failed. So, in order to satisfy his patriotic spirit in so far as was possible, Earle visited four places in New York where Liberty Bonds were being sold and proposed to the salesman that for a period of thirty minutes he would purchase every fifth bond disposed of. When he departed he had turned over to the Government $2,000 of his cash, which, he considered, was the next best thing to enlisting.

Leah Baird

THE Brenon Studio on Hudson Heights has taken on an entirely different aspect within the past few days, as, with the passing of the Russian sets used in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," the tenements of the East Side have risen in their place. The change is for the new Herbert Brenon production, "Empty Pockets," which is very likely to call forth all Mr. Brenon's skill as a master of detail. One of the unique features in the picture is a reproduction of a scene in the New York hospital.

CHARLES SUTTON, who has the role of a minister in the forthcoming Metro production, "The Eternal Mother," starring Ethel Barrymore, is said to hold a record for extensive traveling for the staging of pictures. Sutton has been on the stage all his life, and has been in motion pictures since their birth. Besides his Edison appearances, which included "Napoleon," he has played the circus owner in "The Rainbow Princess," the minister in "The Valentine Girl," an old sailor in "Peg o' the Sea" and the minister in "Blue Jeans."

WESLEY RUGGLES, who produced "For France," the Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, as well as the first four Bobby Connelly pictures, has been notified by the Government that his draft number indicates early training for Ruggles, and he is holding himself in readiness to start at a moment's notice. He was called once before, but was in the midst of a feature and was fortunate enough to secure an extension of time in order to finish it. He is now settling his affairs prepratory to donning the khaki.

MAE MARSH, star of the new Goldwyn photoplay, "Sunshine Alley," has added her name to the list of benefactors of animals, which already includes the names of Mrs. Fiske, DeWolf Hopper and Bessie Love. Miss Marsh qualified for the honor roll by the cocoanut grove she provided for a monkey that used to dance to the music of a one-legged hurdy-gurdy and doff his fez for pennies. It happened at the time they were collecting the various animals to be used in "Sunshine Alley," and the monkey worked splendidly into the cast. The scene in which the animals are used is supposed to be a bird and animal store kept by an old man and his granddaughter in a poor quarter of a great city.

VIRGINIA PEARSON, in measuring her feature productions by the mile, estimates that she has completed her thirteenth mile of film for William Fox. She has finshed eleven pictures and is now busy on her twelfth, "All for a Husband," which Fox expects to release as a Special Feature on November 18. It is explained, however, that the thirteen miles are not the total length of the film in the production in which Miss Pearson has appeared, but length of frames in which she figures personally. Figuring on this basis it is computed that Miss Pearson has been photographed well over a million times during the eighteen months she has been in the employ of the Fox Film Corporation.

TWENTY-SEVEN years on the stage and screen is the record of Mrs. Lillian Paige, who has a role in the forthcoming Metro screen version of Blair Hall's story, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," starring Emily Stevens. Most of these years have been spent in the support of prominent stars, though Mrs. Paige admits that she has had her share of "one-night-stands," and of the usual ups and downs of the theatrical profession. Formerly Lillian Paige played leading parts and ingenues. Now she is playing grande dames and "sweet mothers." "That is the penalty I have to pay for having a lot of gleaming white hair," said the acress smiling. "As soon as they see that they cast me at once for a mother part. Well, I'm glad enough to play them."

PRODUCERS

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

DECORATING the center of this page is Paul Dowling, familiarly known as Pat. Mr. Dowling has been identified with the business just about one year too long, this being the length of time he has pulverized the English language in a vain attempt to write pieces for the papers. Previous to his advent into the picture industry he had a striking career as stevedore, street cleaner and jail bird. He is now a refugee in the Lasky Studio on the west coast where he continues, under the direction of Ken McGaeffy to horribly mutilate the dictionary in order to publicize the stars of that company. Our photograph shows Mr. Dowling in one of his idle moments.

HOW VERY CLEVER!!

"When Louise Huff was at boarding school she and the other girls used to amuse themselves sometimes by playing a trick on the newsboys and bootblacks that hung around the campus. Calling a number of these youths under the windows of the dormitory, Louise and the rest would heat pennies over a gas jet, holding them with a curling iron and then throw them to the boys, taking great delight in watching the kids try to pick them up."

"THE first Thomas H. Ince Artcraft production, 'The Narrow Trail,'" says the 'steemed Evening Mail, "will star Sylvia Bremer, an Australian beauty." And all the time we were abiding by Bill Hart's assertion that Fritz, the celebrated pinto pony, was the star.

WELL, the 'steemed News isn't much better. On page 3107 of last week's issue a picture of Wilfred Lucas was pointed out as Thomas Meighan. Not that we care at all, but both Wilfred and Thomas might have some objections.

THE second Liberty Loan is all subscribed for by this time, but anyway you might like to know that:

Tom North of Pathe gave the fifteen hundred dollars he won on the White Sox to Mrs. North, with permission to buy an automobile, but instead she invested it in Liberty Bonds.

Marguerite Clark of Paramount disposed of a million dollars' worth of bonds working in the theatres of Cincinnati in conjunction with the Chamber of Commerce.

THEDA BARA BEWARE

FLORENCE REED changes her costume no less than fifty-seven* times for "The Struggle Everlasting," now in course of production by Harry Rapf.

PETE SCHMID fled from New York a week ago Saturday to handle the publicity on Douglas Fairbanks' Liberty Loan campaign.

* Figures certified by Arthur MacHugh.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT, long publicity manager for Selig, has been engaged by Pathe for important work in the title and film editorial department. He will be associated with H. C. Hoagland, who recently forsook the general managership of Selig to take charge of this department at Pathe.

GEORGE BERTHOLON, the Goldwyn assistant director, was in St. Augustine, Fla., with the Mary Garden troupe filming scenes for "Thais." He returned to the hotel after a brief shopping tour with annoyance in his voice and on his countenance.

"The old slave market is a bunk," he announced in a tone that left no room for doubt. "It's a bunk. They haven't got a slave in stock."

THERE are a lot of people from this neck of the woods who are terribly disturbed over the report that C. N. Reinhardt of Broadway Brevities has been drafted.

EDITORIAL

As old as the eons is the controversy as to what constitutes Art. Some of the masters have proven conclusively to their own entire satisfaction, that to be art, a thing must possess realism. On the other hand, other equally brainy masters have asserted, also with proof, that art, to be Art, with a capital "A" must never duplicate life as it really exists.

If you were to ask Melton Phelos, of Elyria, O., and manager of Elyria's biggest motion picture emporium, what he thinks constitutes Art, he is apt to agree with the fellows who advocate realism. And there's a reason. As an advertising medium in connection with "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Manager Phelos decorated his lobby with farm products, among which were two hens. These hens must have felt a deep responsibility toward Phelos, because they have donated two fresh eggs for his breakfast ever since they entered upon their artistic career.

NEWSY REPORTS FROM ALL SECTIONS

Indianapolis Welcomes Several Stars of Screen

Indianapolis extended a good old Hoosier welcome to a galaxy of filmdom's stars on October 20, when the players were escorted to the Indiana metropolis by the American Exhibitors' Association of Indiana. Included in the party were Lillian Walker, Naomi Childers, Rose Tapley, little Madge Evans, Mary McAlister, Anne Stewart, June Elvidge, Belle Bruce, Marguerite Snow, Jimmie Morrison, Lester Parks and Taylor Holmes.

"Indianapolis can thank Charles C. Pettijohn for our being here," said Rose Tapley, "for it was only through his influence that our companies were prevailed upon to release us for the time."

Most of the money taken in through the visit of the stars went to the Movie War Fund.

Censorship May Be Thrust Upon Gary, Indiana

According to information received last week from Gary, Ind., a secret committee said to be composed of fifteen persons is attempting to impose censorship on the motion picture theatres of the city. Some of the newspapers of the town have taken the matter up, commenting upon it in the news and editorial columns from time to time.

The Lake County Times, at Hammond, Ind., denounces the alleged attempt at censorship with the following: "This committee, whose executive committee for the heavy work is not revealed, was organized by the politicians and anti-labor union officials of the steel chiefs of Gary, ostensibly for reform purposes but really for the city campaign."

Vitagraph Sends Cowboy to Herald New Serial

Vitagraph has sent one of its dyed-in-the-wool Western cowboys out on the road to tell the public a lot of intimate things about its new serial, "The Fighting Trail." Denver Dixon, the missionary, went into Cleveland last week, and will remain there until next week, during which time it is expected he will wear off some of the newness of his first visit across the Arizona border. He is appearing in person in the theatres showing "The Fighting Trail," and is telling the audiences how the feature was made and other points of interest.

Miss Elinore Duffy, a society and club editress on a daily paper in Omaha, Neb., has been engaged as motion picture editor of the Daily News in Omaha. She is the first woman motion picture editor in that city.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

ARIZONA.—J. E. Foley is putting his Gem theatre, at Chloride, in shape for solid comfort during the coming Winter. He is having the inside lined with plaster-board, the ceiling lined with suitable material and the entire inside of the building painted and overhauled. A new screen has been installed and very soon the patrons of this popular playhouse will enjoy a continuous performance, made possible by the addition of another projecting machine.

CALIFORNIA.—J. A. Quinn, an exhibitor of Los Angeles, has decided to establish a chain of Quinn's theatres throughout the West, believing that by so doing he will be able to eliminate a great deal of overhead expense, and avoid much of the waste exhibitors now suffer, for the same publicity campaigns and posters will accompany each film that goes over the Quinn circuit.

ILLINOIS.—G. W. Tenfel and Ray Pfetcher have bought the Isis theatre at Roseville, and will conduct same in conjunction with their Astoria house.

John J. O'Herren has assumed the management of the Grand theatre, Knoxville, and will run a combination program of vaudeville and motion picture.

Miss Grace Whaling has undertaken the musical end of the new theatre at Kewanee.

Ascher Brothers, theatre operators, have added another large theatre to their chain, having leased from Thomas A. Collins the Grand-Oak theatre building on the Grand boulevard, near Oakwood boulevard, for a term of ten years at a reported rental of $7,500 per annum. With this theatre the lessees will have twelve motion picture theatres in various parts of the city. The lease was negotiated by B. W. Eisendrath and David S. Simon, the legal details being handled by N. R. Jones and L. F. Jacobson.

INDIANA.—L. E. Wheeler has leased the Princess theatre at Vincennes.

A. L. La Fountain is enlarging his theatre, The Fowler, at Fowler, and putting in a new balcony to seat about 40 extra people.

Allardt Brothers of Chicago, owners of the Orpheum theatre, Elkhart, have leased the thetre to Julius Lamm and S. Abrahames, of Chicago, for five years. Two new motion picture machines, costing $1,400, have been installed by the lessees.

Charles Gray, formerly owner of the Star theatre, Bluffton, has sold his moving picture show at Montpelier to George Bretzinger of that city.

G. E. Price of Parker, Ind., has bought the Pastime theatre, at Hartford, and will move to this city.

The Lenwood Amusement Company, now conducting the Rialto and Lenwood theatres, Indianapolis, has taken over the Gayety theatre in East Washington street and will present photoplays and vaudeville. The Gayety has undergone extensive improvement.

James Bouras of Chicago, has bought the Royal Grand theatre, Warsaw, off W. R. Deaton.

IOWA.—Lawrence Kiernan of Ida Grove has purchased the Princess theatre from W. D. Pringle of Des Moines and expects to open the beautiful playhouse in a short time under new management, which will be announced later.

J. C. Duncan has bought the Plaza theatre, 112 Pierce street, Sioux City, and contemplates making many improvements. The new owner was for many years manager of the local branch of the National Biscuit Company, and has been connected with the Globe Film Company for the last two years. J. E. Bryant, of Waterloo, Ia., was formerly in charge of the theatre, being president of the Plaza Theatre Company, former lessee of the popular Sioux City picture house.

R. S. Benjamin has taken over the management of the Peoples theatre at Redfield.

MARYLAND.—Joseph Brodie, proprietor of the Brodie theatre, Baltimore, gave a sacred concert on Sunday a week ago to provide comforts for the drafted men of his section. The arrangements were in charge of a committee headed by Frederick Obrecht and a goodly sum was raised.

James J. Hartlove, proprietor of the Crescent theatre, South Charles street, Baltimore, gave a special picture show on Sunday, October 14, to raise funds for a football outfit for the soldiers at Fort Howard, and great success attended his efforts.

South Dakota Business Picking Up

According to reports in Omaha, Neb., the exchange centre for adjacent territory, South Dakota is experiencing better business than was expected this fall. A large number of houses in the smaller towns are increasing their number of shows and show days and new theatres are expected to open about November 1.

While the increase in admission prices has not been marked, it has been general over the State, until no five-cent houses and an ever diminishing number of ten-cent houses remain. Here and there over the State, although not as thickly as in Iowa and Nebraska, are fifteen, twenty and twenty-five cent houses. An increasing number of houses are charging higher admission prices when showing big features.

Express Deliveries Discussed in Cleveland

Representatives of the motion picture industry and of the various express companies in Cleveland met last week in the Chamber of Commerce to talk over the difficulties motion picture men are having in regard to express deliveries. The delays are not only annoying, but are a source of financial loss in many cases where films are said to be delivered too late for a show. The express companies claim this is due to congestion all along the lines, and declare that nothing can be done at this time to alleviate the difficulty.

Northwest Exhibitors Let Soldiers in Free

Free admission for soldiers is getting to be the rule in the smaller towns of the Northwest and exhibitors are finding that it pays, when too many troops are not quartered in a place. Theatres in St. Cloud, Fairmont and Albert Lea took the lead and others fell into line. It has proved a good plan. Soldiers don't like to go to theatres alone but they go and take the family or other guests with them.

Lillian Walker Helps Red Cross in Indianapolis

Lillian Walker, star of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, left on Friday night of last week for Indianapolis, where she was expected to appear at a benefit to be given by the Indiana branch of the American Exhibitors' Association for the benefit of the Tobacco and Red Cross Fund for American soldiers. She was accompanied by Lester Park, general manager of Ogden Pictures Corporation; Belle Bruce and Rose Tapley.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Chicago Theatre Passes

The old American Music Hall, now known as the Chicago Theatre at Wabash avenue and Eighth street, the scene of many bracing musical comedies and minstrel shows in the old days and of late the home of moving pictures, is to be turned into a public hall and "emergency" place of assembly.

Sunday School Man Holds Up for Pictures

C. O. Frisbie, newly elected Sunday school superintendent of the La Salle Avenue Baptist church, Chicago, sent in his resignation last week when the board of deacons forbade his using pictures in the church on Sunday.

"If the men of the La Salle Avenue Baptist church," declared Mr. Frisbie, "had a little more red blood in them there would be no trouble. I put more than $100 of my own money into these pictures. I simply wanted to use them as a means of attracting the boys. I have been a Sunday school superintendent for fifteen years and think I know something about what children like. And I also know what's good for them."

Cuneo Turns Speaker to Aid Recruiting

Lester Cuneo, the man who has played the "heavy" for Harold Lockwood for the last two years or more, is in Chicago, making speeches in theatres to stimulate recruiting. Cuneo enlisted in the infantry a a few weeks ago and during the interim until he is called for active service is spending his time speaking in theatres.

"Lockwood and I drew straws," said Mr. Cuneo, "to see which one of us would represent the Yorke Film Corporation in the United States Army. And I won and am glad of it. I don't know when I will have to report, but until I am called I shall continue my speech-making campaign among the playhouses."

Wholesome Not Working at the Rothacker Studios

A mistake was made in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of October 20, when it was stated that the Wholesome Film Company was at work at the Rothacker Studios, making a picture featuring Charlotte, the skater. The concern making the film is the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, and not the Wholesome Film Company.

Albright in Chicago for Motion Picture News

Lisle M. Albright, formerly connected with Motography in the Chicago Daily Herald, has joined the staff of the Chicago office of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Albright will have general charge of the editorial work there, and will also aid in the advertising campaigns, under the direction of Wm. J. McGrath, western manager.

Leaks in the Loop

Edward W. Johnson is a new Pathe salesman, taking the place of Bert Graham, who has been transferred.

The owner of the Republic theatre on Lincoln avenue had a taste of the horrors of war recently when three men enlisted and two were drafted on the same day. His manager, operator, piano player, stage manager and drummer left him within twenty-four hours and for a time he thought he would have to close up shop.

Billie West was in Chicago last week visiting his family. The Standard Film Company is releasing the Billy West comedies in this section of the country.

Marguerite Snow was the guest of honor at the Hamilton Club at a luncheon Oct. 22.

Ricord Gradwell, general manager of the World Film Company, was a visitor at the local office Oct. 19. He is on his way to the Pacific Coast, making a tour of the Western branches, and incidentally hopes to see about a new home he is building in Los Angeles.

The new Hoffman Foursquare Exchange in the College Building is more like a broker's office than an ordinary film exchange. Rich green carpet, mahogany desks and furniture and plenty of plate glass make the exhibitor feel that he is on La Salle street buying bonds instead of on Wabash negotiating a film transaction.

L. A. Rozelle, manager of the World exchange, has a new man whom he is grooming for an executive position. C. A. Thompson, who is the recipient of this special training, has only been there about three weeks.

N. S. Kaplan, promoter of Russian Art Films in this country, stopped off at the local Pathe exchange last week on his way back to Russia.

Martin Sachs, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, who was seriously hurt in a recent auto accident, is still in the hospital, but is doing very well. The two companions with him at the time of the accident, however, are not expected to live.

Simeon Greiver, of Greiver and Herz, attended the Indianapolis convention of the American Exhibitors' Association, October 20, and seemed very much pleased at the ovation given Lillian Walker when she put in her appearance at the meeting. "Lust of the Ages," her first picture, made by Ogden Pictures Corporation, is soon to be released by Greiver and Herz.

A. G. Stanton and George E. Pfisterer, speakers for the Liberty Bond Committee, addressed employes of the American Film Company at a noon meeting one day last week and found it a hot-bed of patriotism. Every employe of office and factory signed up, and the company has arranged to aid its employes in making monthly payments through the office.

George H. Gibson, one of the factory representatives of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, is now in the United States army "somewhere in the East." Fred Nieman of the factory organization of the Rothacker studios is also doing his bit for Uncle Sam at Rockford, Ill.

Charlie Chaplin in his latest and last Mutual picture, "The Adventurer," occupied the screens of Chicago theatres last week, North, East, South and West. Douglas Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post" and Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Diary" were the other headliners in the loop and throughout the city generally.

The Playhouse theatre in Oak Park, Chicago suburb, is now under the administrative guidance of a woman. Mrs. J. R. Gage has supplanted Mr. Compton as manager, and the firm of Hill, Davis and Ellsworth, owners of the building, are relying on the enterprise and ability of Mrs. Gage to pull the Playhouse out of a tight place. Up to six months ago she controlled and operated a string of theatres in Northern Illinois.

Max Levy, salesman for Metro, did the big towns between Chicago and St. Louis last week in the interests of the new production, "Draft 258."

The Central Park, a new Balaban and Katz house, opened up Saturday, October 27, to an audience that eyed with wonder this new temple of the cinema. The Central Park has a seating capacity of 2,600 and is a masterpiece of theatre construction and equipment. Among other features it has an orchestra of twenty-two pieces.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, reports a sale of "The Diamond from the Sky" to the Brazil film trade. Brazil thus gets exclusive rights to the picture, the subject being 60,000 feet in length.

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, paid Chicago a flying visit last week to hold the reins at a special conference of Fox exchange managers of the central states and Far West. Among those in conference with Mr. Sheehan were C. W. Eckhardt, of the local office, together with Jack O'Toole and Lester Sturm, Charles Manfrey of the Omaha exchange, Robert Churchhill of the Denver branch, Whitney Young of the Kansas City branch, E. A. Westcott of Minneapolis and E. H. Wachter of the Dallas office.

Louis Frank, live exhibitor that he is, wasn't quite as alive as the auto thieves that kidnapped his car last Saturday, October 20, while he was paying a friendly visit in the College Building, 207 South Wabash avenue.

P. G. Baxter, formerly with Triangle in Kansas City, is now salesman for Metro in Illinois. He is taking the place of H. R. Skirboll of the local office, who is now boosting Metro productions in Indiana.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, local of the American Exhibitors' Association, has taken new offices on the seventh floor of the Mallers Building.

Although cramped for space, Manager Bayley of the Greater Vitagraph exchange is trying to wait the outcome of the proposed ordinance forcing all exchange offices out of the loop before taking more commodious quarters. The Vitagraph Company is said to be utilizing but one third of the floor space companies of similar size are using in Chicago.

Herman Wolfgram, sales manager of the Milwaukee Universal exchange, was in Chicago last week undergoing an operation on his throat. Mr. Wolfgram claims he wore his voice out selling Universal service, but the home office thinks he lost his voice rooting at the Sox-Giants game.

I. VanRonkel, manager of Bluebird Photoplays in Chicago and vicinity, announces that hereafter the regular Bluebird showing for exhibitors and press will take place Wednesday mornings.

The Motion Picture Club held a meeting Wednesday evening, October 24, at the Hotel Morrison. Following the dinner a brief snappy business meeting was held.

Abe Stern, manager of the L-Ko Studio in Universal City, paid Chicago a visit last week on his way to New York. On his return from the East Mr. Stern expects to tour the principal cities in behalf of Century Comedies and the L-Ko Comedies.

Manager C. W. Eckhardt, of the local Fox office, spent a few days in Milwaukee last week on business.

Catherine Melcher, in charge of the work of keeping Chicago and Illinois exhibitors informed as to what is non-taxable music, is doing some intensive and fruitful work in her office at the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Myrtle Stedman, who is making a tour of the Paramount theatres between New York and Chicago, is doing something different than is usually seen on this sort of tour. She is singing as well as delivering talks to the audience. She will resume picture making after this missionary work.

Fairbanks Visits Chicago on Liberty Loan Tour

Douglas Fairbanks visited Chicago last week after the manner of Haroun Al Rachid rather than according to the custom of a well press-agented modern screen actor. Anyway, not many people knew of Doug's visit until after he had gone. He came on from New York on short notice and made a whirlwind campaign in hotel lobbies and picture theatres, urging people to buy Liberty Bonds.

Doug had with him his wife and young son, Douglas, Jr., a robust lad of eight years and a real boy.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Spreading Dawn"

(Goldwyn—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

JANE COWL makes her debut as a Goldwyn star in "The Spreading Dawn," a photoplay written for her by Basil King and produced under the direction of Larry Trimble. Miss Cowl, an actress of rare ability on the speaking stage, loses none of her talent and magnetism even when deprived of her voice. Her slightest expression carries the greatest significance and the manner in which she has here shaded, here lightened her character of Patricia Vanderpyle shows her a competent mistress of the art of screen acting.

Miss Cowl is not all of "The Spreading Dawn," but she is a considerably large portion of it. The main story, told in retrospect, centers entirely on a love theme, and does not conclude happily. It is filled with misunderstandings on the part of the heroine, mainly brought about through the plotting of another woman flirt. It possesses one of those single track plots that requires little shift of scene and one which after going at top speed for a length of time seems to lose itself against a wall. It is only the most skilful playing of Miss Cowl and her support and the generally expert handling of the plot by Mr. Trimble that makes the picture what it actually is—an enjoyable piece of entertainment.

When the main story is concluded the picture returns to its modern characters. The niece of Patricia closes her aunt's diary. And then there is a picture of her lover still awaiting his answer without the door. This got a laugh at the Strand. It was a pretty long wait even when the answer was "yes." But such a slip can easily be corrected. The main thing to report is that the Strand audience seemed to thoroughly appreciate "The Spreading Dawn" in its entirety.

Mr. Trimble has handled his scenes capably and there are not a few strikingly artistic effects introduced. Miss Cowl, even as Patricia Vanderpyle in her declining years, is a convincing figure. Orme Caldara is a most pleasing hero, and Harry Spingler, Mabel Ballin and Edmond Lowe head a good supporting cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Georgina (Mabel Ballin), asks permission from her old aunt, Patricia Mercer Vanderpyle (Jane Cowl), to marry Captain Nugent (Edmond Lowe) before his departure for France. Patricia refuses it and in reply to Georgina's urging gives her an old diary of her own girlhood to read.

There is then unfolded the story of Patricia's romance with Anthony Vanderpyle (Orme Caldara), in the days of '61. After wooing and winning her despite the attempted interference of Mrs. Le Roy (Florence Billings), he is called to the colors the day after the wedding. Later he returns on furlough. After a few moments with Patricia he suddenly leaves her to see Mrs. Le Roy. Patricia's suspicions are aroused particularly when Le Roy (Henry Stephenson) comes to her complaining of her husband's actions. Le Roy, in a rage, returns to his home and shoots and kills Vanderpyle.

In the last page of the diary is a letter from Vanderpyle to Patricia, written the same day, which she has never opened. Georgina opens it. It proves to have been written after the shot was fired, and exonerates Anthony. He had gone to straighten out the affair of his brother, Bentley (Harry Spingler), who had carried on a flirtation with Mrs. Le Roy. With this revelation Patricia dies meeting Anthony again in the Spreading Dawn. Only a few days later Georgina watches her husband, the young captain, march off to war.

"The Belgian"

(Sidney Olcott Players, Inc.—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE BELGIAN," a story of the European war, written by Frederic Arnold Kummer and produced by Sidney Olcott with Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant as featured leads, is the latest picture offered States rights buyers.

The war is employed merely to create a dramatic situation that is only a part of the photoplay, although what few battle scenes appear are handled realistically. And Mr. Olcott has chosen to surround these scenes with a number of patriotic sub-titles that will easily stir the easily stirred picture audience of these times. Closing with views of English, French and American soldiers preceded by flags of the respective nations, the picture is certain of being heartily applauded.

"The Belgian" was written by Frederic Arnold Kummer, an author of note, who chose as his leading characters, a young sculptor who rises to fame, the simple fisher-lass who is forgotten, and the seductive adventuress, this time a German spy; who claims the sculptor's attentions, until he learns the truth. He is blinded in the war and as the spy wants nothing more of him after that, the fisher-lass takes her place by his side and contrives various ways with which to make him believe that the other woman is faithful.

Mr. Kummer's story resolves itself mainly into this familiar tale of love, with the war motif in the background, and interwoven through it and often eclipsing it, an expose of the German spy system in Belgium and France before and during the war.

The main plot has its beginnings sluggishly. The characters are introduced firmly and there is a wealth of detail to plant the different situations. The vitals of it are not reached until the war is introduced. Subsequently the action progresses swiftly but even here unity and coherence of scene are sometimes lacking.

As for the spy system with its numerous code messages, one becomes thoroughly saturated with it before the picture closes. It is overworked.

In fact the main fault with "The Belgian" can be traced to the apparently inexperienced continuity writer. The looseness of the beginning, the sometimes obvious lack of dramatic technique and the superfluity of the spy stuff standing witness to this statement. Mr. Olcott's direction is generally commendable and Mr. Whiteside and Miss Grant, besides being excellent types, play enthusiastically and with good results. Georgio Majeroni, Sally Crute, Anders Randolph and Arda La Croix appear in parts to which they are well fitted.

"The Belgian" is a good title, and the picture has its good points including the patriotic touches. And when it comes to author and star its advertising possibilities are many. From the box-office standpoint these merits may overshadow its artistic weaknesses referred to.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Victor Morenne (Walker Whiteside), fisherman in a Belgian village, develops a talent for modeling and, under the patronage of Dupin (Georgio Majeroni), journeys to Paris to study. He meets with success and forgets his former sweetheart, Jeanne (Valentine Grant), when he is introduced to the Countess de Vries (Sally Crute), who is, in reality, a German spy. Back in the village Berger (Anders Randolph), the postmaster, another spy, presses his suit for the hand of Jeanne. Victor returns home at the outbreak of the war, and joins the Belgian army. While aiding in resisting the German attack he is shot in the head, and as a result loses his sight. He is sent back to Paris to recuperate, where he begs visits from the Countess, who has not yet been apprehended. Jeanne, acting as his nurse, writes him letters purporting to come from the Countess. When he is nearly recovered Jeanne returns to Belgium. His sight restored Victor learns the real character of the Countess, and shortly afterward she is captured. He leaves to rejoin his regiment. Jeanne, in possession of important papers given her by a wounded messenger, is captured by the Germans. She is about to be executed when the Belgian attack proves successful. Jeanne and Victor are reunited.

"The Adventurer"

(Mutual-Chaplin—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is not much to say in regard to "The Adventurer" except that Charles Chaplin and his tricks meet with as much response as ever. He appears as an ex-convict who, after eluding his pursuers, rescues a girl from a watery grave and then poses as a man of wealth. He does a lot of kicking and has conceived many ridiculously funny methods of escaping the prison guards.

"There is not much to say," sounds rather detrimental, on second thought, but naturally its meaning should not be interpreted as such. If "The Adventurer" were the comedian's first picture there would be pages to write, but his personality, his brand of humor, and his competence as a producer as well as an actor are so well known that they need no further elaboration.

Suffice it that Chaplin's last Mutual comedy is crammed with laughs. His well aimed pedal attacks on an adversary's posterior regions are as funny here as they ever were before, while his nonchalant attitude in performing his business serves to the usual uproarious effect.

Edna Purviance and Eric Campbell again lead the supporting cast which, individually and as a whole, plays up to Chaplin in faultless style.

"The Man Trap"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is decidedly one of the best mystery pictures yet seen. And one of its strong points is that there is not a superfluity of mystery. Many producers in an attempt to get the audience wondering, throw a maze of scenes on the screen that mean little or nothing even when the final explanation forthcomes. Waldemar Young, who wrote "The Man Trap," has written each scene for a definite effect—he has evolved a mystery story that is not a mess and naturally it follows that his material, when well pictured, entertains up to the very last.

The seemingly hopeless plight in which the hero is thrown on the night of his escape from jail leaves one totally in the dark as to his way out. The suspense created by this situation is admirably maintained until the inspector's confession clears both the hero and the weak-minded fellow who supposes himself guilty of the crime—and who, it may be remarked, the audience also supposes guilty. It comes as a certain surprise when he is cleared and when the hero's ready offer to save the girl he loves from disgrace turns in his favor and freedom instead of a second jail sentence.

Herbert Rawlinson as John Mull, the hero; Ruby La Fayette as his mother, and Sally Starr as the heroine, make a pleasing trio and the support shows to very good advantage. Elmer Clifton has given the picture a production that stamps him as master of every detail of his craft.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Mull (Herbert Rawlinson), once a reporter, has been made the goat of his grafting employer, Steadman (Mark Fenton) and the police inspector, Finch (Frank MacQuarrie), and starts a twenty-year jail sentence. He makes good an escape after a year's imprisonment and, after visiting his mother (Ruby La Fayette), makes for Steadman's house with intent to kill him. Steadman's ward, Bess (Sally Starr), for whose hand John was once a suitor, plans to elope that evening with Grange (Jack Nelson), son of the district attorney (Dana Ong). While he is waiting, Steadman surprises him and orders him to leave. They quarrel, and Grange hits Steadman, who falls. Believing himself a murderer, Grange makes good his escape, taking Bess with him. When the servants discover the murder they notify Finch, who conducts the investigation. Evidence points to Grange as the guilty man. He is caught and confesses. While on the way to jail the automobile is wrecked and Grange escapes. In the meantime, John, attempting to enter the Steadman home, is shot at by a policeman. He runs away, later encountering Grange and Bess, who are attempting to relieve the former of his handcuffs. John learning the news sends them both home, telling them to leave the matter in his hands. He goes to the home of Finch and finds him looking through the papers which sent him (John) to jail. He returns to the Steadman home with the inspector as a prisoner, who after the third degree, confesses having killed Steadman himself after discovering him unconscious from Grange's blow, the cause being his desire to obtain the papers. Grange has accused Bess as being the cause of all his trouble, and, realizing his selfish character, she goes to John after his name has been cleared.

"The Maid of Belgium"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MOTHER love is the dominating note in "The Maid of Belgium," which stars Alice Brady. And while it has been juggled with rather freely at times from the standpoint of the mother mind, its various twists result in a number of melodramatic situations that create both suspense and sympathy.

Alice Brady has seldom been seen in a role that gives such full play to her varied talents. There are three distinct phases of the part. She is the young girl, the partly demented refugee from a ravished land, and the loving mother. Acting with a sincerity and a striking enthusiasm for her character in every scene Miss Brady is highly effective in registering the many high lights of the story that fall into her hands.

The support too is in keeping with the customary high standard evinced in the majority of the World-Brady subjects. George MacQuarrie makes a human figure of the American business man who longs for a child to brighten his home, and Louise de Rigney is natural in the somewhat artificial and difficult role of his wife.

The picture opens with scenes of Belgium immediately prior to the war. The quiet and peace of the little village stands in striking contrast to the fine suggestion of war and pillage that follows soon afterwards. When the scene shifts to America a number of pretty suburban views form a background for the exterior action.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Adoree (Alice Brady), fleeing from her ruined home in Belgium is cared for by the Hudsons (Louise de Rigney and George MacQuarrie), American tourists, who eventually adopt her. The shock of war has turned Adoree's mind to that of a child. When a child is born to her, the doctor (Lotta Burnell) and Mrs. Hudson urger her to allow the latter to claim it as hers, in order that it may have a name. Mrs. Hudson's motive in doing this is to gratify her husband's longing for children of his own. And so he is led to believe that Adoree's child is his wife's. Adoree is only able to stand this situation for a short time. She kidnaps the baby but is later found. Another sudden shock causes a return of her memory and Adoree tells the story of her marriage to Jean (Anthony Merlo) on the eve of the war. In possession of the truth the doctor demands that Mrs. Hudson restore the child to its rightful mother. It is a severe blow to Hudson, but he finally excuses his wife's deceit and restores Adoree to her husband, who happens to be in America at the time.

"Loyalty"

(Oro Pictures—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"LOYALTY" is the first picture to be presented by the newly formed Oro Pictures, Inc. It presents a melodrama in which the central figures are an actress and a dope fiend. Its situations are, on the whole, lurid, but the story works out to a satisfactory, morally correct ending.

Isadore Bernstein is the producer of "Loyalty." One is at something of a loss to classify his picture in any of the pigeonholes of the day, but by harking back a few years, when, it will be remembered, dope fiends were ever present, it will find many companion pieces. The public that appreciated Herman Lieb's "Dope" will look with favor upon Bernstein's "Loyalty."

Beatrice Moss and Rosalie Ashton made the scenario from a story by Ray Lewis and the cardinal essential, action, has been given featured prominence. There are some ever attractive shots behind the scenes of a Broadway show and the atmosphere throughout is convincing. Jack Pratt directed.

Betty Brice carries off acting honors as Nell Woodward, the actress, while Jay Morley gives a sincere interpretation of the dope fiend. Murdock MacQuarrie is successful as an overly nervous theatrical manager and the support renders adequate assistance.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nell Woodward (Betty Brice), on the night of her success on the stage marries Hugh Gordon (Jay Morley) to spite his mother (Jean Hathaway) who snubbed her. Randell (Murdock MacQuarrie), the manager of the show, is infuriated at this and cancels her contract. Hugh uses dope to excess and shortly becomes a hopeless fiend, while Nell is hardly able to eke out an existence for herself and her husband. Mrs. Gordon offers her five thousand dollars if she will leave the city, thereby believing that she will be able to reclaim her son. Nell takes the five thousand and departs to the shore, taking Hugh with her, where, after a strenuous siege, she succeeds in curing him of his habit.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Ninth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FURTHER complications are present in this number of the serial entitled "The Warning on the Wire," due to the introduction of the Mayor and his daughter. It appears that Perry Mason (Leon Bary) is leader of the city's gangsters and gunmen and when the district attorney presses the law breakers he is found dead in his bed the next morning. The Mayor is warned to desist in his efforts to apprehend the guilty parties.

Harry and Ilma who have made the acquaintance of the Mayor through his possession of one of the seven pearls, learn that a dentist has secreted deadly poison underneath a crown on one of his teeth. The poison will take effect in an hour. They try to reach the Mayor by 'phone, but a falling tree cuts down the wires. They try an automobile but this breaks down too. So nothing remains for Ilma to do but hang over a precipice, reach the electric wires and send a message in code to the Mayor.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Seventeenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE sixteenth chapter left Pearl seated beneath a descending pile-driver, all unaware of her danger. The seventeenth entitled "The Death Weight" opens with her hair's breadth escape from this fate. Tom and Pearl then pursue Carslake over housetops and down-stairs, but though a number of hazardous fights are staged between the two parties the villain eventually makes good his escape.

Carslake evolves another plan. Reading of the death of Burke, the one-time partner of Pearl's father, and of the visit that his daughter, Bessie, is to make to the city, he sends a young girl to Pearl with a letter explaining that she is Bessie Blake. She is cordially received and Pearl and Tom suspect nothing. On a trip to Chinatown, staged in order to show Bessie the sights, the party is attacked. Pearl dodges all her pursuers except Bessie who, for the final scene, holds her up at the point of a gun and demands the diamond.

"The Best Man"

(Balboa-Falcon—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE BEST MAN," produced by Balboa under the direction of Bertram Bracken and released as Falcon Feature on the General program, is an average four-reel feature, with William Ehfe and Margaret Landis presenting the leading roles.

This General release has been given a good production, set off by clear photography. The acting of both the "leads" and support, is good. There are no "stars" represented in the cast, but each character is portrayed with dramatic feeling. The story runs smoothly. The suspense is well kept to the end. The scenarioist has resorted to the unnatural, at times, supposedly to retain smoothness in action.

The fact that it runs only to four reels may influence the exhibitor to "think twice" before booking it, especially if his patrons have been educated to expect five-reel features. This is not a "world beater," but it will give satisfaction. William Ehfe characterizes an habitual drunkard with dramatic ability. In a few scenes he "overdoes" his characterization, but on the whole, his part is well taken. Margaret Landis screens well and carries a not-too-difficult role, without evidencing unnaturalness. Capt. Nicholson fills the "shoes" of a "small-town" doctor, in good fashion. Gordon Sackville makes a villainous "heavy." Others in the cast are: Mollie McConnell, Clifford B. Gray and Frank Brownlee—all doing their "bits" well. George Cain wrote the story.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Arnold Hammond (William Ehfe), a business man, drinks to excess. Drink gets the better of him and he goes to the country under the care of Dr. Storm (Capt. Nicholson), a country doctor. He meets Ruth (Margaret Landis), the doctor's daughter, and falls in love with her. She brings about his reform. Pierre Lemoyne (Gordon Sackville), a seaman, also loves Ruth. She cannot choose between the two. Arnold invites her on a yachting trip, and hires Pierre to "man" the yacht. Pierre shows his true colors. He refuses to turn back when a storm approaches. Pierre drinks heavily and tries to force Anold to drink. The yacht is overturned and the party is rescued by sailors. Ruth then decides and Arnold takes her as his wife.

"A Marked Man"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HARRY CAREY is again the star in this western, written by George Hively and directed by Jack Ford. The reformed bad man is the central figure, a character which Carey well knows how to interpret and as usual he has the spectator's sympathy from start to finish.

The latter portion of the film introduces some strong heart interest when the mother of the bandit is brought into the story. The outlaw is permitted to leave jail for a few days in order that he may receive his aged parent posing as a respected citizen of the western village. The suspense, too, runs high during this part of the film.

Ford's direction is everything that could be desired for a western of the usual type. The support headed by Molly Malone, who makes a delightfully appealing heroine, and Vester Pegg as the other bad man, contributes a number of capable performances.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cheyenne Harry (Harry Carey), a bandit, who has reformed because of the faith placed in him by Molly Young (Molly Malone) and her father (Harry Rattenberry), a rancher, is lured from the straight and narrow by an old pal, Kent (Vester Pegg), who suggests that they hold up the stage. Kent shoots and kills the driver and before the two highwaymen can loot the express box the sheriff's posse is upon them. Both are about to be hanged for the murder when Harry receives a telegram from his mother (Mrs. Townsend), saying that she is on her way to visit him. The sheriff (William Gettinger) allows Harry to deceive his mother into believing that he is an honorable citizen and after her happy visit, the bandit keeps his promise and returns to jail. When one of the occupants of the coach tells that Kent fired the fatal shot, Harry is allowed to go free—to Molly.

"Under the Stars and Stripes in France"

(Pathe—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS war number is of the greatest interest and will prove of feature worth to every theatre fortunate enough to secure it. It shows the American troops in France undergoing the rigorous training of months since their arrival in Europe. This training is something that the general public has to become acquainted with through the medium of this picture. They are shown receiving instructions in bomb throwing, machine gun operating and the physical exercises necessary to get them in perfect trim for service under fire. These last are some of the most curious pictures ever thrown on the screen. Pershing's men have been taught to run on all fours, obviously to keep themselves as close to the ground as possible while advancing on an enemy trench.

Interspersed between these scenes are a number of human interest touches, besides glimpses of camp routine. The number closes with a review of the troops by General Sibert, second in command to Pershing, and a regular closeup of Pershing conversing with General Joffre, pictures which brought forth rousing cheers from a Sunday afternoon Strand audience.

A Two Cylinder Courtship

(Strand-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

BILLIE RHODES and Jay Belasco manage again to fool daddy in this enjoyable single reel comedy. Miss Rhodes, as Mary, is evidently willing to take long chances so that she may be with her lover who has to resort to numerous manoeuvres to outmanoeuvre papa.

Jay and Billie cannot overcome father's objections, so they elope in Jay's two-cylinder car. Before they start Jay empties almost all the gasoline from father's car, so just as the chase becomes lively father's car is stalled.

A telephone call from father to Lawyer Jones of Beaumont causes the lawyer to disguise himself as a minister. Arriving at Beaumont Jay and Billie are delighted to meet a minister and when invited upstairs for the ceremony, they are trapped and locked in a room.

Making a rope of blankets and sheets the pair are just about to escape when father rushes in. They hide and while he is trying to discover whether they escaped by means of the rope, run out the open door and entrap father and the fake minister. A real minister meets them on the street and from the window upstairs father is an unwilling witness of their marriage.

The photography throughout is good and the production reflects creditably on Director Scott Sydney. Release date October 30.

This comedy will surely be well received wherever shown.

"The Planter"

(Mutual—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

THIS powerful seven-reel feature production put out by the Nevada Motion Picture Corporation, and released through Mutual, is without doubt one of the really great pictures of the year, and yet, while some will give it the most ardent approval of which they are capable, others will feel that it is too brutal. Men will like it for its tremendous strength. Women will shrink from the brute force and ruthlessness which are predominant in some of the big scenes.

But there is stuff in this great picture, featuring Tyrone Power, such as is seldom seen on the screen. You can take it away with you and think about it afterward. And that is the trouble. Some of the scenes are so terrific you can't forget them. In one place a Yaqui chief, who has bolted the plantation, is staked to the ground and given a beating that makes you cringe with vicarious suffering.

For a portrayal of strength and power mixed with an inexplicable element of tenderness there has been nothing in many moons that can hold a candle to the work of Tyrone Power in this picture. The setting is laid in the rubber plantations of southern Mexico and offers a wealth of tropical scenery that ought to carry a strong appeal to the people of this temperate zone. The cast supporting Mr. Power is to be commended for its work, and photography and direction are excellent.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

David Mann (Lamar Johnstone), pampered son of a rich widow, leaves New England for Southern Mexico as manager of a rubber plantation in which his friends have invested. His next neighbor is Ludwig Hertzer (Tyrone Power), a cruel and brutal planter, who takes a dislike to him when he is smitten by a pretty Mexican girl with whom Hertzer himself is in love.

Mann is appalled by the economic, social and moral conditions that exist on the plantations and as soon as he gets the reins in his hands inaugurates reforms. He gets still further into the bad graces of Hertzer when he tries to keep the latter from beating a slave who has attempted an escape.

Mann discovers that a group of grafting promoters are manipulating the plantation he is managing and goes back home to expose them. In the meantime Hertzer has been overcome with a passion for possession of the girl. He lures her to his plantation to start a school and makes her a prisoner. While he is trying to get her to submit to him his slaves revolt and a battle ensues in which the planter and his overseers are beaten. Hertzer, "hamstrung," crawls back to his cabin to die as Mann, just back, rushes to the plantation and saves his sweetheart.

"The Race to the Drawbridge"

(Kalem—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

HELEN GIBSON, as Helen, the telegraph operator at Fardale, crowds many stunts of a stirring nature in this single reeler, particularly when rescuing the railroad detective from what appears to be instant death. The detective is shackled and strapped to a handcar, which is turned loose on a down grade, toward the open drawbridge. Swinging perilously in midair, Helen dangles at the brink of the river as the handcar is about to plunge into the river. She reaches down, grabs the detective by the handcuffs on his wrists and swings him to safety. And all this on account of her receiving news of a bank robbery and incidentally becoming possessed of a real clue to the robbers.

The reels teems with exciting episodes. The story is well told and clear and the photographic effects are good.

The release date is set for Nov. 7, and should prove a winner wherever shown.

This was originally included as an episode of "A Daughter of Daring," but Kalem is releasing it as an individual feature.

"A Daughter of Maryland"

(Mutual—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

THIS is a pretty story of a proud Southern aristocrat and an equally proud daughter who takes offense at a young Northern landscape gardener who starts improving their estate by cutting down all the old landmarks. After getting her father to fire him she finds, after all, in a scene in which he saves an old man from death in a burning house, that he is the kind of a man she admires.

Edna Goodrich as the spoiled "daughter of Maryland," who has been used to having her own way and doing as she pleases, is seen to good advantage in this picture. A black ghost that haunts the Treadway home, and the superstition of an old colored man and woman add interest and humor to the picture. There are many picturesque settings and scenes and the directing is good, although the manner in which the villain gives himself up at the end after having shoved the blame for his crime on another man's shoulders is rather far fetched. The sleuth work of the old darky houseman also seems a little uncanny and makes one feel that he must have acquired some of his information from the script.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Beth Treadway (Edna Goodrich) lives with her father (William Carleton) and her aunt (Helen Strickland) in the old manor house of the Treadway family, which has been handed down from father to son. She is sought by Ripley (Jack Hopkins), a young Southerner, of good family but doubtful reputation, when John Standish (Carl Brickett) comes on from New York to reconstruct the grounds of the old estate. The young landscape gardener arouses the antagonism of Beth by his independence and she persuades her father to discharge him. Standish, however, shows his metal when he saves an old tenant from a fire which threatens to incinerate him. Incidentally he gains the regard of Beth and she then has her father reinstate him.

Ripley in the meantime has lost money in stocks and attempts to rob Treadway's safe. The Major catches him and in the struggle which ensues Treadway is shot.

"The Race with the Limited"

(Signal-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE seventh episode of this serial, "The Lost Express," opens with a dash and maintains its soul-stirring stunts throughout the two reels. Gaston Pitts (Leo Maloney), Thurston's private secretary, by some unexplained means has obtained power of attorney to manage the Thurston estate during Thurston's sickness, and while in league with the marauders, still continues in that capacity. Helen, however, is sure of his identity as Harelip, in spite of his strenuous denials. Bonner is appointed to represent Helen at the Mountain King mine, and Pitt tips off the Baron and his crew to waylay him and an awful fight ensues on the observation platform of the Limited when Bonner is overpowered and thrown from the train. Pitts' telephonic message to the Baron, however, was overheard and transmitted to Helen, who, in an auto, is "burning sand" to overtake the Limited. This she does and incidentally rescues Bonner and the end of the second chapter shows them both once again actively in the trail of the Baron and Valquez, et al.

For thrills this chapter cannot be beaten and Helen performs her usual number of hair-raising deeds; dropping from a telegraph wire seat to the top of a rapidly moving train is but a mere incident in her young life.

This episode abounds in thrills and is calculated to interest and hold spell-bound the most case-hardened audience.

"The Munitions Plot"

(Kalem—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE mysterious blowing up of munition trains is giving the railroad and express companies much trouble and an enquiry fails to enlighten the officials, but Belding (G. A. Williams), the brains of the dynamite gang, and his accomplice, Steele (George Routh), get a line on these proceedings and determine to pull their projected plan in a hurry. By tapping wires, they learn the position of the dynamite cars in the train, the time of its departure and its destination. Helen Gibson, the operator, in the meantime has been bound and gagged and made prisoner.

Just before the train is due to leave Helen manages to break the bonds with which she is tied. In the distance, she sees the two dynamiters board the freight just above Fardale. She climbs a telegraph pole, gets into a carryall, which runs on a wire between poles on each side of the road, swings across the tracks, and as the train passes beneath her, she drops to a flat car. The plotters have already set their dynamite and lighted it, and Helen, by a bold dash, is just in time to heave the satchel of explosives off the train and save the supply of ammunition.

This reel, originally an episode of "A Daughter of Daring," is being released Nov. 14 as a separate picture. It, too, is full of thrills and is sure to delight any audience before which it is shown.

"A Game of Wits"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

THIS is the kind of picture that will make the exhibitor who books it smile and rub his hands. It will please any audience that sees it, no matter how fastidious. It fairly scintillates with clean, fine humor and there isn't a suggestion of anything at which any one could possibly take offense. It's a good story, well told and admirably acted.

Gail Kane as the pretty heroine, who tries to rid herself of an aged Wall street wolf she has consented to marry in order to save her father from financial ruin, is delightful and grips the heartstrings of the audience right at the outset. The fast pace in hill climbing sports, and a laughable confession she makes to the effect that sometimes at night a desire steals over her to shed the blood of those she loves best, after a time causes her aged admirer to believe that he has made a mistake and to feel that perhaps after all he would be happier in the state of celibacy than with her as his wife.

There are no strained points in the story and nothing overwrought in the direction, which must be chalked up to the credit of Henry King. The excellent photography and beautiful scenic effects add greatly to the all around charm of the picture. Spottiswood Aitken, as the Wall street broker, with a desire for a young wife, Louis J. Cody as the heroine's lover and George Periolat all perform in a manner beyond reproach.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jeanette Browning (Gail Kane) returns from a party and overhears a conversation between her father (George Periolat), a broker who is on the verge of bankruptcy, and Silas Stone (Spottiswood Aitken), a Wall street shark, demanding her as his wife in return for saving her father from ruin. Pretending not to have overheard the conversation, she enters the room and later consents to marry him. Jeanette assumes to disregard the disparity in their ages, but pits her youth and vivacity against the old man's age at a holiday party in the mountains in such a way as to make him feel it. Later she trots out an imaginary family skeleton and pretends to be a subject of queer spells. Stone sickens of his bargain finally and attempts to steal away. She then threatens to sue him for breach of promise and he buys her off with a check for $100,000. She is then left free to accept the man she loves and live in happiness.

"The Savage"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE SAVAGE" is another Rupert Julian Bluebird with Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury in the principal roles. Elliott J. Clawson prepared the scenario from an original story of his own and it is filled with human interest situations through which are sprinkled some of the best thrills possible. "The Savage," once the vitals of the plot have been reached, truly grips one.

This story is set in some of the most beautiful mountain scenery ever brought within camera range. While Bluebird pictures have long been known for the magnificence of their exteriors it must be confessed that "The Savage" is superior in this respect to practically every picture the company has released with the possible exception of "God's Crucible."

Ruth Clifford in the role of Marie Louise is a thoroughly charming heroine. Monroe Salisbury as Julio Sandoval, the half breed, has been given a very sympathetic role to interpret and he never fails to get the most from it. A. D. Sears as the courageous member of the Canadian Northwest mounted police heads a supporting cast of excellence.

Mr. Julian's direction is complete in every detail.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Captain McKeever (A. D. Sears), of the Northwest Mounted, visits the town of Cheval Blanc to welcome his sweetheart, Marie Louise (Ruth Clifford), and to arrest Joe Bedotte (Arthur Tavares), a whiskey smuggler. The various hangers-on at the trading post resent his appearance, and, when he attempts to arrest Bedotte, he is attacked. It is only through the interference of Julio Sandoval (Monroe Salisbury), a half-breed that he is saved from death. Later McKeever departs to Bedotte's lair to make the arrest. Sandoval's passion for Marie, which he has nursed since childhood at length gets the better of him, and he kidnaps the girl. But in his cabin he is taken down with a fever, and Marie, sorry for him, nurses him back to health. McKeever has not returned from the Bedotte stronghold, and as various searching parties have failed to locate him, Sandoval, grateful to Marie, sets out to rescue him. He is successful, but while holding back the outlaws in order to permit the lovers to escape he loses his own life..

Colleen Moore, W. H. Bainbridge, George Franklin and Duke Lee complete the cast.

"Scandal"

(Select Pictures—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE role of Beatrix Vanderdyke in this adaptation of Cosmo Hamilton's bon bon novel, fits Constance Talmadge like a glove—so it seems. As the spoiled and foolish daughter of parents who are too busy with society to give her much attention, she plays with a natural air of extravagance, a realization of her self-conceived importance, that will win her unusual praise.

"Scandal" ran serially in the Green Book magazine and is now out in book form. In its frankness, its display of delicate situations for sensational purposes, it follows the course laid down in many of Mr. Hamilton's previous writings. And as his writings are immensely popular—as "Scandal" as a novel was immensely popular—so "Scandal" as a picture should be, for it has received good treatment at the hands of the adapter and director.

It is not an offensive picture, as well it might be by reading merely the bare outline of the plot. Miss Talmadge, because she acts her role so well, obscures any such possibility. She is the foolish virgin playing with fire and not realizing that fire burns. Her actions are free from any passionate feeling that would, in an instant, transform suspenseful though delicately humorous situations into more or less disgusting scenes with the sex element predominating.

Harry C. Browne makes a pleasing figure of the hero, J. Herbert Frank gives another fine characterization as heavy, and Aimee Dalmores is a fascinating widow, the exact counterpart, it may be said, of all the author's fascinating widows and adventuresses.

Charles Giblyn has given the picture a rare production, while photography, scenes and settings measure well up to the high standard maintained in all other departments.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Beatrix Vanderdyke (Constance Talmadge), a spoiled society girl, to quiet a scandal concerning herself and York (J. Herbert Frank), a fashionable portrait painter, announces that she is married to Franklin (Harry C. Browne), and then asks him to carry the bluff through. Franklin accepts the challenge, but makes it plain to Beatrix that he wants nothing to do with her. When York starts wagging his tongue, Mr. and Mrs. Vanderdyke (W. P. Carleton and Ida Darling) send Beatrix and Franklin off on a yachting trip. Franklin, despite his distaste for Beatrix's lie, finds himself falling in love with her, and when the other members of the party go ashore he orders full speed ahead and leaves them behind. But Beatrix is as cold as ice to his advances. The change takes place in her, when later she sees Ida Larpent (Aimee Dalmores) making love to Franklin. Matters are brought to a head when York again starts to gossip, inferring that Beatrix and Franklin were never really married. So Franklin, after silencing the artist, takes Beatrix away on his yacht and, outside the three-mile limit, they are married by the captain.

"Weavers of Life"

(Edward Warren Productions—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE central figure in "Weavers of Life" is Peggy, an optimistic little shop girl whose advent into the home of a too wealthy family eventually results in the reformation of all its members. This coupled with a minor thread of romance is the substance of Edward Warren's latest independent production.

Jack Clymer and Harry Hoyt prepared the scenario and the material used presents a striking array of possibilities for heart interest action. Little Peggy is snubbed from the moment she sets foot in the rich household. She startles fashionable society by her very frankness and refuses to allow herself to be swept into the current of foolish convention. It is only after two months that the members of the family awake to a sense of her sweetness and purity and are influenced by these qualities to mend their own erring ways.

It is a "Pollyanna" type of role and the authors and Mr. Warren have not failed in making it as sugary as possible, contrasting it plainly with the rather exaggerated society types introduced.

The picture has been given a production meeting all requirements of the story while the cast plays sincerely.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Peggy (Helen Hayes), a shop girl, believes herself in love with George Pratt (Earl Schenck), a rich society man. George introduces her to his father (Howard Hall), who suggests that Peggy live with the family for the space of two months. After a time George fulfills his father's expectations and tires of the girl. But she has proven so adept at caring for Bessie (Dorothy Benham), the child of Pratt's daughter Estelle (Gladys Alexandria) and Dr. Van Anden (Kenneth Hunter) that she is urged to remain. When Pratt fails in business, the entire household awakes to the fact that there is something else in the world besides empty pleasures, and when Peggy departs she carries the thanks of all. She then returns to her former lover (Gilbert Rooney), who from a corner loafer has graduated into an honest taxi driver.

Isabel West, Edna Hibbard, Barney Gilmore, Beatrice Allen and Harry Hadfield complete the cast.

"The Price Mark"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE PRICE MARK," a Thomas H. Ince production for the Paramount program, will live in the memories of those who see it for three reasons: first, because Dorothy Dalton imbues it with a vital "something" that is indefinable but ever present, reaching out from the silver stage of pantomime, even to the "standing-room only crowd," and gripping the very heart-strings for attention; secondly, because the great guiding influence back of all this "something" is Thomas Ince, and thirdly, because John B. Ritchie's story is human—granting the delicacy of the subject matter which makes it the more human—and tells on the screen one of life's tragedies—one that is enacted often with the whole world as a stage but with the beast and his prey at once actor and audience.

Perhaps this last should be first and the first last, but in the spirit which is suggested by the familiar passage, "last but not least," Mr. Ritchie's story comes last in the list of reasons why "The Price Mark" is a model of story-telling on the screen; of dramatic artistry and masterful direction in presentment and of sound entertainment in the list of silent dramas.

From the sensuous, heartless, mock-loving vampire when seen in "The Flame of the Yukon," Miss Dalton goes before the camera again—changed in soul, in thought, in action. Paula Lee is the personification of an innocent, unsophisticated, trusting girl. ——— was a Cleopatra, incarnate—delighting in her victories over men and numbering her victims with the smile of a cynic. The contrast is striking—vouching for this actress's versatility—her broad range of all things dramatic and her mastery of the art of expression.

The exhibitor need have no hesitancy in booking this feature for an extended run. Those who see it will tell others—it will advertise itself. You have the efforts of a master director to vouch for its assured reception with "open arms"; you have the crowning achievement of a star's career as collateral against loss; you have a strong meaning, appealing title to flash in incandescents—the brighter the better—in short you have every essential quality in screen drama which goes to dispose of extra reels of tickets and which is good insurance against vacant seats.

Those who go to a theatre to see more than plain "movies" will perceive in this production a certain technique in the art of screen drama that is immediately associated with a master's genius. The direction—the power behind the silent drama's throne—is, with every flash of pantomime, in evidence—standing out with the prominence of a lone pedestrian in Times Square. It strikes home; it smacks of technique, of a master mind. Roy Neill is accredited with the direction, but the reviewer ventures the assertion that Mr. Ince was within a commanding distance when the "shooting" was in progress.

William Conklin and Thurston Hall, who interpret the principal male roles in support, do work of quality. They register in every scene. Adele Farrington, Edwin Wallock, Dorcas Matthews and Cleo Ayers—all are to be commended. The last named, although doing only a "bit" give promise of doing bigger "bits" if the opportunity presents itself.

STORY AND PLAYERS

Fielding Powell (William Conklin), a noted artist, and Dr. Daniel Melfi (Thurston Hall) visit Egypt. Powell gets into trouble with a native girl and her father attempts to kill him, but Dr. Melfi saves Powell and takes him out of the country. Powell meets Paula Lee (Dorothy Dalton) and engages her as his model. He learns to love her. He persuades her to live in the apartment he has furnished for her and she falls a victim to his treachery. Later Paula decides that so long as she is disgraced in the eyes of the world she must act the part. When Powell sees her smoking and acting commonplace, he realizes for the first time that he really loves her. He tells her he will leave for a time, and when he returns, he says, he will marry her. In the meantime she meets Dr. Melfi and a strong friendship springs up between them. He asks Paula to marry him, but she refuses, saying that she is not his equal. He tells her that he will be waiting always. Powell returns and finds Dr. Melfi's gloves on the floor. He accuses Paula and tells her to go to her lover. She goes to Dr. Melfi and they are married. Some time later, Powell calls on Dr. Melfi and learns for the first time that Paula is his wife. The Doctor has a sick call, and when the two are alone, Powell tells Paula that he will tell the Doctor all. Paula pleads with him, and he consents to keep the secret if Paula will visit him that night at his studio. She does so and Powell attempts to exact the price. His valet, who is the Egyptian whose daughter Powell had deceived, kills him.

"Mothers of Men"

(Robards Players—Five Reels—State Rights)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

WITH a strong title, a timely theme and presenting, as it does, a subject in which millions of our women are interested, "Mothers of Men," produced by Robards Players, under the direction of Willis Robards, and released on the state rights market by Sheppard and Van Ioan, is entitled to a good bit of consideration from every exhibitor and in proper turn will, in the opinion of the reviewer receive praise from the patron, regardless of his or her status in life. Its timeliness will strike home. Although the author has looked a long way into the future and placed a woman as the presiding judge in a court of law, there are thousands who will praise his efforts, especially the ardent suffragists and all womankind who are optimistic concerning universal victory for woman suffrage. Assuming that all women of the United States had the vote and the problem which the author seeks to expound, in this propaganda play, be sound reasoning, there are none who can deny that women would take their places beside the men in our courts of law, as presiding justices.

The author has been original in weaving his theme, but the director has been very commonplace in transferring some of the author's ideas to the screen. Incidents which should have received only a passing notice or a flash on the screen, Director Robards has run to noticeable lengths, thereby creating in his production a certain offensive element. This is particularly true of the scene depicting the condemned man's last hours before going to the death chamber. He makes too much of the religious aspect of the situation and not enough of the real purpose for which his production is screened—to disseminate the doctrine of women suffrage.

Dorothy Davenport does very well in the principal role. She so far outshines exhibitions of some members of her supporting cast that an audience is given the impression that she does super-excellent work. Willis Robards, enacting the principal male role, insists upon being too much of an "actor." At times he displays true artistic talent but more often he either "flies too high" or falls into a coma, failing to appreciate the fact that he is interpreting an emotional role. Every one in the audience will know that Katherine Griffith is "Clara's blind sister." She insists upon this and therefore registers the "stone" blind expression throughout the scenes in which she appears. Arthur Travares "overdoes" the "heavy" part. He impresses as being over-anxious to convince. Hal Reed and Mrs. Hal Reed are in evidence because of their very amateurish performance. Mr. Robards's legal procedure is not according to best authorities.

"Mothers of Men" is timely, has a good title and should not meet with disappointment with any exhibitor. He can book it and "cash." The photography and lighting effects are "up-to-the-minute."

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Clara Madison (Dorothy Davenport) is an ardent suffragist and leader in the cause. She is elected judge of the Supreme Court. She meets Worthington Williams (Willis Robards), a lawyer, and they are married. Williams because of his activities to pass legislation to insure prohibition and his work against the saloonkeepers, is looked upon as an enemy by the saloon men. They plan to "get" him. He is accused of being implicated in a dynamite plot, tried and convicted and sentenced to the death chair. His wife is elected Governor of the State, and the whole community waits to see how she will employ her power to pardon a condemned man.. She remains passive and does nothing. A few hours before the death penalty is to be exacted, a confession is made by a gangster which proves Williams's innocence.

Announcement of

Motion Picture News Studio Directory

Fourth Edition, Out in December

The DIRECTORY is the Standard Publication among editors of motion picture pages in daily newspapers. They constantly consult it for information about players.

For this reason, no other single medium gives actors and actresses wider publicity than the DIRECTORY.

Newspapers cannot do without biographies in answering the countless questions of picture fans.

Read what the Chicago Daily News says:

Mr. Johnston, Motion Picture News, Inc.
729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnston:—Will you be kind enough to have mailed to me a copy of your last Studio Directory. I had one and somebody swiped it. Perhaps someone else in the office found it to be as full of good information as I did. Until it disappeared from my desk, I have had numerous occasions to refer to it and found the very information I sought.

Trusting you are well and with the kindest regards, I am, Yours truly,
W. K. HOLLANDER, Editor Motion Picture Department,

SILVERTIP

THERE'S A REASON FOR ITS PRESENT REPUTATION!

When you trim your lamps with Silvertips it is well to remember that this industry-endorsed carbon is being used by the most discerning and critical exhibitors in the country.

It is not an idle boast that Silvertip has been adopted as the projector standard of the world. Go into the largest and most up-to-date houses—into theaters where the length of throw and character of pictures presented demand a pure white projection light of far above normal intensity—and you will see the reason why.

What is satisfying critical thousands the country over is worth a trial from you. Silvertips mean perfect projection and minimum carbon adjustment. It is little wonder that operators from coast to coast want them right now.

Let us send you our free booklet, "The Why of the Silvertip."

Special Width Films

THE question of special width film and special projectors seems to be causing a considerable amount of interest in the equipment field and the advocacy of this special equipment is causing no small amount of trouble in the various municipalities throughout the country, where laws are being enacted requiring special film, etc.

To our mind there is absolutely no excuse for this condition and no reason why the adoption of this unstandardized material should receive any consideration at all by any one interested in the progress and betterment of our industry.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which, as we all know, is made up of practical men, all interested and actively engaged in the promotion of motion pictures, has gone on record as being unalterably opposed to anything which is not absolutely in accordance with accepted standards. The opinion of these men certainly deserves the deepest consideration, and the mere fact that they have gone on record as opposing this movement is sufficient proof that the far sighted individuals in the trade have condemned something which in the end will only have to be pulled out by the root and thrown into the discard, which is a process which might as well be avoided now instead of waiting until later.

I WISH to quote from a letter from one of the largest manufacturers in the country, who has nothing to do with the production of film, or with the manufacture of projection machines. He says:

"In dealing with the question of guarding the public against danger from film fires the underwriters laboratories have persistently ignored one thing which is ordinarily strongly emphasized by insurance men—the moral hazard. Nothing could be more ridiculous than the assumption that the adoption of a special gauge of perforation will insure the use of non-inflammable film. Given a man who has no scruples against breaking the law or exposing the public to possible danger—confront him with an opportunity to profit by the use of ordinary film stock—and he will have that stock perforated to the special gauge. Men of that sort recognize but one deterrent—the fear of punishment. A stiff fine—or a fine and imprisonment—in prospect, would cause him to use non-inflammable stock. But protection to the public will lie in the fear of punishment rather than in the freak perforation.

"The pity of it is that muddlers have not learned—or have not been willing to acknowledge—that the motion picture business depends for its existence upon scientific accuracy—upon the standardizing of machines and equipment—upon the practice of the principles of efficiency in every department. And so, careless of the results of their muddling and with a confidence born of ignorance, they go blithely about the task of undoing the work of the experts who are striving to put the industry on such a sound basis as will make certain its orderly progress.

"The muddlers have added nothing to the safety of the picture-viewing public by forcing the adoption of these special perforations. But they have added immeasurably to the difficulties which beset the path of the men who are unselfishly trying to benefit the industry."

THE first paragraph of this quotation draws attention to the obvious fact that unscrupulous people in the industry, or in fact any one so minded, would experience no more difficulty in having ordinary inflammable film stock made and perforated to a special gauge—for use with a specially designed sprocket—than is incident to the preparation and use of film of standard dimensions; and insurance authorities could thus be deceived at will. This is a point which most people in the business absolutely overlook; but yet it is one of the most obvious conditions which could possibly be imagined.

This special film has been suggested and pushed by people who feel that they can create a monopoly and supply something which no one else can possibly get hold of. There is no doubt that the public, whether they be city authorities or individuals, are hoodwinked by this sales argument, whereas, if they were to consider conditions as they really exist they would very soon realize that they are not only buying something with a limited use but are depriving themselves of the possibility of using and showing in their homes, churches, schools, etc., films which have been made in the past and which, if they are going to get a hundred per cent out of their equipment, they must be prepared to exhibit.

Non-inflammable film is manufactured, and if there is a sufficient demand for it it will be produced in large quantities. This can be marked so that any inspector or member of the audience will know at a glance that the laws are being complied with, and that non-inflammable film is being used. If this were not possible there might be a semblance of excuse for the present agitation in regard to special films, but if non-inflammable film can be obtained in one size it can certainly be obtained in the standard size.

LAST week on this page we discussed the "Open Booth." If this were adopted it would be a step in the right direction, for it would tend materially to convince the municipal authorities that their fears with regard to motion picture exhibitions are practically as groundless as was the fear of the ferry-boat proprietors who in the past would not allow an automobile with a tank of gasoline to come on the boat. We have at the present time no less than seven projectors on the market, which are so designed as to reduce to a minimum the chance of a film igniting while being projected, and which, moreover, can be operated with perfect safety by a man who knows his business (as all operators should if they have obtained a license).

A manufacturer of a special machine was in this office only a day or two ago. He asked me whether I would be willing to give an exhibition in my home at a child's birthday party with a machine running standard film even with an operator who knew his business from the ground up. My reply was that I absolutely would and that I not only would do it, but have done it, and have advocated that it be done in the homes of friends, for I do not consider that there is any more danger in doing this than I consider there is danger in attending the motion picture theatre which I patronize, and which is equipped with a fire-proof booth.

To be sure, the insurance authorities are only just beginning to become accustomed to motion pictures as a risk. As this becomes more common and they are called upon to do more of this insuring we will have laws passed which will be fair and equitable to the motion picture, and in them I hope will be incorporated a demand that none but standard films shall be used. Whether this is inflammable or non-inflammable makes but little difference.

E. K. GILLETT.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

The Mechanics of Film Splicing

and a Suggested Standard Film Join

IT is well known that a large percentage of the operator's troubles are due to the bad condition of film, and it is also an established fact that a new film deteriorates rapidly with use. Mishandling; worn or incorrectly adjusted projector mechanisms; and a variety of other causes contribute to this rapid deterioration of a film positive, but it can be emphasized that a film positive, carefully prepared in the laboratory, and used by a competent operator on a clean and accurately adjusted projecting machine, may be screened thousands of times without showing any appreciable effects from such use. This is not an imaginative statement formulated as an introduction for that which follows, but is founded on the study of the condition and characteristics of many reels of film which have undergone long and continuous use under our personal observation.

The proper care of motion picture positive prints is a subject of itself, but we propose on the present occasion to record some observations on the important item of the splices by which lengths of cine film are joined together. Film splices are termed "patches" by the average operator, but this term is rather a misnomer, and is discouraged by makers of cinemachinery, while the term "patch" is rarely heard in a film laboratory.

Modern positive printing methods have made possible the preparation of a thousand-foot reel of film with as few as five or six splices for a straight black and white subject, but in the case of a film containing frequently alternating scenes of different tints, a reel as issued by the laboratory may contain a great many joins. Although a new film positive is supposed to be in perfect condition, it is a fact that there is much careless joining done in cinematographic laboratories, and it seems that every film joiner in a laboratory has his, or her, own special method of making a splice. The technique of splicing, such as the scraping of the emulsion from the film, application of the cement, etc., has been frequently dwelt upon and need not therefore be considered here. One point should be established, however, before we proceed further; it is not possible to make a perfect, or even a highly serviceable, splice in cine film without the aid of a splicing machine (so called) or press, wherewith to force the cemented edges of the film into complete contact at the point where the join is made. In that which follows the use of a press of some sort is assumed, since it is indispensable to the production of first-class results.

There are a variety of methods of cutting and overlapping the ends of two pieces of cine film in order to make a join, but they are all derived from two distinct and extensively used types of film splice. As no good could come from the description of numerous impractical types of join, we shall therefore consider only the two principal forms, and it will presently be apparent that one of these types of join is so vastly superior to the other that there is, in fact, only one type of film splice which is worthy of consideration and use by the laboratory and the conscientious operator.

Fig. 3. Fig. 5.

In Fig. 1 is shown a type of film join which is in extensive use. As Fig. 1 shows, this style of splice is made by cutting the two ends of the film to be joined right through the middle of the space between two consecutive pairs of sprocket holes. The section A of the film then has the emulsion scraped away to the center of the space between the two pairs of sprocket holes nearest the end. The end of film B is then laid over it; the sprocket holes registered; and the join made.

In spite of the fact that this type of splice is in extensive use it can be stated that a large percentage of cases of losing the loop, film riding the sprocket, and other accidents while the film is passing through the projector are due to this impractical and unscientific type of film splice. A splice of this type also makes more noise when passing over the intermittent sprocket than most other forms of film splice, and while it might be thought that this is an inconsequential item, the fact that such splices make a lot of noise in traversing the intermittent is an indication of itself that they are not passing through in a frictionless and unimpeded manner. The result of this is severe wear on the film, and the rapid breaking down of the sprocket holes following a join of the type in question.

The appearance of these broken sprocket holes is shown in Fig. 2, which is based on the study of films, otherwise in perfect condition, which have been repeatedly projected on a machine which was in first class adjustment. Fig. 2 refers to the effect of a splice such as is depicted in Fig. 1 on the pairs of sprocket holes following the splice. Needless to say, this breaking down of the sprocket holes, when once started, spreads rapidly along the film. The reason for this will be presently explained, but a further study of Fig. 1 will make it plainly apparent that to make a join which encircles the sprocket hole is to join the film at its weakest point.

Let us, however, see why it is that the form of join illustrated by Fig. 1 is handled so roughly in its passage through the projector mechanism. The reason is really a simple case of mechanical misfit, as is made evident by Fig. 3. In Fig. 3 is shown a section of a projector sprocket. A join of the type represented in Fig. 1 is shown passing over the sprocket teeth. When we consider that a film splice represents approximately double the ordinary film thickness, and that all film splices are relatively unpliable, it is at once apparent from Fig. 3 that such a splice as we are now considering can easily ride the sprocket teeth, and also that the strain on the edges of the sprocket hole which forms the center of such a join must be very great. It is readily apparent therefore why this type of splice deteriorates so rapidly and is the cause of much trouble. In passing over the sprocket teeth it is situated at the most unfavorable point possible.

We have now to consider the means of improving this unfeasible method of joining cine films. This is accomplished by making splices of the type shown by Fig. 4. In addition to being the most serviceable of all splices in practical use, it is very easy to remember the correct method of making this type of join correctly. Fig. 4 shows that the two films to be joined are so cut as to leave on the end of each strip one complete space such as separates successive pairs of perforations. There should be no excess portions of the next pair of perforations, such as is caused by cutting the film across a pair of perforations. When the films have been correctly cut, so that the end of each strip represents a space of the width which separates successive pairs of perforations, the end of film A, Fig. 4, has the emulsion scraped away to the extent of one space (between perforations). The end of film B, Fig. 4, is laid on the scraped surface just so as to cover it (to the extent of one space) and the join made.

Now we have a splice as nearly perfect in mechanical design as it is possible to make in a conventional cine-film, for use with the present style of projector. A splice of the type shown by Fig. 4 will pass through a projecting machine with less resistance or strain than will any other form of join; with the result that reels of film having all of their splices made in this manner will give less trouble to the operator than will films joined with any other type of splice. This statement, it is understood, assumes the use of a correctly adjusted projector, for with a badly adjusted machine any quality of film will speedily come to grief. Even so, the style of join depicted by Fig. 4 will fare better than other styles, because, as previously noted, its design permits its free passage through the projector mechanism.

We see this illustrated by Fig. 5, which shows a section of a projector sprocket and a join, as illustrated at Fig. 4, traversing the sprocket. This type of splice, it will be recalled, occupies the space between two successive pairs of perforations on a film, and therefore when such a splice passes over a projector sprocket it lies in the depression between successive pairs of sprocket teeth as Fig. 5 shows. It is evident from Fig. 5 that this type of patch occupies the position of least strain in passing over a projector sprocket, and also that the sprocket holes at either side of the patch are more securely engaged by the sprocket teeth, than could possibly be the case with a splice of the type illustrated in Fig. 1.

In view of these graphical illustrations it will be readily appreciated that films containing splices made as per Fig. 4 will give the most satisfactory service, and will also be subject to less breaking down of the sprocket holes following the joins than is the case with films spliced in any other manner. With a properly adjusted projection machine there is in fact no breaking down whatever of the sprocket holes following splices of type Fig. 4, and we recommend the adoption of this form of patch by all laboratories and projecting machine operators.

An Unexpected Lecturer for the I. P. A.

ON Friday evening, Oct. 19, the members of the International Projection Association, Inc., met at their club rooms, 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, N. Y., to listen to the third of a series of lectures to be given its members during the winter months by well known men engaged in the motion picture industry.

Shortly before midnight, President Polin announced that an unexpected pleasure was to be the meed of the "boys," and introduced Mr. J. T. Caldwell who was accompanied by Mr. H. L. James, both of these men being present in the city at this time representing the National Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, Cleveland, Ohio, at the big Electrical Show held at Grand Central Palace, and to which Mr. Caldwell cordially invited every member of the I. P. A. for the purpose of witnessing a demonstration of the "Mazda" lamp. Speaking of the Mazda lamp and its possibilities, Mr. Caldwell said: "The first of these lamps was made in 1915 and placed in operation at the Home theatre, Cleveland, Ohio; the second installation was at the Windamere theatre, also in Cleveland, where they have been in operation and given very satisfactory results up to the present time. These lamps," said he, "are not intended to replace all arcs, but they will replace arcs up to 35 amperes, using A. C. Nor will they, as many have said, throw operators out of their positions, for skill is required in the handling of these lamps if they are to give satisfactory results." After a forty-minute talk in which he was able to bring out many points of interest to his hearers, Mr. Caldwell with Mr. James made their departure in order to catch an early train for their home city.

Mr. Leonard Ruess, electrician for the Nicholas Power Co., the scheduled lecturer, was then introduced and give an interesting and instructive talk on "Electric Motors." Time and again the speaker pointed out that the first essential to the successful operation of a motor was cleanliness. Taking apart both an A. C. and a D. C. motor and explaining each and every part, Mr. Ruess then showed the boys how to make tests for grounds in either the armature or field coils, also how to change the direction of the motor by changing the wiring.

The chief cause for a motor failing to work properly was dirt accumulating between the collector rings and the housing, which could be avoided if the operator would take care to clean this dirt out at least once a month, using a hand bellows for the purpose. After a most interesting talk, taking up the various motor troubles experienced by operators, Mr. Ruess spoke on Inductors, and in the twenty minutes consumed by this subject gave much valuable information to his hearers.

The subject of lubrication being brought up, Mr. Ruess then told his hearers why he decided to "invent" the lubricant known as "Leonard's Motor Grease," which met with great success among exhibitors and operators the first day it was introduced to the trade. Said Mr. Ruess, "In my capacity of electrician for the Nicholas Power Company it becomes my duty to examine every motor sent in to the factory for repair, and I have found that the chief trouble lay in improper lubrication, either the bearings would be dry or they would be literally swimming in oil, with the result that the motors were in some instances absolutely ruined. It was then that I began experimenting with various lubricants, and at last after exaustive tests, using this lubricant on motors, and finding that there was no oil in the motors I decided to place on the market the grease which bears my name."

At the conclusion of the lecture, President Polin and his staff of officers conducted their guests to an eating emporium, where full justice was done to an epicurean feast prepared by a famous Manchurian chef. Announcement of the next lecture will be made in these columns.

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Speer "Alterno" Noiseless Carbons for Alternating Current

IN the smaller cities and towns where A. C. is the only current obtainable, and theatre owners are not desirous of installing equipment to change this to D. C., operators are compelled to work under a severe handicap. It has been impossible, up to this time, to project photoplays with alternating current and have the same intense, bright light that direct current houses are obtaining.

This entire condition has been changed by the introduction of the Speer "Alterno" Noiseless Carbons for alternating current.

By the adoption of special materials, both in the body of the carbon and in the core, the Speer Carbon Company is able to offer to the exhibitor and operator a carbon with intensely bright, white-light producing qualities.

The noise, which in the old style carbons almost drove the operator insane, and in many instances caused patrons to leave the theatre, has been eliminated.

Regarding the wandering of the arc, or the flickering of the light, it can almost be said—"it cannot be made to wander." While it is not recommended, the operator might safely leave the machine, to do other work about the booth, and know that the arc would be steady and as originally adjusted, upon his return.

The adoption of Speer "Alterno" Carbons merely necessitates the proper placing of the carbons in the upper and lower holders. No new housing, no additional lamp jaws, no adapters—simply the same equipment used for other carbons.

In the use of Speer "Alterno" Carbons the same sized upper and lower is positively necessary, and the following table indicates the proper combinations, according to the amperage secured:

Amperes	Carbon Combination
40 to 55	5/8" upper and lower

It is strongly recommended that the above combinations be employed, for in no other way can improved projection be assured.

Speer "Alterno" Carbons cannot be used in conjunction with any other carbons. However, after the lower carbon has been used up, the remaining portion of the upper carbon may be set in the lower holder and a new twelve-inch "Alterno" again employed above—thus effecting the original and correct combination.

In the placing of the carbons, the "jack-knife set" will probably be found to give the best curtain illumination and the most uniform brilliancy of light. In this setting, the lower carbon is vertical while the upper carbon is inclined at an angle of 30° from vertical. This permits the greater percentage of light to be thrown directly toward the lens. In all operations on A. C., particular care should be exercised to see that the carbons are not jammed or frozen. When carbons are brought together it invariably destroys the crater, causes graphitization, and in many instances breaks off small particles of the carbons.

Where current of less than 60 amperes is used, a very short arc length should be maintained at all times. This should not be in excess of one-eighth inch. As the amperage is increased this can be slightly lengthened. The correct arc is easily obtainable by careful adjustment of the carbons.

That Were Never Before Deemed Possible

Perfect Projection — Immovable Arc
Noiseless Operation — Brilliant Illumination

A bright, flickerless, eye-resting light
No changes required in booth equipment

By the adoption of special materials, both in the body of the carbon and the core, the Speer Carbon Company is able to offer to the exhibitor and operator a carbon with intensely bright, white light producing qualities. The illuminating qualities of the SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS bring out the minute details of the film and yet have a most pleasing effect on the eye.

The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days. This entire condition has been changed by the introduction of the SPEER "ALTERNO" NOISELESS CARBONS for alternating current.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elaborate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct.

THE appearance of a developed sensitometric test-plate is shown by Fig. 4, from which it will be noted that the plate bears a graduated series of densities, each representing an exposure twice as great as its predecessor. The ends or edges of the test-plate are clear unexposed portions of the emulsion and are termed "fog strips" because when their opacity is measured photometrically the reading on the photometer will show the absorption of light by the glass and gelatine of the emulsion, and also that due to any fog inherent in the emulsion, or produced by the action of the developer.

The opacities of the graduated series of exposures on the test-plate have now to be measured, and this may be accomplished with various types of photometers, but in accordance with the Hurter and Driffield principles, it is densities which are recorded by, and read from, the photometer scale, although it is the opacities of the test-plate which are measured. We saw in an earlier installment that the density D, was the common logarithm of the opacity O, and it will further be recalled that in H. and D. sensitometry the measurements are based upon the weight of silver per unit area on the negative, which the density D, represents.

In their classical researches Messrs. Hurter and Driffield used a modified form of the well known Bunsen grease-spot photometer, similar to that shown in Fig. 5. The sight-box of this photometer (shown in the center of the cut) contains the conventional Bunsen screen, consisting of a piece of paper bearing a translucent grease-spot, while behind the screen two mirrors are mounted at suitable angles, so that both sides of the Bunsen screen may be seen at once by the observer at the front of the instrument. The sight-box is moved from end to end of the photometer by means of a long rack, upon which it travels, and a pinion at the front of the sight-box. Below the track along which the sight-box travels is a scale graduated into opacity logs or densities. As Fig. 5 shows, the front of the H. and D. photometer is provided with a large hood, or shadow-box, which screens off the extraneous light shed by the comparison lamps (not shown) at the two sides of the instrument. Hurter and Driffield used two kerosene lamps with glass chimneys and burners giving flat flames. At the right and left of the track along which the sight-box travels are two holes, provided with diaphragms of various sizes, through which light from the two lamps reaches the two sides of the Bunsen screen. Near the light aperture at the left side of the photometer is a spring clip by which the test-plate to be measured may be held in the path of the light beam.

Before proceeding to measure a test-plate, Fig. 4, it is customary to draw lines between the various densities with a pen and ink, as this facilitates their adjustment before the photometer aperture. It is also necessary to determine the zero point of the photometer before commencing to measure densities; the zero is, of course, the position of the sight-box showing both sides of the Bunsen screen equally illuminated, when no absorbing media is introduced into either light beam. For simplicity in scaling the photometer some point other than the true zero is made the zero of the density scale.

The first part of a test-plate to be measured is the "fog strip," and if the zero of the photometer scale is not the true zero of the instrument the scale zero must be subtracted from the fog strip density reading to give the true fog density. The densities of the nine graduated exposures are next measured in succession, and by subtracting the fog density from each of these determinations their true values are secured. In accurate sensitometry each density is read a number of times and the mean of the readings is used in subsequent calculations.

For numerous reasons which need not be considered here, the Bunsen grease-spot photometer is not as precise an instrument as is desirable in modern sensitometry, so research workers and the manufacturer's laboratories use spectrophotometers, or polarization photometers, wherewith to read the densities of sensitometric test-plates.

The Martens polarization photometer has proven handy for this class of work, but the Hüfner spectrophotometer, which was employed by Mees and Sheppard in their researches, has now been adopted by the testing laboratories of many photographic manufacturers. This spectrophotometer, as modified by Mees and Sheppard and manufactured by Hilger of London, England, is of the differential type, in which two portions of a spectroscopic slit are illuminated by one light source and brought into optical contact by a specially designed prism. The intensity of one half of the slit is diminished by the medium whose absorption is to be measured (in this case the photographic plate), while the illumination of the other half of the slit is varied to secure a photometric match by means of polarizing prisms. The Hüfner spectrophotometer is shown in Fig. 6, where A is the light source (a Welsbach burner) and B is an adjustable sliding pillar on which the photographic test-plate is mounted in a special holder which allows it to be slid along, thereby bringing its various densities before the spectroscopic slit of the instrument. C is a Hüfner-Albrecht rhomb by which the two photometric fields (corresponding to the two halves of the slit) are brought into close juxtaposition, while D is a small Nichol prism which polarizes the light perpendicularly before one half of the slit. The light rays now pass through collimator E and are dispersed into contiguous spectra by a Hilger constant-deviation prism F (see Hilger's spectroscopic catalog for description), and then traverse an analyzing Nichol prism which can be rotated about its axis and the angular extent of the rotation read off on the vernier scale G. The absorption spectrum of the test-plate and the comparison spectrum now enter the telescope H and are photometrically compared by observation through the eye-piece I. This is by no means a complete description of the Hüfner spectrophotometer, but the principles of spectrophotometers, and the measurement of the absorption-spectra of colored media, will form the subject of a later article.

Suppose, however, that we have a test-plate before the slit of the spectrophotometer and wish to measure the series of graduated densities. Upon looking through the telescope eye-piece two spectra are seen, one above the other. One is the absorption spectrum of a portion of the test-plate (for some arbitrary wave-length, bright green being generally used), while the other is a comparison spectrum which can be reduced in intensity by rotating the analyzing Nichol. The extent to which the comparison spectrum is reduced, by rotation of the analyzer, is recorded on the scale G, and by exactly matching any desired part of the two spectra an exceedingly accurate measurement of the opacity, or light absorption of the photographic test-plate, can be secured. Now the intensity of light transmitted through crossed Nichols is proportional to the square of the cosine of the angle θ between them. (See subject of polarization in any work on Physical Optics or advanced text-book on Physics). Therefore, using Hurter and Driffield's notation, the results will be represented numerically as follows:

$$D = \text{Density} = \log_{.10} \text{Cos}^2\theta$$

In using the Hüfner instrument the measurement of the fog density, and consequent subtraction of its value from the series of photographic densities, as determined on the spectrophotometer, can be avoided by so mounting the test-plate before the apparatus that the fog-strip comes in front of the comparison half of the spectroscopic slit. The readings are thus compensated for fog density without calculation.

The numerical values of the densities measured on the photometer, or spectrophotometer, are now plotted on a special chart, a specimen one being shown in Fig. 7. The abscissa or base-line of this chart is a logarithmic scale, being, in fact, similar to the scale of a slide-rule repeated four times. This logarithmic scale is termed the inertia scale, the "inertia" of a plate being defined as the minimum amount of light action required to make a silver bromide grain developable. This definition of "inertia" is a more or less theoretical one, as it assumes a perfect plate. The top of the chart is laid off in exposure times, expressed in candle-meter seconds (C.M.S.), the Hurter and Driffield exposure unit, while the ordinate scale on the left of the chart represents densities (as measured) which are, according to H. and D.'s notation, opacity logarithms. When, now, the measured densities are plotted on the chart against the logarithms of the light intensities (exposures) which formed them, and the corresponding points on the chart joined together, the result is a curve having an f shape. This is termed the "characteristic curve" of the plate, not because it represents the characteristics of the particular emulsion being tested, but because Hurter and Driffield observed that the curves of all plates were of the same characteristic shape. The curves of photographic plates are always of an f shape, and if the plates have been correctly exposed these curves may be divided into three regions: the concave lower portion corresponding to under-exposure and hence called the under-exposure portion of the plate curve; the straight portion corresponding to the period of correct exposure, and the convex upper portion representing the period of overexposure. To these portions of the characteristic curve is sometimes added another; with excessively long exposure the upper portion of the curve bends downward again. This corresponds to the period of photographic reversal or solarization. This stage of exposure is never reached, however, in practical plate-speed testing, unless some freak emulsion is being experimented with.

Let us now consider more closely the exact action of light upon the photographic emulsion, as revealed by the "characteristic curve" of a plate. Suppose we compare the typical plate curve, shown in Fig. 7, to a flight of stairs. It will be seen that in the underexposure period (lower portion of the curve) the steps show a gradually increasing rise. Keeping in mind that each step upward means a growth in density, it will be seen that in this portion of the curve we have an absolutely false relationship; in this case proportionality exists between exposure and density, instead of between exposure and opacity. A negative, the gradations of which fall within this period, is of the soot and white-wash variety, and would be recognized as underexposed by a competent photographer. In such a case the shadows and nearly all of the half-tones are represented by almost bare glass, while the high-lights are of relatively extreme density.

In the period of correct exposure, however, the steps are all of equal rise, or, in other words, each doubling of the exposure is represented by an equal gain in density, so that a negative whose gradations fall within the period of correct exposure faithfully reproduces the light and shade of the subject photographed.

Coming now to the period of overexposure (upper portion of the plate curve), we see that it is characterized by a gradually decreasing rise in the steps, which finally becomes almost imperceptible. Here we see that the densities instead of increasing along with the exposure are steadily decreasing. A negative, the gradations of which fall within the period of overexposure, is equally as false, but in an opposite direction, as if its gradations fell within the period of underexposure.

When plate curves are correctly plotted from accurate measurements they tell us many things about the characteristics and properties of photographic emulsions. An important discovery of Hurter and Driffield was—that with prolonged development the increasing densities still bore the same ratio to one another, although the ratio of the opacities (which are considered by photographers) to one another did not remain constant. They termed this fact the law of "constant density ratios," and thereby proved in a scientific manner that the errors of under and overexposure cannot be corrected in developing the plate. There are many photographers and laboratory workers who believe that they can compensate for exposure errors in the developing operation, but a study of the Hurter and Driffield system supplies scientific proof that this is indeed not possible. They also noted, in their paper of 1890, that the ferricyanide and hypo (Farmer's) reducer totally altered the ratios existing between the densities of a negative.

The length of time to which a plate is developed determines the degree of contrast in the resulting negative, and in H. and D. sensitometry the degree of contrast is termed the gamma (γ) or development factor, being represented on the chart as the tangent of the angle which the straight-line portion of the characteristic curve makes with the exposure axis at ten times the inertia. This is indicated in Fig. 7 by the diagonal line in the right hand corner. Gamma 1, or normal contrast (a perfect negative), is represented by a line joining 100 on the inertia scale to 1 on the gamma scale. There is a limit to which the densities or contrast of a negative can grow with prolonged development, and this is termed gamma infinity (γ). It represents the maximum contrast attainable in a given plate.

Let us now return to the characteristic curve and see what more can be learned from it. It is found that the portion of the curve representing the period of correct exposure is always a straight line. The length of this straight-line portion of the characteristic curve varies, however, with different types of plates, and the longer the straight-line portion of the characteristic curve, the greater the latitude of the plate.

The straight-line portion of the plate-curve has further importance in sensitometry, for it enters into the calculation of plate-speed. By laying a ruler along the straight-line portion of the curve, and continuing it until it intersects the inertia scale (at the bottom of the chart), the inertia of the plate is thus obtained, and by dividing a certain number, or factor, by the value of the inertia the speed of the plate is secured. Hurter and Driffield used 34 as their factor, e.g., they divided 34 by their inertiæ values to obtain their plate-speeds; but this constant 34 only holds good when the exposing light is a standard candle. For different light sources another constant must be determined; in the case of acetylene lights, such as are now extensively used, a factor of 50 is generally employed. In other words, 50 divided by the inertia gives plate-speed. In the example given, Fig. 7, the inertia is .41 and the plate-speed is 34 ÷ .41, or 82.92.

In practical plate-speed testing it is absolutely essential that two strips of a given plate be exposed together; one strip is then developed for t1 and the other for t2, or, in other words, one strip is developed twice as long as the other. When the two series of densities, as measured on the photometer, are plotted on the same chart, Fig. 8, another manifestation of the theoretical correctness of Hurter and Driffield's system becomes apparent. It will be seen that although one test-plate was developed twice as long as the other, the two inertiæ coincide; both straight-line portions of the curves cut the inertia scale at the same place (.365), and the speed of the plate is 93.15. This shows that variation in the development time does not give variations in plate speeds as determined by the H. and D. method.

Amongst the many characteristics of photographic emulsions which are revealed in the practice of H. and D. sensitometry is another interesting case which we demonstrate here. This is the determination of whether or not there is free bromide in an emulsion. Some manufacturers prepare photographic plates with emulsions from which the excess potassium bromide has not been washed out, in order to confer better keeping qualities upon the plates; but, inasmuch as this bromide retards development, it has the effect, in the case of a short or normal development time, of rendering the plate slower than some other variety of plate of lower rated speed. Indeed, it frequently happens in focal-plane work that a slow plate containing no free bromide will develop a denser image than a rapid plate containing free bromide, if the time of development in both instances is equal and normal. The same thing may be true of a slow plate with a high development factor contrasted against a rapid plate which cannot be forced in development without chemical-fog setting in. From this it is seen that in the case of very short exposures (as in focal-plane work) the slowest plate may sometimes be, in effect, the fastest.

If, therefore, we wish to ascertain whether free bromide is present in an emulsion, we expose two strips of the same plate together for the same length of time, and develop one strip twice as long as the other. Suppose that on plotting the two curves on the same chart, Fig. 9, we find that they run parallel to each other and that they do not cut the inertia scale at the same point. This proves at once that there is free bromide in the emulsion. The presence of free bromide in an emulsion actually lowers the speed of a plate with a given time of development, so that the inertiæ obtained are wrong. The H, and D. method does not fail in this contingency, however, and we may still ascertain the true inertia and speed of the plate. The way to find the true inertia is to prolong the straight portion of curve No. 1 (Fig. 9) below the inertia scale, and from any point, A for instance, draw the ordinate A B. Bisect A B at C and join C D, the latter being the point where curve No. 1 cuts the inertia scale. Continue the straight portion of curve No. 2 until it cuts C D, and from E erect the perpendicular E F until it cuts the inertia scale. This point (0.2) is the true inertia value, and the speed of the plate is 170.

Another plate constant determined sensitometrically is the "velocity constant" of a plate, or the speed with which it develops, but the thorough elucidation of development velocity is somewhat beyond the scope of the present article.

The Hurter and Driffield system is a most important exposition of the theory of photographic action, and all photographers should be guided by its scientific teachings. A. S. C.

Seneca Camera Co. Distribute K-B Cine Camera

AFTER a trip of three months through the east, W. A. King, manager of the K-B Motion Picture Camera department of Barker Brothers, Los Angeles, has returned to the West Coast to resume his duties here, after making arrangements for the distribution of the K-B camera. The Seneca Camera Manufacturing Company of Rochester, New York, will be general distributors for the east. The Moving Picture Appliance Company of Boston will take care of the New England states' business, and the Bass Camera Company of Chicago will handle sales in the middle western states.

"Every place that our camera has been introduced," Manager W. A. King told a "News" representative, "the motion picture theatre managers have been quick to take advantage of it for the filming of local events for their theatres. It has proven ideal for producers to use in the projecting rooms of the cutters, and as it requires a very small amount of electricity, the combined projecting machine has been adopted by schools and colleges. My trip was highly satisfactory in every respect, and I am sure the matter of sales now being handled by some of the largest camera firms of the country will insure the speedy introduction of our camera in all sections."

Castle Square, Boston, Ready

With the idea of catering to the most exclusive trade in the city of Boston, the Castle Square theatre has been transformed into one of the most gorgeous and prettiest theatres in the Hub City.

The operating room, located on the ground floor at the expense of a large number of seats, was so constructed that it is entirely sound proof, and is a model of its kind.

The lens ports are on a direct line for the screen and the management is to be congratulated upon the amount of time and money expended to make perfect projection possible in a theatre that was first designed for other high class forms of amusement.

Mr. A. V. Birkholm, one of the leading projection men of New England, laid out the booth and installed two Type S Simplex Projectors and other apparatus.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Von Tilzer Resigns from Composers' Society

Harry Von Tilzer

HARRY VON TILZER does not feel that the Authors and Composers' Society will ever do him any real good, and has sent in his resignation. Von Tilzer knows the popular song business from every angle, so he is not drawing out as the result of any pique or hurriedly formed conclusion. When questioned about the matter the other day, Harry said:

"The society may be a wonderful thing for some publishers, but it will never do me any good. And by the time that the various officials and staff have been paid off every year I don't see how there will be anything left for popular publishers. If motion picture houses want to use scores from Broadway musical shows that their patrons never hear, why let them pay for the individual privilege, but I don't want that sort of thing to interfere with my general business."

Ben Bornstein, his professional manager, shared Harry's sentiments.

"Tell him about the letters we get from picture houses," Ben suggested.

Harry clipped the end of a cigar before replying.

"We get hundreds of letters from picture house pianists," Harry said, and Meyer Cohen, his chin resting in the palm of his hand, gave a slight nod. "Picture house pianists and leaders write in asking if there isn't some way that I could suggest so that they could play my stuff without getting into trouble. My numbers are so entirely different from the general run of songs, and so appropriate to light comedies and comedy-dramas, that they are willing to pay whatever I want for the orchestrations, but they can't play them without the exhibitor paying the tax.

"So you see I am not getting anything from the society and at the same time I am losing business by staying in it. If a man is willing to pay me for the orchestration that is all I ask. I don't know what other publishers are getting from the society, and if their business is being injured by remaining a member that is their own funeral. As far as I'm concerned I am not taking this stand because I fear competition, for I have been writing hits for twenty-five years, and am just as capable of pleasing the public today as I was when I first started in the business. Wherever music is played I want mine played, and the picture houses are welcome to it without paying any tax."

E. M. WICKES.

General Comments

WILLIAM JEROME has just finished a new war song with Seymour Furth, called, "When the Yanks Come Marching Home," and it looks like it will give "Over There" a stiff run for the big hit of the house. Those who have heard the number think it is the best lyric that Jerome has turned out in years. As usual, Jerome does not rave about it, but merely says he thinks it gill go over, there and everywhere.

Jerome has a good manager in James Troupe, who used to be manager for Cohan and Harris's theatrical productions. Mr. Troupe knows the show business from Maine to the coast and has a host of friends that are boosting his publications all over the big and little time circuits.

Ray Walker and Addison Burkhardt have written a song about the Liberty Bond. For a bond number it certainly has punch, and should be instrumental in selling bonds to some of the apathetic individuals who have not learned how to untie their purse strings. Ray Sherwood and Max Burkhardt are out every night plugging the song in conjunction with loan committees. The writers promise to use all the royalty they get from the song in buying Liberty Bonds, and Walker has already purchased two, in addition to having sold a dozen to his friends.

Jack Mahoney bought a Liberty Bond, the kind that is punched every week, and when asked if he intended to give it to his little boy, Jackie, Mahoney smiled:

"Not on your life. Jackie has a conductor's punch he found and if he got hold of the slip he'd have it filled with holes in five minutes."

C. Arthur Pfeiffer, Quincy, Ill., has a corking good number in "We're Going Over," and although he is far away from the musical center he is getting any number of calls from performers for it. He expects to see it on the phonograph records in the very near future.

Mabel Whaley's number are doing a great deal towards keeping The Red Star Publishing Company on the musical map. She is one of the few women composers who know the art of writing the kind of music that will appeal to the general public.

"Just Send Me Away with a Smile," Al. Piantadosi's big hit, which he calls "flop" number one, looks as if it will do even better than the "Sunshine of Your Smile." If Al. can keep up the pace that he has cut out for himself he will be one of the big guns in the music business before very long, which means that he will be selling close on to a million dollars' worth of music every year. He evidently knows that business as well as the musical end of the game, which is absolutely necessary these days.

For some time Joe McCarthy and Fred Fischer have been working like beavers, and the result is that wherever yon go you will hear some one singing or whistling, "They Go Wild, Simply Wild Over Me." It is a great song for moving picture comedy-dramas.

The other night, during the running of a new feature, the orchestra in a vaudeville house played seven popular numbers, and repeated the chorus of one song nine times. During most of the time a number of the persons in the audience continued to hum the songs being played.

Fred Vandersloot has had a war version written for "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are at Home," which carries a great deal of sentiment and truth for the soldiers and sailors on duty. From now on Vandersloot intends to be in the front rank with his popular numbers, and as his old college chum, Fred Forster, has a Liberty Bond song, they the going to give each other a race.

Judging from the sales the public does not appear to be able to get hold of enough war songs, but if it does not it will not be Leo Feist's fault, for he is reported to have something like twenty new war songs ready for early release.

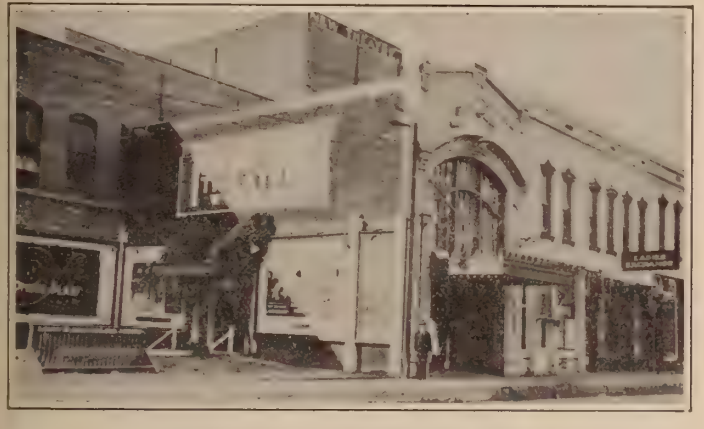
THEATRES WORTH WHILE



Architect's Drawing of Side Walls and Interior Photograph of New Fillmore Theatre, San Francisco

New Theatre Starts Eighth Successful Year

ONE of the most enterprising exhibitors in the country, whose work has been often mentioned in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is C. A. Lick, manager of the New theatre, Fort Smith, Ark. His management and his theatre prove that showmen in the smaller cities can make relatively as great successes as exhibitors in the metropolis.

The New theatre is celebrating the beginning of its seventh year, having been first opened in October, 1911.

The house occupies a plot 75 by 90 feet at the corner of Tenth and Garrison streets, in the centre of the city. It is constructed of brick, concrete and terra cotta, the interior being plain, but attractive. The house has a seating capacity of 1,200.

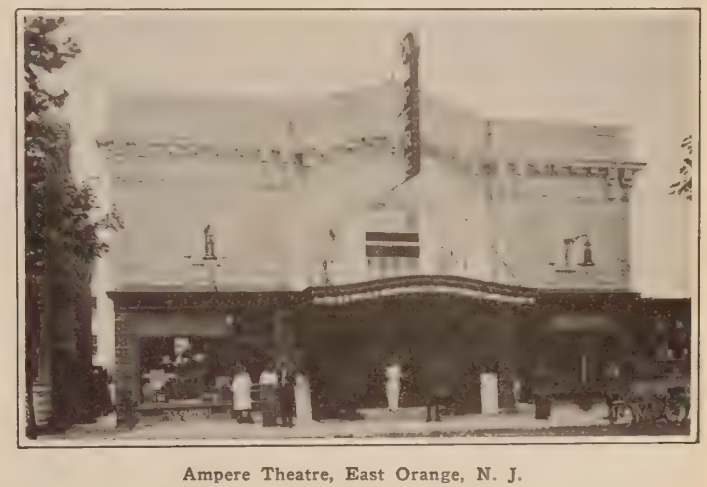
Powers machines are used, the throw being 65 feet to a dull finish screen. The projection room is equipped with a mercury rectifier. Seats were made by the American, and the Typhoon ventilating system is used.



Music is furnished by an excellent orchestra and considerable attention is paid to this department. The program of pictures is changed every two days, eight reels being shown at each of the five daily shows. Admission ranges from 5 to 20 cents, both afternoon and evening.

Mr. Lick is a great believer in advertising and uses both newspapers and billboards. In addition he devotes a great deal of though to special stunts and very frequently puts over ideas that attract the attention of the whole industry.

Ampere, East Orange House, Plans Changes

SO successful has been the record of the Ampere theatre, East Orange, N. J., that the owner, A. J. Van Bueren, is considering enlarging the house so as to seat 750 people and installing complete new equipment, including chairs and a small organ. The house now seats 450 and music is furnished by violin and piano.

The Ampere is built of concrete throughout and occupies a plot 50 by 150 feet. It is equipped with the Typhoon ventilating system and is heated by steam. Two Powers 6-A machines throw the pictures 55 feet to a silver fibre screen. The theatre has just ordered a supply of Menger and Ringe frames, which will be used in a lobby 20 feet square.

Four shows are given each day, the program consisting of eight reels. Universal Metro-Drew comedies and Paramount Pictograph and Arbuckle comedies are used for the shorter pictures, and Artcraft, Paramount, Vitagraph, Fox, Triangle and Perfection pictures and state rights are used as the features. Ten cents is the afternoon admission price, with 15 cents in the evening. The theatre advertises through attractive programs, giving the bill for the week, which are delivered through the house mailing list. Newspaper advertising is also used.

Although the musical facilities are somewhat limited now, special music is furnished with each picture and the overtures are printed on the programs.

The Ampere is under the able management of Mercer Beasley, who has experience in both the selling and exhibiting end of the business. When he took charge of the East Orange house he made a number of changes, one of his insistences being that proper music should be provided with each picture. He gives close personal attention to the house and has scored a big success.

Typhoon Ventilating System at Rivoli

RIVOLI theatre, the new house at Forty-ninth street and Broadway, which will be under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto, has adopted the Typhoon cooling and ventilating system and this plant is now in place. This comprises a set of four mammoth fans of the same type that has been used so successfully in the Rialto for the past two years for cooling the house in summer.

The Rivoli theatre will in cold weather be heated in a particularly efficient and economical manner—and here, too, a Typhoon system plays its part. On the roof will be placed a set of Vento Heat coils, through which a smaller Typhoon equipment will draw fresh air. The air is heated to the proper temperature as it passes through the coils, and in this way a steady circulation of fresh, warm air is maintained throughout the house.

A Typhoon equipment in the basement, to draw the heated air down, completes a perfect heating and ventilating system.

Nicholas Power Co. Gets Big Paris Order

THE Export Department of the Nicholas Power Company reports shipment of 75 of their "Excelite" incandescent equipments to Paris, France. Before the order was placed an exhaustive test was made by projection engineers, who attested the superiority and economy of the "Excelite" Cameragraph. The machines have been shipped to the National War Council of the Y. M. C. A. at Paris.

The Power Company further reports a very large number of installations of the Cameragraph No. 6A in governmental work, the most interesting of the recent installations being Aviation School, Mineola, L. I.; Camp Merritt, Tenafly, N. J.; Camp Taylor, Louisville, Ky.; U. S. Naval Training Station, Pelham Park, New York City, and Fort Mott, Salem, N. J. The largest theatrical installation made by the Power Company during the past week has been made in the Lyric theatre, Broadway and Forty-second street, New York City, with 6B Cameragraphs.

Automatic Prepares Tax Law Digest

WITH exhibitors everywhere seeking a booklet that will show at a glance the provision of the new tax law as applied to motion pictures, the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, 1735 Broadway, has stepped into the breach. This booklet will be sent free to any reader of the NEWS who addresses the Automatic.

The booklet tells in clear, brief and simple form what the tax is, how it is to be collected, and how the exhibitor can best conform to the regulations without being in danger of having to pay more than he ought to, or having to give up much of his time and his records to government inspectors looking for tax deficiencies.

Fabrikoid Offered as Leather Saver

ATTENTION of theatre managers and builders of new houses is being called to fabrikoid by the Du Pont Fabrikoid Company as a material for upholstery which is not effected by the high price of leather, due to the war. The company points out that by using this material motion picture proprietors can have the best of upholstery and still not enter the field in competition with the government which needs all the leather that it can get. Fabrikoid is a leather substitute which wears for years and is said to show nothing of the shabbiness of split leather. It is a preparation which is manufactured with a basis of strong, tightly woven cotton cloth into which the outside coating penetrates so that the cloth and coating become one.

Simplex Projectors in New York Camp

The 23rd N. Y. Regiment have installed a Simplex Projector with which to while away their spare time while at Spartansburg and keep in touch with things at home through the news weeklies.

Uncle Sam's sailor boys have built a club house at the Newport Training Station and in order to make it complete, a public spirited citizen has donated a Simplex Projector.

ARKANSAS

J. E. Lancaster of the Wynne contemplates erecting a modern motion picture house at Wynne in the near future.

CALIFORNIA

Plans have been prepared and the contract let for a brick motion picture theatre projected by J. O. Tabor at Hollywood Boulevard and Wilcox avenue, Los Angeles. The structure will be 50 x 160 in size, and in addition to the theatre will contain two stores. Frank L. Meline is in charge of the work.

Miller's new theatre, now in course of erection at Ninth and Main streets, Los Angeles, is to cost in the neighborhood of $100,000, according to the estimate of Col. J. B. Lankersheim, the architect.

Miss Aline Barnsdall is preparing to erect a theatre in Los Angeles for the silent and spoken drama. This theatre will have a seating capacity of at least 1000, will be located in the heart of the retail business district, if a lease can be secured at fair terms on property she has in view, and will be built with the idea of adaptability to all kinds of theatrical attractions—for Miss Barnsdall's plans contemplate a company that will travel on the coast and spend only a part of the year here. It is her purpose, if it be found practicable, to make Los Angeles the winter headquarters and Seattle the summer home of the company.

CONNECTICUT

Plans are being drawn by Architect A. C. Kelley for alterations to a moving picture theatre in Milford for Mrs. Gill of that place. The plans will be ready for figures shortly.

IDAHO

Probabilities are that no further work will be done on the new Metropolitan theatre at Wallace until next spring. At least this is the situation according to men who are interested in the new enterprise. The foundation is in, and everything is in readiness for the brickwork, and so the whole matter will likely rest till spring. The reason for the delay lies in the fact as reported, that bids did not come anywhere near the estimates of the architects who drew the plans. When the plans were ordered, acording to men interested in the new enterprise, the architect was advised that there was $60,000 to put into the building, and that the cost of the structure was not to exceed that amount. When bids were opened the shareholders in the new company were amazed. The bids run up to practically twice the amount of the estimate. In fact, the bids made hovered around the $110,000 notch in a bunch.

The Liberty theatre at Coeur d'Alene opened a few days ago after having undergone a thorough change, in the way of improvements, and according to B. L. Daniels of Kellogg, the new proprietor, is now practically fireproof. The chairs are practically new and are leather-seated. The stage has been entirely rebuilt, new lighting fixtures have been installed, the floor of the foyer has been tiled, and, perhaps the most important of all, two new picture machines, among the best that are manufactured, have been installed, making the house very complete for the purposes intended.

ILLINOIS

Kilbourne has a new motion picture theatre. The outfit of the old Gem Theatre has been transferred to new hands and is being installed in the Ketchum Building. It is expected that everything will be in readiness for opening in a few days. A portable stage and scenery will be installed later and every effort will be made by the management to give the people of that community the best of service.

The Joy theatre, located in the Witt Building, on East Wood street, Paris, opened its doors to the public on Oct. 20. The house is under the management of Virgil La Vern, who has had twelve years' experience in the motion picture business and who understands the wants of the people.

A new motion picture theatre on Chicago's West Side is the Fairfield, in course of construction at 2737-45 West Twenty-second stret, between Fairfield and California avenues. In addition to the theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 1,000, the building will contain four stores and six offices. It is being erected by Edward Kounovsky and its cost is placed at $91,000. C. C. Mitchell & Co. have underwritten a bond issue of $57,500 at 6 per cent. on the property.

Pete Pinkleman, owner of four of the leading motion picture theatres at Quincy, is having plans prepared for another to be erected in the spring.

The Imperial theatre, recently opened at 236 North Main street, Jacksonville, under the management of Chase M. Harrison, opened most successfully, patrons being turned away at both performances.

INDIANA

The Gayety theatre, located on East Washington street near New Jersey street, Indianapolis, has been taken over by the Lenwood Amusement Company, now operating the Rialto and Lenwood theatres, and will be completely remodeled and redecorated.

Business men of Lafayette are co-operating in the organization of a stock company, which will build a new $125,000 theatre in that city. Mayor Bauer, Luke H. Balfe, Henry W. Marshall and others are pushing the enterprise, which seems most promising. A splendid spirit is being manifest and the Lafayette Life Insurance Company is pledged to take practically half of the stock. Mrs. William F. Fry and Eldon Lewis are among those who have made it possible to carry the project to success by offering leases on land that is needed for the structure. The ground faces Sixth street for 80 feet and is 150 feet deep. The new theatre that is planned will seat 1,600 peope, and beside showing pictures will be capable of showing the best of dramas and musical shows.

The Auditorium theatre at Connersville, which has been dark for fifty days and nights, has been reopened after being completely remodeled so as to make it one of the most modern and up-to-date photoplay houses in Indiana. Joseph Schilling is manager of the theatre, which is owned by the order of Eagles.

Extensive improvements, costing $35,000, are to be made in the Luna theatre at Lafayette. These include the enlargement of seating capacity by the construction of a balcony, making it possible for 1,250 people to attend the popular photoplay house at each performance. The decorations alone will cost several hundred dollars.

The Victoria theatre at Lafayette also is to be remodeled. It was purchased recently by F. J. Watson of Jackson, Mich., who is in Lafayette planning the improvements.

Clyde Quimby, owner of the Jefferson theatre at Ft. Wayne, has closed a long-term lease on the Strand theatre and expects to open the latter place as a moving picture house in the near future. The Jefferson is one of the best photoplay houses in the state, and Mr. Quimby announces that the new Strand will be operated on the same plan as his other theatre.

Bids will be received soon for a new theatre at Terre Haute. F. H. Gruneberg, president of the Bankers and Merchants Theatre Company of that city, has the plans ready for the theatre, which will be erected at Eighth street and Wabash avenue.

The new Castle theatre at South Bend has been opened. Handsome electric fixtures, silk hangings and an attractive decorative scheme adds much to the pleasing appearance of the auditorium. A new fibre screen had been installed. This is surrounded by a bas relief plaster moulding that sets it off nicely. A solid concrete wall surrounds the orchestra pit and that is covered with palms and flowers.

The Colonial theatre, at Winchester, leased by Messrs. Lightner and George Brothers for a term of years, having undergone extensive repairs and alterations, was opened last week, and is now regarded as one of Winchester's finest motion picture houses.

IOWA

Faith in amusement of the men at Camp Dodge as a business venture was illustrated by the subscription of the $50,000 worth of stock in the Cantonment Amusement Company, articles for which were filed within two hours of the time the plans were completed for the proposition.

The company will erect and operate a motion picture house in Herrold upon the property owned by Gorman Bros. and Snyder Bros. The building will be 57 by 125 feet, will have an ornate electrically lighted canopy over the entrance, and two storerooms in the front. The officers and directors of the new corporation are: President, C. C. Deering; vice-president, Axel Nelson; secretary, Burt German; treasurer, C. F. Frazier; directors, John A. Elliott, W. P. Bair and Fred German.

The house will have a seating capacity of 1,500. An experienced moving picture man has already been secured to manage the theatre.

KENTUCKY

The Colonial theatre, Winchester, which has been closed for several months, was reopened recently under the management of the Colonial Theatre Company. They will show regularly each afternoon and night.

LOUISIANA

Active, visible operations have commenced upon the new Liberty theatre, which is the New Orleans project under the direction of the Boehringer Amusement Company. This theatre is being erected in St. Charles street adjacent to the Orpheum theatre, and Manager Boehringer promises that it will be one of the most pretentious motion picture theatres in the entire South when it is completed. No expense on appliances will be spared to make it a model theater in every respect. The work is being pushed with feverish desire on the part of the contractors to finish the theatre at the earliest possible moment consistent with good construction.

MAINE

Work on the new theatre building at Waterville is once again well under way. Lack of material and inability to secure same hampered the contractors considerably for a time, but progress is now being made and every endeavor will be used to bring the theatre's construction to a speedy conclusion.

MARYLAND

It is generally rumored that a motion picture theatre will replace the Trolley Company's offices in the Antietam Fire Company's building on Summit avenue, Hagerstown, although no definite particulars are yet available.

The Homewod Amusement Company, Edward C. Sandell, manager, incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000, has acquired part of the old Casino property on North avenue, near Charles street, Baltimore, and will erect a new Homewood theatre on it.

The Parkway Theatre Company have plans for the erection of a new motion picture theatre at Charles street and Lafayette avenue, Baltimore.

MASSACHUSETTS

The walls are up to the roof on the motion picture theatre at 705-711 Washington and South streets, Rosindale, for C. J. Gorman Amusement Enterprises, 294 Washington street, Boston.

A new motion picture theatre is being erected in Worcester by James Greeko.

The new Strand theatre, in Lowell, has recently been opened by Louis B. Mayer.

The Park theatre, Lynn, the newest addition to the "Shoe City's" amusement circles, opened its doors October 18 with the house filled to capacity. The Park was formerly the Lynn theatre, which was entirely remodeled and rebuilt. Its seating capacity is 1,600 and the house is luxuriously furnished throughout. It is also uniquely designed, both as regards interior and exterior. The theatre is incorporated for $5,000. Simon Frankel of Lynn, has been elected president; Max L. Bixby of Salem, treasurer, and Robert M. Heller of Salem, clerk.

The reopening of the Castle Square theatre, Boston, is announced for Monday, October 29. The policy that will prevail will be the presentation of motion pictures under ideal conditions in conjunction with artstic musical programs by accomplished vocalists and players.

Members of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Massachusetts are at Camp Devens in Ayer arranging for a theatre to be erected in the cantonment. The cost will be about $10,000.

MICHIGAN

The Willard theatre, Michigan City, opened Sunday, Sept. 2, under the new management of J. H. Duvall, who recently purchased this theatre. Matinees will be given on Sundays. The theatre will be opened on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays.

MINNESOTA

The United Theatre Company is building a new theatre in Austin, to cost $45,000. It will have all up to date features. The United Theatre Company is incorporated under the laws of South Dakota and has theatres in Owatonna, Willmar, Sandstone, Hutchinson and Cambridge, all good Minnesota towns. The company will also build a theatre in Grand Forks, N. D.

C. F. Hansen has just opened the new Strand theatre in Warren, Minn. The theatre is new, decorated after the plan used in the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, and thoroughly equipped.

MISSOURI

A new motion picture theatre, the Liberty theatre, is to be erected on part of the site of what was the old Commercial block, at the southwest corner of Eleventh and Main streets, Kansas City. The theatre building will be at 1104-06 Main street and will be just south of the eight story mercantile building being erected on the immediate corner.

The new theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,200. It is being erected by the Overland Amusement Company, controlled by Samuel Harding and David Harding of Omaha.

The building, which is fireproof, will have a front entirely in polychrome terra cotta, rendered in ivory, browns and purples, with a red tile roof. The latest ideas in theatre construction have been incorporated by the architect, Frederic E. McIlvain. The building is being erected under the supervision of Hughes Bryant.

NEBRASKA

The new Dean theatre, at York, resplendent in new paint and decorations, remodeled to meet the better needs of the public and better equipped in every way to cater to the films crowds, will be opened to the public some time next week. The opening date had been set for Saturday of this week but it was found that the building would not be ready for occupancy then so a later date was necessarily made.

NEW YORK

Announcement was made yesterday that the Lyric theatre, Endicott's new motion picture house, now under construction at Johnson City, will be opened to the public early in November. According to Benjamin Dittrich, manager of the theatre, it may be possible to give the first performance on November 1.

George Wilkins, of Kinderhook, builder and contractor, has taken the contract to remodel Samuel Wilson's cafe, on Main street, Valatie, to a moving picture theatre

According to the announcement of a well known local real estate man of Lansingburgh the ruins of Thomas' livery stable will be razed within a short time and a modern moving picture theatre, one with a seating capacity of 1,000 people or more, will be erected on the site. The transaction of the site is now under way and in all probability the deal will be closed by the early part of next week. A local man is to be connected with the theatre company.

NORTH CAROLINA

The Charlotte Cantonment Company, of Charlotte, has been incorporated for the purpose of erecting five new motion picture theatres near Camp Green and a miniature carnival city.

OHIO

Lorain's Board of Education voted a few days ago to install a motion picture machine in the high school auditorium for the portrayal of educational films. Superintendent Boone says: "This is the day and age when motion pictures may be aptly used to impart knowledge and I think a machine will be of great value to the high schools in this regard."

Newest ventures in the motion picture field at Cleveland include the project of A. Silberberg, who is building a $45,000 structure. The theatre will be one story high and occupy a plot 38 by 154 feet, to seat about 650 persons.

Charles H. Williams has taken a lease from August Kausek on the motion picture theatre at St. Clair avenue and East Sixty-second street. The lease is for seven years at a rental of $2,400.

S. L. Rothapfel, of New York City, is about to construct a motion picture theatre at Urbana, to seat 3,000 persons. Accommodations are being made in the construction plans for an orchestra of 200 pieces. Further particulars will be announced later.

OKLAHOMA

H. C. Brice, proprietor of the Standard theatre at Oklahoma City, has leased a lot 140x25, and will erect a three-story building thereon, a part of which will be devoted to motion pictures. The building will be constructed of stone front and brick walls. The theatre will be located on the lower floor and will have a unique marble tile entrance, plate glass front and electric elevators running to all floors. The theatre will be strictly modern and up to date, and will be completed and ready for opening by the first of the year.

ONTARIO

The new Allen theatre, of Toronto, is rapidly nearing completion and will throw open its doors to the public in a few weeks, if present plans carry. Without question this theatre, which occupies a wonderful site in the downtown district of one of Canada's largest cities, Toronto, will be the theatre de luxe of the Dominion. In keeping with the high policy that has already been set by the Allen Brothers, contracts have just been closed with Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, for the Screen Magazine to be shown in this house for a period of one year.

PENNSYLVANIA

A new theatre is being erected at Fourth street and Edgmont avenue, Chester, by the Keith interests.

Albert Dahl has the contract to erect a motion picture theatre at Ellwood City for Frank Biordi.

A $15,000 motion picture theatre will be erected on Idaho street, Farrell, by Herman Stahl.

The First National Bank of Irvona has plans for a new $15,000 motion picture theatre to be erected at Irvona.

John Crossett will lease a store building on McKean street, Kittanning, and open it as a moving picture theatre.

G. L. Higgins and L. J. Chamberlain are erecting two new motion picture theatres at Shamokin.

TENNESSEE

The newly decorated and vastly improved Lyric theatre at Chattanooga opened a few days ago under the Loew regime. Current events are shown, a feature photoplay and a comedy film. The Loew circuit now embraces hundreds of houses, including some of the largest in the East, which means that many feature attractions can be brought to Chattanooga that could not otherwise be secured.

Marcus Loew will soon begin the construction of a theatre in Memphis that will cost between $500,000 and $700,000. The new theatre will have a larger seating capacity than any theatre in the South.

E. A. Schiller, Southern manager of the Loew circuit, arrived in Memphis this morning for a conference with officials regarding the erection of the new theatre.

Schiller says that when the new theatre is completed it will compare favorably with any theatre in the country.

The site for the new building has been practically decided upon. However, officials will not announce the location until the deal has been closed. It will be only a short time until actual construction starts on the new building, according to Manager Schiller.

Schiller is very bitter in his denunciation of the Sunday closing order. He says it is not the mercenary point that bothers him, but that he is worried by protests from every direction over the ban being placed on Sunday amusements.

He says if anyone thinks the theatres wish to run on Sunday merely to add to their profits, they can investigate and see where Loew's has donated his Sunday receipts to charity.

TEXAS

Work will begin at an early date on the Watt property in Waco, located at the northwest corner of Franklin and Fifth streets, and which has been leased for a term of two years by the Parker Amusement Company.

Plans for the building to be erected have already been accepted. The excavation made some time ago will furnish an ideal basement, which will be fitted up to accommodate some of the amusement features handled by the Parker people, while a structure will also be erected above the ground. The entire Watt tract, which covers half a block of ground on Fifth street and for a still greater distance on Franklin, will be utilized.

W. H. Coon, proprietor of the Mission theatre in Amarillo, has bought the C. A. Bowron lot on Broadway in Plainview, paying $6,700 for it, and it has let the contract for the erection of a two-story brick building to cost $10,000, to be used as a motion picture show, to be known as The Mission. It will be modern in every way, and will be under the management of Robert N. Smith, now manager of the Mae I theatre.

WISCONSIN

The Diamond theatre, Superior's newest moving picture house, opened a few days ago at 707 Tower avenue in the location that was formerly ocupied by the Rex theatre. It adds to the already fine list of local play houses and will show pictures that are nothing but the best. The Diamond is owned by Blackmore Brothers of Duluth, who also operate a theatre in that city under the same name.

Wilkes-Barre Operators True Progressives

Fred J. Alles, chief operator, Orpheum theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., sends in a list of fourteen new members of the National Anti-Misframe League, and remarks as follows:

"As a member of the N. A. M. F. L. and as a very good recruiting officer, enclosed find the names of a few men of Local 325, I. A. T. S. E. Wilkes-Barre, Pa., is still on the map, even if we are a little slow in coming, but here they are and all through my encouragement.

"All are good men and promise to live up to the rules of the league. Quite a few of the boys said it wasn't necessary for them to join the league, as they always did, and always will, remove defective sprocket holes and bad patches (also misframes—Ed.), all of which goes to show that our boys of Wilkes-Barre are the goods."

In Reply: Our Wilkes-Barre correspondent has certainly put his city prominently on the map as a Mecca of "live-wire" operators, and a healthy place for reels of film.

His energy in rounding up his fellow operators for league membership is to be commended, and we are of the opinion that if there are any operators left in Wilkes-Barre who have not agreed to uphold the league pledge, our hustling correspondent, Mr. Alles, will be sure to "get them."

It is distinctly to the credit of the Wilkes-Barre boys that they were, even before joining the N. A. M. F. L., in the habit of putting their films in proper condition before trying them out on the audience.

THE WILLIAMS PRINTING COMPANY, NEW YORK

Simplex

You remember, don't you, that nineteen-year-old Projector we showed you last week?

As we pointed out, that Machine possessed many features that have since become standard; but naturally, it had its weaknesses and shortcomings.

Cannock and Porter could have eliminated these as experience pointed them out; they could have added new features, one by one, as their need developed.

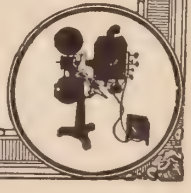
But the result would have been a patched-up Machine which didn't look as if it had really been designed. It would have looked as if it "just grew," like Topsy, in Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Nothing of the kind would do for these experts!

They took all the experience gathered, all the knowledge developed since their pioneer days, 'way back in the last century—

—and designed a Machine with not a gear in sight, a Machine that's as much of a feast to the eyes of a mechanic as the picture it projects is a feast to the eyes of picture fans—

—a Machine that every Operator can look upon and say "Now I've got the very best tool that can be placed in my hands; I can now project an unsurpassable picture"—



—the Machine that is the choice of practically every Exhibitor of note, as being the only one that can lead to success.

For the screen is the vital spot.
It is how you put there what you put there that decides either for success or for failure.

To install the Simplex is wise. It projects pictures kind to the eyes.

Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark"

From the story by John B. Ritchie

Predictions Fulfilled

In the Morning Telegraph of Sunday, October 21, we said: "Watch for the reviews in tomorrow's papers. We predict that they will tell the old, old story of another Paramount winner."

The reviews below justify our prediction.

Herald (New York)

Thos. H. Ince presented Miss Dorothy Dalton in a photographic version of "The Price Mark" by John B. Ritchie, in he Rialto Theatre yesterday. Miss Dalton was picturized with William Conlin and Thurston Hall in a series of emotional scenes, which were played with stirring realism. One of these was a struggle with Mr. Conlin, which was reminiscent of Baron Scarpia's last moments with La Tosca. This climax took place in a large studio apartment, and many of the ornaments and much of the bric-a-brac were destroyed in the struggle.

Tribune (New York)

Anyone who likes to speculate on the two-men-and-a-woman problem will enjoy "The Price Mark," and it is interestingly presented. Dorothy Dalton has some excellent moments as Paula Lee, the heroine who was more sinned against than sinning, and she looks handsomer than we have ever seen her look before. The picture is beautifully staged and the Eastern scenes are particularly attractive.

Thos. H. Ince Production

It requires no gift of prophesy to predict a Paramount winner. Success for Paramount and Paramount Exhibitors is foreordained because all the elements of success are combined in every Paramount production.

BILLIE BURKE

By Arrangement with F. Ziegfeld Jr

"IN ARMS AND THE GIRL"

BY GRANT STEWART and ROBERT BAKER
DIRECTED BY JOSEPH KAUFMAN

Just tell your people that dainty Billie Burke is in a story of the Belgian outrage. Ambassador Gerard's articles about this event are being read by millions of people all over the country and all of them will want to see it brought to life. It's up to you to connect up to this timely coincidence and make it pay.

NEW YORK "SUN"

At the Strand, Billie Burke defied the whole German army in the film adaptation of "Arms and the Girl," playing the part created by Fay Bainter on the stage with all the charm one naturally demands from a young American girl in Belgium who is pitting her wits against all the martial mustaches of the Teuton General Staff. Her efforts to aid the escape of a young countryman caught in the German jam at the start of the war, principally by the expedient of marrying the stranger on the spot, prove even more thrilling than when they were done audibly.

NEW YORK "MORNING TELEGRAPH"

In this play Miss Burke is seen as an American girl stranded in Belgium at the opening of the present war. She innocently exchanges her passport with a Russian girl, who proves to be a spy, and in consequence meets with numerous thrilling experiences at the hands of the Germans, who seize the town and arrest her and the young American, for complicity. "Arms and the Girl" is an interesting and well constructed play and Miss Burke has a role well suited to her histrionic capabilities."

None of the sordid side of war. A huge "German" army is there, but only as a punching bag for Billie Burke's quick-witted jabs. Get "more time."

And They Call This The "Greatest Of Goldwyn's Achievements"

JANE COWL, beautiful, popular and powerful star, with her assured following throughout America, scored a nation-wide success in her first Goldwyn Picture.

"The Spreading Dawn," a story by Basil King, already known to millions through its publication in the Saturday Evening Post, provided Miss Cowl with a play that still further increased her drawing power.

So great was the dramatic, the artistic, the technical merit of this production that in every part of the country it played to capacity audiences and is repeating its record this week—being hailed by critics everywhere as Goldwyn's greatest production.

The play that touches a Convict's heart will touch the heart of the world

Read this letter from Sing Sing about

"Mother"

Dear Mr. Tucker:-

We projected George Loane Tucker's screen version of "Mother" last evening and about 1200 men viewed this remarkable visualization of the sweetest story in the world.

"Mother" is a picture possessing one essential, outstanding feature which will insure its success wherever shown; sustained human interest and once seen will not be easily forgotten.

Elisabeth Risdon's wonderful characterization of the quaint, charming lovable mother completely won all our hearts, carrying us back down through the years to Home and Mother, with the wisdom of the ages in her quiet, passionless eyes.

Facing all things with courage and patience, making the countless little sacrifices for her boy's happiness that only a "mother" could make. She was your "Mother" – my "Mother" – our "Mother" – and the fires of desire to be fine and clean and decent, rekindled and burned anew within most of our hearts.

I want to thank you for your courtesy and kindness in making it possible for us to show this extraordinary picture to the men here and although many of us have strayed afar and missed the path, we cannot help but being better men if we only heed the message which "Mother" brought to us all.

With very best wishes and kindest regards, we are,

Yours very truly,

E. J. Meagher,

PARALTA PLAYS

In announcing to the exhibitor that these, the most important unattached productions in the market, will be issued at once by the W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION, I wish to add one word:

It was not alone the high quality of the Paralta plays, such as "A Man's Man," with Mr. J. Warren Kerrigan, "Mme. Who?" with Miss Bessie Barriscale, and the pictures in which Mr. Henry B. Walthal will appear, that induced me to enter into a contract with Paralta Plays, Inc.

I was attracted still more by the thoroughness of Paralta's organization, and the seriousness of its intentions. In few other products with whose distribution I have been connected has there been, prior to releasement, such an investment of capital, such a gathering of the elements of successful production, such intentions and ideals, as are expressed by Paralta and its officials.

It is but natural that similar elements with high ideals in the exhibition and other fields should join with me when they understand, as the officials of Paralta Plays, Inc., understand, my own intentions and the far-reaching plans which I shall offer to the industry.

The record price! Paid $10,000 for Greater New York in competition with three other buyers!

Just as we hear of the "death of state rights" for the steenth time, four determined buyers make liberal offers for the rights of "Who's Your Neighbor?" in the Greater New York territory. One of them bid $10,000, and got the picture. After he had signed on the dotted line, he said the reason for his unusual bid was his unusual confidence in the picture and because he had been assured a single "circuit booking" that would guarantee the safety of his investment. The man was B. H. Mills of the Elk Photoplays, 126 W. 46th St., New York.

The Buyers of "Joan the Woman" and "The Whip" for Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma make a third purchase—"WHO'S YOUR NEIGHBOR?"

Yes, the Yale Photoplay Company, 922 Oak Street, Kansas City, Mo., decided that "Who's Your Neighbor?" was their sort of a puller. This firm, as their ownership of "Joan" and "The Whip" must prove, will only handle a BIG picture. Exhibitors in their territory know their "peculiarity" in this respect. The result is that exhibitors out there go to the Yale for real features—which "Who's Your Neighbor?" indisputably is.

9 Territories closed in a single week! Isn't that a sales record?

Of course, it is—and of course "WHO'S YOUR NEIGHBOR?" stands alone this week in this sales achievement. Here are the territories, nine—count 'em—NINE: Illinois, Indiana, Southern Wisconsin,

(to FRANK ZAMBRINO, Unit y Photoplays Co., Chicago)

Greater New York, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma! Good enough? Do you believe now that our winter sales campaign is on in earnest? That the whole country is going—going—go—THAT YOU'D BETTER BUY THE STATE YOU WANT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE? If you are a real showman, if you can play a real feature like a show, every minute you spend hesitating about making us a bid is a priceless minute wasted.

THE PRODUCTION—by S. Rankin Drew.
THE STORY—by Willard Mack.
THE CAST—Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent, Anders Randolf.
THE PUBLICITY—Just what you'd expect on the most unusual story filmed this year.

now appearing in

20 THE SATURDAY EVENING POST October 27, 1917

THE FALSE FACES

A CHAPTER FROM THE HISTORY OF THE LONE WOLF

By Louis Joseph Vance

(to be exhibited in January)

Louis Joseph Vance

has written his most powerful melodrama in his sequel to "The Lone Wolf."

Mr. Vance's fascinating hero makes his return as a spy behind the German lines. The story, moving with tense speed, rapidly carries him through an amazing series of adventures on the Flanders battlefield and in a Teuton submarine. The trench scenes and moments on a death-dealing U-Boat will form a picturesque background for the thrilling action.

The sequel has already attracted wide attention. It has been pronounced to be far swifter and more unusual of plot than its predecessor. It will make a more compelling film story than "The Lone Wolf" because Mr. Vance wrote the new story with the screen adaptation in mind.

The Greatest Knock-out in Pictures

The Finger of Justice

Dealing with a Subject that Is of Vital Interest to the Entire Country

This picture is based upon the vice-crusade of San Francisco, which has been the greatest movement for social reform and the most damning weapon ever launched against commercialized vice. The clean-up of San Francisco by the Rev. Paul Smith has been the most talked-of campaign ever known, and has received more newspaper comment than any similar movement.

Rev. Smith, knowing the power of the screen, has produced the greatest and most dramatic-true-to-life picture, which depicts an evil existing in every city.

The production of this picture has been of such great interest that newspapers have commented on it, and editorials have been written about it throughout the entire country. Never before has a minister turned to the screen and never in the history of picture production has the subject of commercialized vice been so forcibly dealt with.

This eight-reel feature will be the biggest box-office winner that exhibitors in your states can book. The first two nights of the initial run of the picture in San Francisco has been sold five days before the opening, with prices at twenty-five and fifty cents.

Crane Wilbur, as the fighting minister, is surrounded by an all-star cast and 2500 people.

THE SEASON'S PREMIER SPECIAL

Frederick McQuigg as "Rob Reel" in the CHICAGO AMERICAN says:

BY ROB REEL.

Tyrone Power is to appear here next month in one of the strongest productions yet turned out by the camera. He has the lead part in Herman Whitaker's absorbing novel, "The Planter."

For a portrayal of strength coupled with ruthlessness there has nothing appeared this season to equal the work of Mr. Power. He gets the part of the evil Ludwig Hertzer over so strong that you feel the man's very presence, while you know all the time it is only a picture.

During the cool of Chicago Winter you are going to revel in tropic scenery which will make you forget to button your overcoat when you go out. It is a story of a rubber plantation and the life of remote southern Mexico. It is a reminder of slave days. It pictures the things we like to think of if—at all—as something which does not happen in the year 1917. Yet it brings to you in concrete form the very wrongs we hear hinted of and spoken of only vaguely.

The picture was made down in the rubber country with all of the tropical atmosphere and spectacular settings described in the noval. F. M. Manson, a Nevada mining millionaire, with a hobby for pictures, presents the production and is head of the company which made "The Planter." The distribution is through Mutual, in whose exhibition room an advance showing was given the press and trade.

SPEND OVER $250,000.

Over $250,000 was spent in constructing "The Planter." It was necessary to move an entire company of 200 men and women.

The Circulation of this Issue of Motion Picture News is—11,475

Amid the remarkably loose claims of circulation made in this field the above statement is unfortunately of little consequence.

But it is of consequence—that we offer to prove the above figures to any of our advertisers who will call at our office. We will add to our own office records the report of Morse & Company, certified public accountants, covering our circulation during the fiscal year July 1, 1916-1917.

And it is also of consequence that the above figures are those of a clean-cut trade circulation, read by the trade, carrying influence with the trade—not swollen (as is easily possible) by waste newsstand circulation or other methods of quickly won and worthless figures.

Two More Reasons—

"Hygeia at the Solito"—Two Parts

O. Henry in this story rears a great dramatic structure. The situations are so truly American as to make their appeal sensational. A New York pugilist stranded in the Southwest—a "lunger"—is regenerated in spite of his depravity, his ignorance and his churlish metropolitan narrowness. It comprises a huge joke—a typical "O. Henry" joke on human nature.

Told in an Exciting Way and Cleverly.

Where Was the Organization?

THE dust is settling; the war tax is with us, but much of its worries are past. Out of the maze of interpretations exhibitors have evolved their rules and the nervous tension and unrest that preceded the first collection of the admission tax are giving way.

With a watchful eye on the box-office each exhibitor is preparing to meet as an individual the distinctive problems the tax will create for him.

Only the fifteen-cent-per-reel tax remains as a cloud on the horizon.

With the skies clearing and the panicky days passing, we once more hear a question that has been often spoken in the past:

"Where was the National Exhibitors' Organization?"

In the columns of its vest pocket organ we have read of many and varied activities; in the letters from our exhibitor readers and reports of meetings of its local and state branches we have heard nothing.

Where was the national organization?

* * * *

NEVER, in the country's history, have exhibitors been so much at sea as during the trying days preceding November 1st. Seldom have so many questions been asked which demanded speedy, immediate solution.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS answered by mail over two hundred of these queries regarding legal phases of the law. By telephone twoscore more were answered for nearby theatre owners.

Exchange managers were deluged with questions, film salesmen became near-lawyers. William Fox did valiant work in New York, calling a solidly attended exhibitor meeting, which he backed up by sending broadcast a valuable "catechism of the tax."

But—through it all—

Where was the national organization?

General Manager Pettijohn, of the A. E. A., did all that a new organization could do. From his national headquarters he directed a decided stand against the reel tax.

But while local and state branches of the League were holding meetings, while Eager and others of his enterprising type were doing their best—

Where was the national organization?

INSTRUCTION sent to exchange men regarding the collection of the reel tax bore the signature of the secretary of the National Association. The M. P. E. L. has a voice in the councils of the National Association, at best nominally. Presumably its representatives knew of the progress of the producers' reel tax discussions.

Did any instructions carrying the signature of either the National Association secretary or the League secretary reach the organization's branches?

Did the national organization turn a finger to explain to its ranks the necessity or lack of necessity of the reel tax?

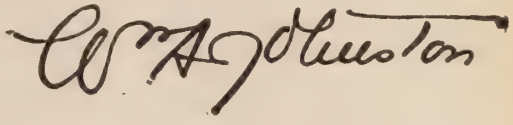
Did the national organization utter a word as to how the fifteen cent figure was reached, as to its justice or lack of it?

Did the national organization, aside from its publishing department, know that there was a war tax?

Where was the national organization?

* * * *

THESE thoughts are prompted by an observer of the work of the legitimate theatre managers through their United Protective Association during the trying days.



Through Ligon Johnson, the Association's general counsel, the managers were in almost daily consultation with the revenue authorities at Washington.

From the offices of the Association there came frequent bulletins informative and satisfying. Finally, a few days before the tax became due, a lengthy, complete summary was placed in the hands of every member.

But meanwhile picture theatre managers were working out their own salvation as individuals and as local organizations.

They have come to a state of mind that gives no thought to the national organization in times of stress. They expect to hear from it but once a year—now it will be twice—at Exposition time. But all the other months roll round with the words echoing:

Where is the national organization?

Speaking Editorially:

A New Distributing Force

WHEN W. W. Hodkinson came East a few years ago to give national scope to the principles he had intensively developed on the West coast—of fewer pictures, longer runs and higher admission prices—a powerful film executive whose beliefs ran contrariwise, admitted that he was watching the new move with great interest.

Mr. Hodkinson's moves have always been watched with interest; and so, in particular, will be his present reappearance in the field after a disassociation which, by his statement, he made deliberate and complete in order to tackle a new and big work without entanglements and with a clear perspective of present conditions.

It's a Merry Life!

WE suggested some time ago that since exhibitors, with all their protesting, are paying the higher rentals and therefore the big question remained: What methods shall we use to increase incomes proportionate with rentals? We attempted to point out that higher admissions were needed and that only better retailing could secure higher admissions.

For this we were told by one excited reader: "You are a manufacturer's paper. Consider this a cancellation when my subscription runs out."

That is one side.

Later we stated it was our conviction that the manufacturers have blundered in their method of putting into force the fifteen-cent-a-reel tax. We decry the haste, we wonder that more general thought and educational discussion was not given.

For this we hear, "I am glad to see that you spoke while the supposed 'by and for exhibitors' papers maintained a cringing silence. You are the really representative paper."

Oh, it's a merry life.

Especially if you are trying to be truly representative, to say your say no matter whom it hurts, so long as you are convinced that you are speaking for the good of the industry.

It is easy to follow the multitude, it's easier to be discreetly silent.

"Too Long—Too Long"

WE wish that it were possible for every director and scenario writer to glance at each card that comes to our Exhibitors' Box Office Report department.

We would like to have every director who thinks only in terms of close-ups to read the oft-repeated line "Too Long."

"Good picture, but too long—it tired them" is the most frequent comment.

There's a warning here for manufacturers who determine the length of a picture by the star's name and rental value and not by the story.

The condemnation "too long" will never be heard when the strength of the vehicle justifies the length; it will continue to be heard until the warning note spells danger to some stars' reputations when length is sought regardless of merit.

A Progressive Step

SOME time ago we ran an editorial called "The Swivel-Chair in New York," pointing out the fact that film executives got their perspective too much from this relatively insignificant orbit and not enough from the ocean to ocean field of exhibitor and exchange activity where business problems are as thick and various as films are.

We are pleased to note the field trips now being made by the president and general manager of Paramount Pictures Corporation, Messrs. Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schuelberg, and that these trips are to be made regularly hereafter. This is a progressive step and bound to be a successful one.

There are many big corporations today, in other fields, who believe that the founding of a single branch of their business, however small, is worth the presence on the ground of their leading executives.

Drag-Netting the Week End Guest

AWHILE ago on this page we mentioned that the exhibitor in our little Long Island town had taken in a lot more admissions than formerly by posting a sign at the station where incoming commuters learned that they were mistreating their wives by not taking them regularly to his theatre.

That was a more or less typical small-town exhibitor problem, and he solved it in a way easy enough for others to follow.

Now he has gone after the week-end guests.

Small and large estates outside the village have house parties regularly. Their hosts own automobiles.

The exhibitor saw that his Saturday and Sunday performances were made up of somewhat undesirable citizens from what we call "the hollow."

He wanted to spruce up those Saturday and Sunday performances—to bring nicer people into his house.

So he went after the "week-enders."

First he mailed out form letters to the automobile owners, notifying them that when week-end guests began to seem bored, why not pile them in the car and go to the "movies" for the lark of it?

That worked.

Next he had handbills wrapped up in grocery packages, hinting at the same idea. The grocer was obliging. So was the butcher.

The fad was a difficult one to start. He began about two months ago. But he had sown the correct seed.

Not long ago after his form letters went out, a certain house party "fell flat" because the hostess had intended to rely upon outdoor entertainment.

There is nothing so tragic in a woman's life as to have a houseful of guests—and nothing for them to do!

Her motor car made two trips to our friend's theatre. Next week he saved another hostess from the social bankruptcy of a week-end failure.

Now the week-end trip to the "movies" is an establishment.

Perhaps not many exhibitors can solve their problem of empty seats by precisely his method.

At all events, his experience should give others an idea to work on.

The Reader Has His Say

The War Tax Continues to be a subject of interest in all parts of Country. Kicks are plentiful, a few boasts. One young man has something to say about specialists

War Taxes Close One House and Curtail Others' Program

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: Through some error your issue of October 27th failed to reach me. Wish you would start another copy on the way as we must have a complete file of the NEWS.

The producers are sure soaking us fellows on the film tax. As near as I can figure they are getting out of it scot free and making some profit besides, allowing for the average life of the film. But we cannot raise prices, so we are closing one house and cutting off one reel all round.

Yours truly,
F. F. LATTA.

Reading Exhibitors Congratulate Mutual on Reel Tax Action

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed herewith you will find a resolution passed by the Reading Exhibitors at a recent meeting.

We trust that you will publish this so that other communities may do likewise. A six reel feature run three days cost $2.70 war tax. We feel that this is working hardship on the exhibitor.

Since passing this resolution we find that the Mutual Film Corporation has decided to assume the war tax. Let us hope that all other exchanges will do likewise.

Thanking you in advance we beg to remain,

Respectfully,
M. P. EXHIBITORS OF READING, PA.
H. J. SCHAD, Sec'y.

Time to Stop Crying "Wolf!" in Picture Advertising

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: In your editorial in November 3 issue of the NEWS, headed "Point Your Own Moral," I find some very interesting matter, especially if one will just read between the lines a little.

Of course we know and realize that press agents must write up some good "dope" on the success of each feature, or else the poor little fellows could not hope to hold their job long, and perhaps they are right in their criticisms of the feature in question, but I am frank to say that some of those press agents must view the feature through smoked glasses, for the feature that they call great, I would call "punk."

Of course the first thing that two old heads do when they start a feature film exchange, is to go to the big city to see personally the big features that they shall buy, and while in New York last week, W. E. Drummond of our company had a chance to see with his own eyes some of those features that they call great. Should we have bought every feature that was labelled great, we would have enough films to furnish service to every theatre in the South, so we only bought three out of the bunch that was suited to our needs.

It does seem like the time is ripe for producers to know when they have a really good one and that they should take warning about false advertising regarding their features. Of course, not all of them do this, but there are instances that I have known of right recently.

"Are the Distributors Slackers?" Queries an Alabamian

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: What do you think of the exhibitors having to pay the fifteen cents per reel tax that the distributors are passing on to us?

Do you not think that Congress intended that the distributors should pay this out of their profits, and do you think that the distributors have a right to add this to their invoice of contract pictures where they have agreed to furnish them at a contract price.

Is this slacking on the part of the distributors? Give us a write up on this line if you have not already done so.

Yours truly,
J. W. BOWSER.

Another Kick Added to a Growing Pile

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I have a theatre here seating two hundred and fifty, and in which I get a fifteen-cent admission price. Today I received the enclosed notice from the California Film Exchange.

What do you know about this? Why should the exhibitor pay the producer's war tax?

W. W. SANDY.

"Where Are the Specialists to Be Found?" Asks One Who Isn't

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
DEAR SIR:

I now take another man's typewriter in hand in order to spread myself upon a condition existing in the industry at the present time, and which I believe would be partly remedied by the healthy light of publicity.

I am a young man who has had one year of experience with one of those producing companies that come and go with the seasons. This concern met its sad demise about eight months ago, and since then I have been making successive attempts to reconnect myself with the industry. What has been the result? Nothing. It seems that the business has been seized with a mania for "specialists." Now I may appear to be obtuse, but where on earth is a business going to procure specialists when none of these rare birds are extant, especially in the picture game? Where can the industry find a Ford or Schwab at whom it can safely point a proud finger and say, "There is a specialized product of the moving picture business."

Anybody with half an eye will acknowledge that present methods of management in the industry are as short-sighted, unprogressive and slipshod as were any ever conceived for any business. Are these methods those of specialists? No doubt specialization is a great thing for any business, but so long as the picture business has not developed any up to the present time there's no sense in crying for the moon.

In spite of the fact that I am not a specialist I am going to make a few predictions. First: Sometime in the future the dominant method of distribution will be by franchise. Second: That producers will have to cut down on quantity and give quality instead. Third: The producer will be forced to drop his grab-it-all policy and adjust his prices so as to let the little fellow live.

Yours,
MURRAY A. SCHULMAN.
New York City.

Varying Reports from Firing Line on First Effects of Tax

Patrons Pay with a Smile in Most Cases, but Lack of Pennies and Change-Making Cause Some Confusion—Business Hurt Where Flat Raise Was Made to Cover Tax

MOTION PICTURE NEWS presents herewith the first countrywide reports from exhibitors concerning their initial experiences in the collection of the new Federal tax on admissions.

Optimism pervades most of the reports. This is especially true in cities where the patrons are paying the tax in pennies themselves. In these cases there is a smile and a joke as the patron digs down. But in cities where admissions had been increased a flat five cents, out of which the exhibitor pays the tax, a falling off in business is reported.

It is still too early to form definite conclusions regarding the effect of the tax. From the smaller communities the few reports received are disquieting. There is every indication that the combination of the reel tax and Federal taxes will cause many of these houses to close down.

West Coast Theatres Put Tax into Effect

Theatres in all West Coast cities, excepting Oakland, Cal., are now charging their patrons the ten per cent. war tax in addition to former prices, according to MOTION PICTURE NEWS Los Angeles correspondent, who wired this week that no noticeable falling off in business has attended the enforcement of the tax. On suggestion of Fred Miller, of Miller's theatre, exhibitors of Los Angeles conducted a four-days' advertising campaign, using half-pages in all dailies to make patriotic appeals to their patrons to shoulder the tax. This campaign was backed by the Theatre Owners' Association, which raised the money to cover the expense in five minutes at the regular weekly meeting on Monday of last week.

The advertisements, in addition to quoting Section 700 of the Federal War Tax law read: "Sixty million dollars. Your pennies paid to theatres will amount to that sum and help win the war! Remember, it amounts to only two or three pennies from an individual, and may be the means of eliminating other taxation which might be heavier. You love your country! Do your bit!"

According to the statement of Fred Miller, made to the correspondent of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the tax is not affecting receipts. The only lessening visible appears to be the receipts of the NEWS' Cigarette Fund. Al Nathan, of Superba, is glad to contribute, and deposited his pennies with the remark: "Here's more bullets to get the Kaiser." Charles Gates, of the Symphony people, exclaimed that he has not lost the sale of even four tickets in four days. Christ Glimm, of the Garrick, shares the same opinion, and says business has not been decreased by adding the tax to the admission prices. The chief trouble seems to be the securing of pennies for change. N. L. Watton, of the Strand, Sacramento, reports a most favorable reception there for the war tax. J. W. Di Stasio, of the Liberty theatre, Sacramento, asserts that no one has turned away from the box-office at his house because of the additional charge.

One of the greatest handicaps of the new tax was found in handling the crowds during the evenings immediately after the tax went into effect. Lines half a block long extended to most all box-offices, and waits were caused by numerous explanations to patrons and in making penny change. The Tivoli theatre in San Francisco installed an additional box-office and cashier.

All houses in Oakland, Cal., have increased the admission prices by five cents, and have announced their intention of paying the war tax out of the general receipts. Patrons accepted the increase without any undue unfavorable comment.

The fifteen-cents-a-reel tax on exhibitors, though, is a tax of "another color," it appears. Exhibitors of Los Angeles and San Francisco are incensed over it, as all exchanges in those cities excepting Mutual and Triangle have put the reel tax into effect. To show appreciation to the latter companies, the Los Angeles Theatre Owners' Association, with a membership of over a hundred, has adopted resolusions pledging all possible business to Triangle and Mutual. At San Francisco League officers and members called on exchange managers in body and threatened a boycott. In a few instances managers refused to take shows out of the exchange unless the reel-tax was eliminated. The same conditions prevailed in Los Angeles. Several contracts were reported canceled by exhibitors because the tax was renewed.

Nebraska Feels No Ill Effects of War Tax

Although exhibitors of Omaha and throughout Nebraska think it a bit early to pass an opinion upon the effects of the war tax upon tickets to patrons, most of them, it appears, are optimistic over the ultimate outcome.

Wilfred Ledoux, of the Empress, in Omaha, although asserting that another month will be required before effects can be noticed, claimed that his business for the past week was better than a week ago. In a month, Mr. Ledoux thinks, patrons will be used to the small increases and very few will kick. H. M. Thomas, of the Strand, stated to a correspondent of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that his patrons are gladly paying the tax, and that not a complaint has been registered with him since it went into effect. However, he has to help sell tickets now and then as the crowds become too large for the cashier. E. L. Hallgren, of the Suburban, announced that his business was falling off, but that he did not blame it on the tax. R. D. Shirley, of The Muse, said business was better than the week before, and that his patrons are joking about the tax while digging down willingly to pay it. Louis Marcus, of the Majestic at Council Bluffs, Ia., declares business has not fallen off, but is better, if a change can be noticed. Other theatres in the Iowa town also claim to be getting their full share of business, as do also the legitimate houses in Omaha.

In a very few instances it has been found, the exhibitors say, that some patrons complain that the tax is being charged by the theatre and not the government, and that they consider it a holdup. Explanations, in most cases, straighten this misunderstanding out.

New Orleans Accepts Tax in Cheerful Mood

The war tax on admissions to theatres has been accepted in New Orleans readily and cheerfully by the patrons, it is announced. The attendance is apparently normal, and most of the theatres are crowded, as usual.

Manager Cornelius of the Strand, said: "I am delighted with the way patrons took to the new rule. Most of them had pennies ready. The comments were good-natured, and I was surprised to note the patriotic spirit voiced concerning the tax."

Manager Kattman, of the Palace, said: "It is truly wonderful how quickly people responded to the change. There has been no trouble at all. Attendance is really larger than we can accommodate."

Manager Turner, of Loew's Crescent, said: "A shortage of pennies is the only trouble we have had. People seem to consider paying the tax another form of buying Liberty Bonds. They take to it cheerfully, and business is better."

Manager Peritz, of the Suburban, announced that his theatre is absorbing the tax, but that the people are very willing to pay the extra few cents to aid the Government. Manager Peritz declares the only kick is on the attitude of exchanges in passing the manufacturers' tax to the people.

Al G. Shear, of the New Carrollton theatre, remarked: "The fact that people do not kick convinces me in advance that the raise in admission will be accepted without objection. Every one appears glad to help Uncle Sam."

There is a deep feeling of resentment against the collection of fifteen cents a reel on present releases by the exchanges. This seems to be hurting business more than anything else, and is causing the small country theatres to close.

Tax in Michigan Is Apparently Successful

According to telegrams to MOTION PICTURE NEWS from correspondents in Detroit and oeher Michigan cities, the war tax on admissions in Michigan is apparently a success, despite the many complaints at the small houses in poorer sections. In better neighborhoods, however, the people understand the reason for the extra charge, and are paying it without objection.

The larger houses in Detroit are finding

Exhibitors Bare Teeth at Producers Who Pass Tax Along

Chicago Meeting Decides to Fight Producers Who Assess Fifteen Cents Per Reel Tax—Reading, Pa., Men Irate at Plan—Say Exchanges Would Make Profit of Fifty Per Cent or More

VARIOUS exhibitor bodies met last week and discussed indignantly the plan of many producers to add the fiteen-cents-a-reel-tax to the daily rental of films, declaring that the idea is obnoxious, unequitable, unjust.

Members of the American Exhibitors' Association have refused to pay the tax of 15 cents per reel for films delivered by exchanges, upon the theory that the footage tax is a tax upon the manufacturer and the Eastman Company, and was never intended as a tax to be paid by the exhibitor. Present indications are that exhibitors will not be compelled to pay this tax.

"Let 'Em Cancel!" Chicago's Cry

AT a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Chicago, held in their club rooms at 19 West Adams street, October 30, practically the whole of the time was given over to the consideration of measures to effectively combat the tax of 15 cents per reel which manufacturers and producers have instructed exchanges to charge.

Exhibitors declared they were simply refusing to pay the tax and that up to the present had not had their shows held up. They expressed worry, however, over the exchanges' insistence on placing the tax levy on their bills even after they had refused to pay. Many of them felt that the exchanges would never be able to collect the back charges on their contracts, which make no allowance for a boost in price without the exhibitors' consent.

"Let them cancel us," was their defiant slogan, as they felt with Mutual, Triangle, Hoffman Foursquare, Unity and Standard not making the charge, that they could survive without the film of the other large exchanges if it came to a show down.

The members finally pledged themselves to a man to stand by the judgment of the assembly and cancel any one company in a body which, in the estimation of the exhibitors, had proved particularly obnoxious in insisting on the reel tax. After counting noses to find out the number of exhibitors present using the services of the different film companies it was decided to cancel where they could hit the hardest. In the roll call which followed it was discovered that twenty members were using K. E. S. E. service and that concern was chosen for the wholesale cancellation.

A committee of Edward T. Beatty, Louis Frank and W. J. Mulligan was appointed by President Krug to carry out the decision of the assembly to notify William Jeners of the local K. E. S. E. exchange that if he insisted on charging the reel tax that he might expect a number of cancellations.

Would Cancel K.E.S.E.

The members who pledged themselves to cancel K. E. S. E. in the event that that exchange refused to rescind the tax were as follows: Max Cooper, W. H. Holton, W. J. Mulligan, H. Bambara, George Henry, Meyer Kimmel, C. F. Fricke, Lanus Kahn, A. Treulick, Charles Faulhaber, Henry Lutz, Louis Frank, J. Rennyas, Max Jesselson, Harry Lindner, Charles Benesch, Richard Delly and Adolph Powell.

Frank Rembusch, national organizer of the American Exhibitors Association, was present at the meeting and told of the refusal of exhibitors to pay the tax all over the country.

"We are not paying the tax in Indianapolis," declared Mr. Rembusch, "and we don't intend to. I believe the Government thought the manufacturers should pay some tax, but they are trying to place their burden on our shoulders. And we have plenty to take care of as it is. The worst of it is manufacturers are not trying to make us pay just the amount they would have to give in meeting the footage tax but are asking more. They are trying to make excess war profits out of a tax they are supposed to pay. Under the present conditions it's up to exhibitors to stand together and resolutely refuse to pay this unjust levy. If we do that I think we can force them to give in.

During the week the following letter, commending President Freuler of Mutual for his refusal to make the charge and urging exhibitors wherever possible to patronize the company he heads, was sent out broadcast by the Theatre Owners' Association:

Freuler Commended

WHEREAS, The motion picture distributors of the United States have, arbitrarily and unjustly, and we believe unlawfully, decreed that each reel of film shall be assessed 15 cents to cover the federal war excise tax, and

WHEREAS, this assessment, now in force, works an undue hardship upon the exhibitor of motion pictures, jeopardizes his business, and

WHEREAS, The Mutual Film Corporation, through its president, Mr. John H. Freuler, has announced its determination to absorb the war excise tax and instructed the managers of its various exchanges to cancel the 15 cent assessment. Therefore, be it

RESOLVED, By the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association that the thanks and commendation of its members be extended to the Mutual Film Corporation and its president for their fairness and justness in meeting this situation. Be it further

RESOLVED, That the members of this organization endeavor, whenever and wherever possible, to book the productions of the Mutual Film Corporation not only as a matter of principle, but because of the high standard of quality in production which is maintained by the Mutual Film Corporation, and urge similar action upon the part of exhibitors not affiliated with this organization. Be it further

RESOLVED, That this resolution be spread on the records of this association, copies sent to the various other affiliated organizations of thee American Exhibitors' Association with a request that they take some similar action, and that a copy be sent to the Mutual Film Corporation.

Reading Up in Arms

Copy of resolution passed by the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Reading, Pa., October 22:

We, the undersigned Motion Picture Exhibitors of the city of Reading, Pa., hereby express our disapproval of the War Tax film charges of either 10 cents or 15 cents per reel as proposed by the various exchanges of Philadelphia, as such a charge would result in a profit of from 100 per cent. to 500 per cent. to some exchanges.

In view of the tact that the Government charges $5 for each 1,000-foot reel, it is quite natural to assume that each exchange has at least 100 regular customers who, in turn will receive these respective reels. This War Tax was not calculated to enrich any person obliged to pay it, we therefore feel that at 5 cents per reel we are paying our full share, and we hereby request all exchanges dealing with us to adhere to a uniform charge of 5 cents and no more, as this will cover the tax, and in most cases leave a profit to the exchange of 50 per cent. to 100 per cent., or the exchange assume the tax and thereby "do their bit."

Signed by: Harry C. Stimmel, for Majestic theatre; H. S. Rentz, San Toy; H. S. Rentz, Victoria; J. G. Hansen, Gem; Heilman and Egolf, Victor; L. B. Reinert, Savoy; Carr and Schad, Inc., Colonial; Carr and Schad, Inc., Princess; Carr and Schad, Inc., Arcadia; Henry R. Johnston, Pictureland; Frank D. Hill, Lyric; W. C. Karntner, Grand; J. M. Harpst, Family; R. K. Hammer, Queen; Frank A. Gould, Rex; Haas and Moyer, Star; Haas and Moyer, School Avenue.

TWO TANGLED POINTS FINALLY CLEARED UP

1. Commissioner Roper in a conference with producers last week made plain that the "$5-a-reel" tax was a misinterpretation.

2. The unit of taxation is the performance; not the day.

(If your matinee price is 5 cents and evening prices 10 cents or higher, or if the admissions some days are 5 cents and 10 cents or higher other days, the 5-cent tickets will not be taxed.)

First National to Absorb Tax

After having secured an expression of opinion from the entire membership of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, its officers announce definitely that their organization will pay the war tax of 15c. per reel recently imposed by the Government. This action will, no doubt, be very welcome news to practically every exhibitor in the country as the circuit's new "Signature Protected". Chaplin comedies promise to be booked by many theatres.

The same policy will apply to all First National releases, due to the circuit's members' belief that the various new war imposts are going to prove a heavy burden on their fellow exhibitors.

The First National Exchanges are rapidly preparing for business, reports indicating that those not already in full working order will be completely organized in ample time to take care of the early releases of Petrova's first picture, "Daughter of Destiny"; Brenon's "Empty Pockets," "Alimony" and Chaplin's comedies. The releases will probably take place in the order mentioned.

St. Louis Exhibitors Reject the Excise Tax

Exhibitors of St. Louis are much concerned over the proposed excise tax of 15 cents per reel on positive films, which is already casting its shadow with those made by ever-increasing taxes and licenses. All but four of the St. Louis exchanges, it be-

Triangle Favors Only Non-Taxable Music

Announces That Its Cue Sheets, as in Past, Will Carry Only Free Numbers Obtainable Either in Solo or Orchestral Form

IN an announcement just issued to its exchanges, and through them to all Triangle exhibitors, the Triangle Distributing Corporation has announced its attitude toward the proposed music tax.

"It is our policy to protect our exhibitors in every way we can," said Y. F. Freeman, general manager of the organization. "As in the past, all of the music cue sheets which accompany Triangle pictures will be composed of musical numbers which may be played in any theatre for the purchase price of the music, and that alone. Our music expert, M. Winkler, has been instructed to bear this fact in mind when arranging Triangle music cue sheets, and we hope that our policy in this matter will be of general benefit to those playing Triangle productions. It is our duty to the exhibitor—just a logical phase of Triangle service."

While on the subject of picture music, Mr. Freeman further remarked a point in the compilation of cue sheets which is often lost sight of.

"We firmly believe that every musician or leader playing for pictures can compile his own cue sheet if he has a chance to see the picture at least a day before the actual performance, but of course such cues would be of service to only one individual, and would entail an enormous waste of effort. Nine times out of ten they would not serve for general distribution by a distributing company to its clients, simply because the compositions would in all probability not be obtainable for every possible combination of instruments. In case the compiler were a pianist, it might be expected that most of the numbers mentioned on his cue sheet would not be available for orchestra use, and likewise, the same condition would exist where an orchestra man overlooked the needs of the piano or organ soloist.

"For this reason we have been very careful to place our musical work in the hands of a man who is a musician of many years' experience in this particular field. He is also a representative of several of the largest music publishing houses, insuring exhibitors that his selections may be purchased by any musician, no matter what instrument or combination is to be used."

Music Minus Tax Will Be Used by Vitagraph

Walter W. Irwin Notifies Exhibitors That Company Will Have Taxless Tunes in Accompaniments—First Company to Give Notice

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the distributing and selling organization of Greater Vitagraph, last week, through his press department and the company's house organ, notified exhibitors that Vitagraph will not have in its musical accompaniments any but non-taxable music, henceforward. This action on the part of Mr. Irwin marks the first official notice that any producing company has taken of the attempt of the American Society of Authors and Composers to impose a tax on anyone using copyrighted music.

Vitagraph, in fact, has never put forth any music that could be taxed, it is claimed.

The activities of the American Society have been closely studied in detail, Mr. Irwin states, and it was decided many months ago that Vitagraph musical suggestions cue sheets should be arranged only from such music as was permissible to be played free of the tax. S. M. Berg, the company's musical director and arranger, was chosen to make a special investigation and as a result of his studies, it was decided by the Vitagraph Company that the whole question of taxable music was really a trifling one to exhibitors, who are endeavoring to feature the music in conjunction with the picture, because the music which this society controls is the popular music of the moment.

In discussing this phase of service to exhibitors, Mr. Irwin said: "We have tried to devote as much care and thought to our musical accompaniments as we do to our film productions, and there is no reason why this should not be done, because in the final analysis they are similar in purpose, there is no room or there should not be for careless preparation in either field. Motion pictures are interpretations of writers' thoughts and musical accompaniments, to be of value, should be faithful interpretations of these other interpretations.

"Big pictures require big music and big music means the classics. Excerpts from Hayden, Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Tschaikowsky, Chopin and other masters will be found consistently in the musical suggestions prepared for Vitagraph productions. These are woven together with such exceptional skill, that when used in conjunction with the picture they become the voice of the silent drama. Music must be the voice of the screen."

N. A. M. P. I. Arranges Program for Sunday Schools

Under direction of Frederick H. Elliot, executive secretary, National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, a carefully selected program for Saturday afternoon performances to be given children attending Sunday schools is being arranged.

Feature pictures, scenics, comedies and short dramas are to be shown on Saturday afternoon and evening at the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, West 104th street, New York, of which Dr. Christian F. Reisner is the pastor. This special committee has selected an alert young college graduate in the person of J. V. Lacy, of Chicago, who will direct the use of the pictures and study the moral, educational and recreational effects of the pictures.

Dr. Reisner in his letter to President William A. Brady dwelt at some length upon the importance of pictures in constructive work of this nature.

came known last week, have sent out notices that the reel tax of 15 cents will have to be paid by the exhibitor. Many cancellations are the result of these notices and there is much protest against what is called an injustice by the exhibitors.

At a meeting last week the exhibitors adopted a resolution to send a letter to the exchanges informing the latter that they refuse to pay the tax, and that no exhibitor who is a member of the league will pay any film tax until notified to do so by the government. The letter was signed by J. Mogler, president, and Edward Pohlman, secretary, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis.

Los Angeles Theatres Set Minimum Admission

Coincident with the inauguration of the Federal tax on theatre admissions, all down-town theatres in Los Angeles will increase the admission price to a minimum of ten cents, it has been agreed. This action has been taken by the owners of theatres on Main and Spring streets, where there have been a number of houses that continued at a five-cent admission with the showing of old subjects. At the same time Los Angeles theatre men will put the tax assessment squarely up to their patrons, providing that each person entering the theatre shall pay the ten per cent war tax the government has levied. At a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California Monday of last week, all members unanimously voted to adopt the policy of patrons paying the war tax. Arrangements for providing a convenient way for the public to pay this tax was placed in the hands of a committee, and it is very probable the theatres may open a clearing house which will take care of a uniform stamp that will be honored at all theatres. The stamps will be sold by all theatres, and under the supervision of the clearing house each patron of a theatre will give stamps to the doorman which in turn will be retained by the clearing house, thus refunding to the theatre the money they pay to the government monthly.

Taylor Holmes Aids Spoor in Saving Food

Taylor Holmes, it was announced last week by Essanay, is giving valuable assistance to George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, in carrying out the work of Food Administrator Hoover's food economy campaign in Illinois, in which Mr. Spoor is actively engaged as chairman of the Illinois Motion Picture Bureau of Food Administration.

Mr. Holmes, now being featured in Essanay comedy-dramas, has been added to the list of four-minute men of the Chicago district, and speaks each night in the Windy City theatres.

The Illinois Motion Picture Bureau is working in co-operation with Harry A. Wheeler, state food administrator, and widespread results already have been gained, it is said.

New Companies Enter Motion Picture Industry

Four new companies to deal in films and motion pictures were incorporated during the past week, according to the records of the Corporation Trust Company, of Jersey City.

The Veritas Film Corporation, capitalized at $6,000, was formed by Domenico De Falco, Angelo Prevete and Antonio Perretta for general film, motion picture and theatrical purposes.

Mankivell Films, Inc., was organized in New York by Edith Mankivell, Arnold Mountford and John MacGregor, to deal in animated cartoons and motion pictures.

Liberty Photodrama Production, Inc., was formed with a capital of $500.000, offices in New York, to handle motion pictures. Incorporators are Zenas Upham Dodge, Walter H. Thacher and James T. MacLean.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, with capital placed at $600,000, was formed in New York to handle motion pictures. Henry J. Mason, Kenneth S. Dalgeish and Sinclair G. Weeks are the incorporators. It is announced this company will be the distributing medium for Paralta Plays.

Directors' Association Develops into Lusty Youth

The Motion Picture Directors' Association, organized in 1915, is growing to be one of the healthiest youngsters in the East, according to reports issued from the Association headquarters at 234 West Fifty-fifth street. It is announced the growth of the association has been very satisfactory in every way during the past year, and that the future looks exceedingly bright.

Within the past year the association has entertained S. L. Rothapfel and Adolph Zukor, both of whom made interesting addresses to the directors. At the last meeting Director Travers livened things up by reading a paper on "Do Illustrated Subtitles Help or Harm the Story?" "Should a Director Cut His Own Picture?" and "Is the Star System an Aid to the Industry?" Director Edwin Carewe replied to the first section; Director Sidney Olcott to the second and Director Joseph Kaufman, of Famous Players, to the third.

At the next meeting Director Robert Vignola, of Famous Players, is scheduled to read a paper upon a subject which is expected to be of great interest to all directors, the subject of which has not been announced.

Lee Sells Territory for Rankin's "A Modern Lorelei"

Joseph F. Lee, exploitation manager for Charles Rankin, who controls the world rights to the Marine Film Company's production, "A Modern Lorelei," featuring Tyrone Power, reports from Pittsburgh that he has sold the westerner Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights to this production to Roland Clark, of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Pittsburgh. Mr. Lee has been traveling through the Central Atlantic States for the past week, and reports that the production is going big. Before he returns to New York Mr. Lee will cover the Southern territory.

Paralta Releases Through Hodkinson Company

Now Being Organized with Offices in Fifth Avenue, and Will First Turn Attentions to Production, Starring J. Warren Kerrigan

THE production of Paralta Plays, Inc., and its allied producing companies, it was announced last week, will be distributed to exhibitors through the organization now being formed by W. W. Hodkinson, with offices at 527 Fifth avenue.

Affiliations between Paralta and Mr. Hodkinson's new company are expected to mean much to exhibitors, according to plans being advanced by Paralta. It is cited that Mr. Hodkinson entered the industry as an exhibitor and has, therefore, a most intimate knowledge of every condition that exhibitors have to face. His experience in connection with the General Film Company and as president of the Paramount and Triangle distributing corporations widened his vision to take in all angles of the business.

The Paralta organization, formed and operated under the direction of Carl Anderson, has been in existence only since last March, but during its brief career has made rapid strides toward its goal. The aim of the Paralta companies, which includes J. Warren Kerrigan and Bessie Barriscale as stars, as well as Henry B. Walthall, Rhea Mitchell, Clara Williams and Howard Hickman, has been to constantly produce photodrama of substantially standardized merit, it is announced.

The first Paralta release which Mr. Hodkinson's new organization will make will be J. Warren Kerrigan's "A Man's Man." This production was recently given a "try-out" of one week at Clune's auditorium in Los Angeles, where it played to the second largest record of receipts in the history of that house.

Mr. Hodkinson's second Paralta release will be Bessie Barriscale's production of "Madam Who." Then will follow in quick succession Henry B. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor," J. Warren Kerrigan in "Turn of a Card," Bessie Barriscale in "Within the Cup" and "Rose o' Paradise," Henry B. Walthall in "Humdrum Brown," and Clara Williams and Rhea Mitchell in productions which are now known only by working titles.

Some time ago it was announced that Paralta had planned to make fifty-two star-feature productions in its first year, and to this end negotiations are now said to be in progress with several stars that this may be accomplished by June 4, 1918, which will be the first anniversary of Paralta's entry into the picture production field.

Censorship on Rack at Baltimore Convention

Maryland Exhibitors Take Definite Step to Combat State Control of Motion Picture Exhibiting—Slides to Be Used in Campaign

THE consensus of opinion of the members of the Maryland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which opened a convention in Baltimore on October 28, seemed to be "Can the motion picture censor." And, in line with this apparent feeling, immediately following the convention definite steps were taken to combat censorship in Baltimore, and it was decided to inaugurate a state-wide campaign against state control of motion picture exhibiting.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Maryland League held October 30 plans were decided upon to prepare a series of slides, seventeen in number, which will be exhibited in every motion picture theatre in Maryland with a view of acquainting the people with the exact status of the state censorship and urging that they use their influence on legislators to repeal the censorship act at the next meeting of the Maryland state legislature, to be held in Annapolis in January.

Aside from the slide campaign every newspaper in the larger cities of Maryland as well as the county papers will be approached by representatives of the exhibitors and their co-operation asked in this fight. The question of censorship occupied the entire night session of the Maryland convention on Sunday.

The entire afternoon session on Sunday was devoted to the war tax proposition. At this session it was decided to conduct a motion picture slide campaign with the view of telling the public just what the war tax meant. With a view of getting the exact status of the government on the amusement war tax situation a committee consisting of Walter Pacy and J. Louis Rome was sent to Washington on Monday to personally interview officials of the Internal Revenue Department.

At Sunday's meeting there was a suggestion made by some of the exhibitors that they propose to advance their prices to fifteen cents and make no mention of the war tax to their patrons and simply pay the tax out of their receipts. The Internal Revenue officials state, however, that the war tax must be stated definitely to the patrons of the amusement enterprises. If the admissions are made fifteen cents to cover the war tax the exhibitor must make it plain that his admission price is thirteen cents and that the remaining two cents is for the war tax.

The slides to be exhibited at the various motion picture theatres will bring the war tax proposition to the attention of the public in the most simple and direct manner. A committee consisting of Guy L. Wonders, William Stumpf and M. T. Eysare was appointed to take charge of the slides.

The work of eliminating censorship is in charge of a committee consisting of Louis Schlichter, Eugene B. McCurdy, E. C. Sandall, C. Walter Pacy and J. Louis Rome.

Attendance to the convention was in the neighborhood of three hundred. Frank A. Hornig, president of the Maryland Branch, presided.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

How Admission Tax Was Received All Over

considerable difficulty in making change, and for the first few days both the public and the theatre considered themselves working under a handicap or hardship on account of waits and other minor annayances. As a result of this, Manager John Kunsky has adopted the multiple system at the Washington, Madison, Adams and Strand, increasing the admission by five cents on some seats and merely adding the standing tax to others. The idea is, it is explained, to get away from pennies and odd prices, otherwise causing great confusion. The majority of exhibitors are adding the regular tax to their usual prices, while a few others are raising the prices from ten to fifteen cents, with a great tendency toward fiften and twenty cents as a standard.

Manager Kunsky thinks the tax a success as far as the public is concerned, even though it will take a while for the patrons to become used to the new conditions.

Seattle Houses Raise Prices to Pay Tax

Motion picture theatres in down-town Seattle, Wash., according to reports received this week by MOTION PICTURE NEWS via telegram, have added five cents to each admission to care for the war tax. The first four days of the tax showed a falling off in attendance, and exhibitors fear the increase in cost will materially affect business.

Jensen and Von Herberg, operating the Liberty and Coliseum, say they expect a decrease in box office receipts of at least 10 per cent. The Clemmer declares business will be affected materially, and the Rex asserts that patrons will not come so often. A greater loss in attendance is expected by this house as time advances. The Strand fears the increase, in company with the other theatres.

Neighborhood houses in Seattle declare they cannot raise prices to cover the tax, as the patrons will go downtown to the shows, and that the theatres themselves cannot afford to foot the war charge. They are in a quandry, and know not which way to turn, according to the managements. It is expected that several will close their doors. As children must pay the tax also, there will undoubtedly be a decrease in such attendance, it is thought, and exhibitors have announced their intention of using great care in booking high priced specials or state rights features until they see what volume of business they can depend upon.

Philadelphia Reacts

Although it is difficult to judge as yet the effect of the imposition of the new tax upon Philadelphia patrons of the pictures, because of the fact that last Thursday, when the law went into effect, and the day following were All Saints' and All Souls' Days respectively and many persons look upon these occasions as solemn events, nevertheless all managers have been keeping a keen eye upon the box-office, and a few of them are able to give the results of their observations so far.

Frank Buhler, general manager of the Central Market Street Theatres' Company, which caters chiefly to transients coming into the Pennsylvania and Reading terminals, says he has noticed no differences whatsoever in the receipts. He makes the excellent suggestion that men in uniform be allowed to enter without being taxed, since they are already doing their full duty toward their country.

Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, representing a circuit of theatres chiefly in the somewhat outlying districts of the city, believes his patrons are continuing to attend as heretofore, because they had been informed by "Four-Minute Speakers" during the Liberty Loan campaign, just how necessary the theatre taxation was. Mr. Nirdlinger added that he was rather proud to be acting, as it were, as a deputy collector.

The Stanley Company, with its usual reticence regarding all financial matters, would make no statement regarding the situation, but from a general observation of their houses it can be said that there has been no diminution in patronage.

The only difficulties experienced by the various managements have been in their inability to obtain a sufficient number of pennies for the change-making, in the delay at the box-offices, occasioned by the necessity for making odd change, and the newness of the situation to patrons.

Select Establishes Two New Exchanges

Several changes and expansions in Select Pictures Corporation exchanges throughout the country mark the progress which this company has made. Two new exchanges have been opened during the past week, one in Detroit and the other in Cincinnati. Sam E. Morris, manager of the Cleveland branch, has been given supervision of Detroit territory in addition to Cincinnati, which was already controlled by him.

As branch manager in Detroit, Mr. Morris has secured W. D. Ward, one of the best known exchange men in Michigan. The Detroit exchange is located at 906-907 Peter Smith Building. The territory includes Michigan, with the exception of the northern peninsula, which is handled by the Minneapolis and Chicago exchanges.

The change in Cincinnati gives that city a full-fledged Select exchange under the supervision of Mr. Morris, whereas formerly Cincinnati only had a subsidiary office. This exchange is located at 302 Strand Theatre Building. The expansion was made necessary because, on account of the rapidly increasing volume of business it was deemed advisable to establish a real exchange here. At the same time the Cincinnati territory has been expanded, as almost all the southern Indiana territory, including Indianapolis, has been taken from the Chicago office and given to the Cincinnati branch.

Buffalo Prices Absorb Tax

Manager Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., springs a new one in connection with the war tax on tickets by announcing that, commencing Sunday, November 4, there will be a slight raise in prices at Shea's Hippodrome for Sunday only, when enormous crowds attend this theatre.

The announcement says that in order to facilitate the handling of the line at the box office, simplify the collection of the tax, and also to avoid confusion, the new prices will take care of the war tax and patrons will not be put to the inconvenience of waiting until change is made in pennies.

Fifteen-cent seats in the balcony will be twenty cents, twenty-five-cent seats in orchestra thirty cents and box seats forty cents instead of thirty-five cents. This new schedule of prices will not affect the week-day prices.

Two Main street five-cent admission film houses in Buffalo tried to gain patrons by misrepresentation this week when they displayed banners reading:

"No war tax here—we pay it for you."

As there is no tax on five-cent houses several local managers got sore and informed the local revenue collector with the result that the signs were soon ordered down. Otherwise the tax is working smoothly in Buffalo.

State Rights Distributors to Meet in New York

The announcement was made last week from the office of Sol L. Lesser that the next meeting of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., will be held at the Claridge Hotel, New York, on Tuesday, November 20, at 11 a. m.

As many pictures have been presented to the members for national distribution, this is expected to be one of the most important meetings.

The offices of the corporation are temporarily located at room 523, Longacre Building.

Mr. Lesser advises that the organization being complete, manufacturers who have worthy productions can secure an immediate market.

Harvey B. Day Joins Select Pittsburgh Office

The Pittsburgh exchange of Select Pictures Corporation has been placed under the charge of Harvey B. Day, an old campaigner in that territory, and, beginning this week, the business of that office will be handled by him.

In order to join the Select Pictures, Mr. Day, who established the Fox exchange in Pittsburgh three years ago, resigned his position as personal representative to Stanley V. Mastbaum, the Philadelphia motion picture man.

World-Brady Announces Feature for December 17

The next World-Picture Brady-Made in which June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley have the leading roles is "Broken Ties," it was announced this week. The release date has been set for December 17.

Leah Baird Leads Exhibitors' Grand March

Coincidental with the announcement of the Ivan Company last week of the completion of "The Sins of Ambition," a superfeature starring Leah Baird, it was announced that the star had consented to lead the grand march of photoplayers at the ball given by the Bronx exhibitors at Hunts Point Palace the night of November 5. Earle Williams, of Vitagraph, was Miss Baird's partner in the grand march, and numerous other stars of the screen were present.

Film d'Art Will Show First Comedy Releases to Trade

The Film d'Art Corporation will show its first two comedy releases, Perry Pictures, to the trade on Thursday morning at 10:45 o'clock in Wurlitzer Hall, Forty-first street. The comedies are in two reels and were written and directed by John D. Perry.

Bates Withdraws as Paralta Publicity Man

Wilbur Bates, it was announced this week, has resigned as general publicity director for Paralta Plays and its affiliations, with which companies he has been identified since their organization, the withdrawal to take effect November 10. He has not announced plans for the future.

Mr. Bates is what is termed an old-timer in the theatrical and motion picture business, beginning first as a newspaper man when but seventeen years of age. In 1898-9 Bates exploited Viola Allen in Hall Caine's "The Christian," much of the success of which was said to be attributed by theatrical managers to a new system of intensive newspaper work originated by Mr. Bates, and used for the first time in the exploitation of this play and star.

In November, 1899, Bates became general representative for Klaw and Erlanger, and was probably the first newspaper man employed by any theatrical firm to create nation-wide publicity. He made his entry into the motion picture end of the business under the guidance of David W. Griffith, handling the exploitation of "Intolerance." Later he handled publicity for "The Deemster," and last March became general publicity man for Paralta.

Odd Paramount Scenes Going to the Front

Several thousand photographs, snapshots, scenes from Paramount productions, and other odds and ends have been collected at the Lasky studios in California and given to Major Ross Moore, the neurologist, who will be in charge of the Neurasthenic hospital back of the American lines in France. The photographs will be in charge of Louis Coleman Hall of Los Angeles, and will be used to detract the minds of soldiers from mental disorders.

The Lasky Company has also arranged to send with Major Moore's detachment, Arthur Streib, one of its photographers. He will not only take pictures of the hospital cases, but will also run the hospital projection machine and tell stories of the life of the studios to the convalescents.

Pathe "Argus Pictorial" Starts November 18

New Screen Magazine in One Reel Will Be Released Every Two Weeks—Development Is Credited to Horace D. Ashton

PATHE announced last week that the first issue of the new screen magazine in one reel, to be known as the "Argus Pictorial," will be released November 18, and will be issued every two weeks thereafter. The reel will be devoted, it is announced, to ultra-scientific, scenic, art and educational subjects, the collection of which is the culmination of long and tireless effort on the part of Horace D. Ashton, head of the company, who has devoted several years of study to reach the point where subjects which were heretofore considered impossible as screen stories could be presented in an entertaining and instructive manner.

This one-reel magazine, according to Pathe, will not be devoted entirely to microscopic and ultra-microscopic subjects. The big game that is found beyond the vision of the human eye, scenic subjects from all parts of the world, and the life stories of insects are scheduled for presentation. Other difficult art and scientific subjects that should interest the public will also be shown, it is said.

The Argus Laboratories, Inc., has correspondents in all parts of the world, including Australia, the South Seas, New Zealand, Siberia, Africa and Alaska, who are expected to gather artistic and interesting "educationals" to be included in the magazine.

A subject announced for the first issue, and which is expected to be of unusual interest, is the life history of the "Star-Fish." Ashton believed there was a story in this apparently uninteresting crustacean. Pictures taken under water, on the beaches, on artificial sea-bottoms in aquariums, under the most trying circumstances were said to be necessary to produce this part of the "Argus Pictorial," which is now replete with interesting data.

CAN YOU BLAME THEM?

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is always in demand with people interested in the film industry. This is because they know that the "News" gives them the news when a story is news.

The owner of a copy cannot go out of sight a moment without there being someone who takes it away to devour the contents.

This is the experience of R. G. Marshall of The Journal in Minneapolis. He complains that "It is impossible to keep a MOTION PICTURE NEWS in a newspaper office longer than half an hour."

Essanay Goes to Court Over Censor Decision

"Skinner's Baby," the Essanay production with Bryant Washburn, having been rejected in Pennsylvania by the State Board of Censors, an appeal has been taken by Essanay against the decision of the board. Arguments were heard in Common Pleas Court by three judges, who also reviewed the picture.

David B. Smith, formerly attorney on the side of the censors in other appeals, was retained by Essanay, while Deputy Attorney General Joseph L. Kuhn represented the board.

No decision has been handed down.

Atlas Builds Studio Short Distance from Boston

The Atlas Film Corporation, which recently consolidated with the Dadmun Company, and of which L. E. Dadmun is president, has built a studio at Newton, Mass., about twenty-five miles from Boston. Three companies can use the first-floor stage at one time, it is said. The basement is devoted to laboratories, dressing rooms, properties and workshop.

F. J. Howard is vice-president of the Atlas Film Corporation and C. O. Mason is treasurer.

Scott Says War Changes Attitude Toward Films

"The war is greatly changing the attitude of the public regarding motion pictures," said Elmer Scott, former Commissioner of Public Welfare of Dallas, Tex., and recently elected to membership on the Advisory Committee of the National Board of Review, when in New York a few days ago. "It has opened the minds of the public and tended to nationalize us all. It is blotting out provincialism. The attitude of the people in the theatres of Dallas, for instance, regarding motion pictures has changed in the last six months. We now think as you do about them. Our audiences laugh at the same things and seem to think in the same way that the people of Manhattan and other sections of the country do. This is a clear evidence of the new national point of view which all America is gaining as a result of this tremendous conflict. It is too bad that it seems to require such a world upheaval and shedding of blood to bring about this closer community of feeling."

Play "Who's Your Neighbor?" as Show, Says Mills

Believing that in the interest of his buyers in big centers of population it was up to him to impress on them they must exploit his picture as a "show," General Manager Herman Becker of Master Drama Features sought to convince Bernard H. Mills, of Elk Phoplays, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, purchaser of the Greater New York rights of "Who's Your Neighbor?" of the desirability of playing his film in this fashion.

Mr. Becker's argument was that a special film production was of the same public importance as a special stage production, that it was up to the film theatre manager to give his production the same amount of advertising and featuring to the public as the legitimate theatre manager would be sure to give his, and that a film could do as much business as a stage play, everything else equal, if it "went after" the public the same way.

"Empty Pockets" Goes Through First National

Brenon Considers Transaction High Compliment, as Production Has Not Yet Been Screened—Bert Lytell Has Principal Role

AMONG the more important and interesting transactions in motion picture circles last week was a deal closed between the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., whereby the latter has acquired the distributing rights to Brenon's "Empty Pockets," now in the process of production.

The combination came as a distinct surprise to the industry, as no inkling of how the production was to be released had been given The officials of the Brenon Corporation consider it one of the highest compliments ever paid their producer and director, Herbert Brenon, because the transaction was effected without the First National Exhibitors' Circuit having seen "Empty Pockets" screened. This is doubly emphasized by the announcement that the money involved establishes a new record for the disposal of the rights for a single production.

"I am exceedingly proud of the honor accorded me by the astute showmen of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit," said Mr. Brenon. "I realize that every director of that organization is a shrewd and keen exhibitor—each a representative man in his section of the country. An organization which has for its governing board such men as S. L. Rothapfel, of New York; T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles; Harry S. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia; Fred Dahnken, of San Francisco; Aaron J. Jones, of Chicago; Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, and E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, could not be otherwise."

The officers of the First National consider "Empty Pockets" another excellent addition to their growing list of high-class attractions and a demonstration of what exhibitors may anticipate in future releases.

They state that they have secured the rights for the entire world and that the price paid is one of the highest ever brought by a single negative.

They believe that the deal "also confirms the excellence of the selection plan, which is that the judgment of expert and experienced exhibitors be passed on subjects offered for purchase and only those which are approved by these critical scrutineers find their way to the circuit program. Such a plan completely eliminates weak subjects and is certain to result in one of the strongest film services known to the business.

"Mr. Brenon's name is one the circuit is proud to associate with its other leaders in the industry—his production will be handled in the way it deserves. Altogether the deal cannot help strengthening the position of both contracting parties."

The release date of "Empty Pockets" will be announced shortly.

"Empty Pockets," which is now being completed, was adapted for the screen by Mr. Brenon from Rupert Hughes's novel of that name. Bert Lytell, who played the title role in "The Lone Wolf," has the principal male role, while the cast numbers Barbara Castleton, Susan Willa, Katherine Galanta, Peggy Betts and other well-known players.

Poland Writes From Scenarioist's Standpoint

Joseph F. Poland, Who Has Contributed Many Screen Plays, Throws a New Light on That Phase of Industry

JOSEPH F. POLAND, scenario writer, who has given to the screen some of its best plays and has scenarioized many well known novels, throws a few side lights on this branch of the motion picture work in the following interview:

"In the movie-writing profession we have some advantages of training and some drawbacks. It remains to ask, 'Does it afford a sound basis for literary reputation?'

"The answer at present must be 'No.' We know that a well-known author or dramatist is sought after by movie concerns as a person capable of writing photoplays. But does a magazine or a producing manager ever 'go after' a screen writer with many original stories to his credit? Quite the contrary. They look askance at him, for he is a 'movie writer,' the popular misconception of him being a slave who grinds out hackneyed, or even purloined, plots at from thirty-five to fifty dollars a week. And anyone in moving pictures knows that this class of writer is practically non-existent.

"Some, or all, of these conditions may change. But at present they obtain. And the writer who is about to offer his pen to a writing profession should think the matter over carefully, considering all these things, before he enters the 'picture game.'

"He may decide to make first a literary reputation and then later go in for photoplay scenarios. And he will be strengthened in this if, in reviewing the field to day, he sees the great tendency to film the 'big books' and successful plays.

"But once choosing photoplay work, he will find it a fascinating game, as all of us do; a field where there is no place for quitters, or whiners, or inefficients—only for fighters.

"It's a great game."

Mr. Poland is not a stranger to the Manhattan studios, and among his most popular writings are "The Flower of Youth," "Patsy," "Miss Nobody," "Dimples, the Diplomat," "The Cloud," "Miss Deception," "The Action of Virtue," and the adaptation of "The Runaways," for Julia Sanderson; "Daughter of Maryland," for Edna Goodrich, and "The Beautiful Adventure," "My Wife" and "Please Help Emily," for Ann Murdock.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Hoffman, Inc., Grows Too Fast for Exchanges

The announcement was made last week by M. H. Hoffman, Inc., that so rapid has been the growth of the company through the demand of exhibitors for its pictures, that the extension of its exchanges has been made necessary. Planning, when the organization was formed late last Spring, to limit during the first year the number of Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges to ten, it has been found imperative, it is claimed, to meet the demand by establishing additional branches.

Jerome Abrams has been promoted from the position of division manager in Pennsylvania and adjacent territory, to assistant general manager of exchanges. Jack Greenberg, formerly assistant manager of the Fox Philadelphia offices, succeeds Mr. Abrams in charge of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange at 1325 Vine street, Philadelphia.

San Francisco will be operating Hoffman-Foursquare product within a very short time, and Portland (Oregon), starts next week. With these exchanges in operation, the total Hoffman-Foursquare offices will number eighteen.

France Play Shown to the Trade

"The Natural Law," produced by France Films, was given a trade showing last week. Marguerite Courtot, who is the star, has appeared in many productions, being featured by such producers as Mutual and Paramount. Other notables in the cast are Howard Hall, Jack Ellis, Lila Blow, Gordon Gray. Leah Pecok and Mr. France.

The strong cast and the exceptional advertising resulting from Al. Woods's presentation of the play on the stage should insure success o fthe highest order for "The Natural Law."

"Russian Revolution" Sold by Samuel Krellberg

Samuel Krellberg, president of the Overland Film Company, returned last week from a flying trip to Pittsburgh, where he sold his latest feature, "The Russian Revolution," to Joe P. Maloney for Western Pennsylvania. This picture has been sold to the Pioneer Feature Film Company for New York State and Northern New Jersey, it is announced, and negotiations are said to be pending for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey and Ohio.

Piedmont Buys Foreign Rights to "The Human Orchid"

In the last issue of the News it was announced that Sikawitt and Goldstein had purchased the foreign rights to "The Human Orchid," a five-reel state rights production to Piedmont Pictures Corporation. This was incorrect owing to a typographical error. Sikawitt and Goldstein sold the foreign rights to this production to the Piedmont Pictures Corporation. The News regrets this error.

Exposition Company Elects Brady as President

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was unanimously elected president of the Motion Picture Exposition Company at an organization meeting held October 25 by the board of directors of the latter association.

In addition to Mr. Brady, the following officers were elected: Lee A. Ochs, vice-president; J. H. Hallberg, vice-president; J. A. Berst, treasurer, and Louis F. Blumenthal, secretary. Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, was chosen general manager of the coming Motion Picture Exposition, scheduled for Grand Central Palace the week of February 2, next year. Samuel Grant, of Boston, will assist Mr. Elliott in the management, it was arranged. A reverse order of things was decided upon for the exposition to be held in Boston, in July, when Grant will be manager with Elliott assisting. As assistant managers for both the New York and Boston shows Fred H. Hartman and William Hilkemeier were chosen.

Ohio Theatre Joins Houses That Raise Price

The New Strand theatre at Marysville, O., has announced that fifteen cents admissions will be charged henceforward for adults, and ten cents for children, effective October 25. Matinee prices will be ten cents for adults and five for children. Two performances will be given each evening. Paramount, Triangle and Artcraft pictures are shown at the New Strand, the management of which informed the public of the raise through the following announcement: "The inevitable has come; the moving picture business is feeling the stress of special war taxes, as well as increased charges on the better grades of films, such as Marysville has been getting. In many other cities admission prices have been raised to twenty and twenty-five cents."

U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp. Launches Drive

Hall and Oldknow Combination Take Entire Floor in Times Building—System of Active Co-operation to Lend Aid to Exhibitor—First Feature Ready

FRANK HALL and William Oldknow who are the moving spirits in the organization of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, announce that a country-wide business drive in the interest of the new organization has been set in motion and that representatives of this organization are now working in all parts of the country, establishing exchanges and arranging details for the distribution of the organization's first release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," a Thomas Ince production. This production was given a trade showing at the Broadway theatre, Tuesday morning.

New York headquarters for the U. S. Corporation have been established in the Times Building, Times Square. The entire top floor has been reserved. It is also announced that distribution of this organization's productions will be handled in many of the larger cities by the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges. All of the Southern territory will be handled by Mr. Oldknow, who is one of the oldest exhibitors and exchange men in the South. Mr. Oldknow's headquarters will be in Atlanta, Ga. The Frank Gersten exchange will handle distribution in New Jersey. About twenty-five branches will be in operation.

A special representative will be stationed in each of the exchanges and it will be his duty to attend solely to the exploitation of the U. S. productions. Not only will he book the pictures but he will assist the exhibitor in the important work of promotion. A system of active co-operation by which the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation will lend special aid to exhibitors in exploiting its films is now engaging the attention of advertising experts.

The work of organizing the sales forces in the Western territory is in charge of Joseph Partridge, one time general manager of the V-L-S-E in New York, and later affiliated with the Triangle Distributing Corporation. Mr. Partridge is now on a tour of the Western division and will place U. S. representatives in all of the exchanges west of Philadelphia. He will visit Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Columbus and Toledo. He will arrange also for trade showings of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

Trade showings will take place this week in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Boston, and in other Western cities next week. Trade showings of "Those Who Pay," starring Bessie Barriscale, the second of the U. S. pictures will follow. No release date for either production has yet been announced. No bookings are being accepted in advance of the trade showings.

The assembling of the distribution forces in New York and elsewhere in the East is in the hands of Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of the new concern, who will have his headquarters in the main office in New York. Mr. Card will devote his attention principally to the development of the Metropolitan territory.

Plans for a nation-wide advertising campaign are being formulated by experts to assist exhibitors throughout the country in exploiting "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," and the subsequent releases of the corporation. Arrangements have been made with a well-known agency for the placing of large advertisements heralding the new Ince production in newspapers in all of the large cities in which the U. S. branches are located. These ads will appear daily for a week in advance of the trade showings. Coupled with these ads, which will be designed to "catch" the theatre-going public, will be another publicity drive in the trade publications, so that the exhibitors will have the double benefit of public and trade advertising. Similar campaigns are contemplated for all subsequent U. S. releases.

"It is the idea of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation," said Mr. Hall, president and general manager of the new enterprise, "to give the exhibitor every possible co-operation in the exploitation of our productions. Our initial release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," is a particularly timely subject and excellent promotion material.

"With Zeppelins again in action on the west front in Europe public interest is centered more than ever before upon these giant dirigibles. Therefore, we believe that it is up to us to let the public know that our picture presents for the first time on the screen the Zep in actual operation. We do not intend to let our relations with exhibitors cease after the renting of our pictures."

In addition to the trade and newspaper advertising it is also the intention of the new corporation to bombard the public from billboards throughout the country. A twenty-four sheet litho depicting the destruction of a Zeppelin in mid air has been prepared and soon will occupy boards throughout the country.

Where is Thomas Figee?

W. F. Figee, chief engineer for the Spray Engineering Company, 93 Federal Street, Boston, Mass., is desirous of locating his brother, Thomas Figee, who has been associated as a "Rough Rider" with several of the film concerns at the coast for the past five or six years.

Fort Pitt Company Opens Exchange

The Fort Pitt Theatre Company, of Pittsburgh, of which William Moore Patch is president and managing director, has opened a New York exchange in the Godfrey building, on the seventh floor.

The Fort Pitt Theatre Company is directing the tour of the Italian war pictures throughout the United States, and from this new exchange, New York State, Northern New Jersey and Long Island will be handled.

Samuel Pelzman, who has been connected with the Universal Company for years, has been made manager of this exchange.

Motion Picture Division of the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund

Total to date.....$326.99

A SPLENDID patriotic opportunity is given to every American exhibitor to be of some use to our soldiers in France. They want "smokes" more than anything you can send them. Motion Picture News, which is the official organ of the campaign, urges all exhibitors to place receptacles in their lobbies, for the collection of coins and packages of cigarettes.

No cigarettes can be accepted except in original packages and on which the revenue stamp has not been broken. This is an order from the Government.

How to Go About It

1. Send to Motion Picture News for a card, inviting your patrons to drop pennies and packages of cigarettes into the bowl or box provided.
2. Arrange with the commissary department of your nearest cantonment for distributing (unbroken) packages of cigarettes. In case you have superfluous packages send them directly to Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.
3. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check sent weekly to Motion Picture News. For every 25 cents you collect, you will receive a postal of thanks direct from the trenches. For example: If you contribute $10, you will receive 40 postcards of thanks direct from the trenches in France. These should be displayed in your lobby, photographed for slides or sent out to your mailing list.

In and Out of Town

Fred C. Quimby, formerly branch manager for Pathe interests on the coast, now representing Jensen and Von Herbert, who control the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Idaho, Montana, Washington and Oregon, arrived in New York last week. Mr. Quimby will look at current productions offered on the independent market. He is stopping at Hotel Astor. He will return to Seattle, Wash., next week.

Joseph F. Lee, exploitation and sales manager for Charles Rankin, who owns the rights to "A Modern Lorelei," left New York last week for a trip through the South to arrange for the exploitation of Mr. Rankin's picture.

Edward O'Donnell returned from Chicago last week, where he showed to the Chicago trade Sidney Olcott's late production, "The Belgian."

E. W. Hammond, Educational Films, returned from Washington, D. C., where he spent a few days in the interest of his company.

H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of Triangle Distributing Corporation, returned to New York last week after two months' absence, during which time he has been in Culver City, Cal., superintending various improvements on the Triangle Studios and carrying out his plans of reconstruction in different branches of the Triangle organization.

J. J. Allen, Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Toronto, Canada, left New York last week for Toronto after several days' stay in the city, in which time he negotiated for purchase of the Canadian rights to Frank Seng's picture, "Parentage." Mr. Allen took with him a print of this production and much advertising material.

Drama League Executive Praises "Splendid Silent Drama"

C. H. Gifford, executive secretary of the Drama League of America, writing from the National headquarters, Washington, D. C., to Benjamin Chapin, whose studio at Ridgefield Park, N. J., he visited the week previous.

"I am not an expert on what constitutes a good motion picture entertainment; and my very pleasant visit to Mr. Chapin was all too brief to enable me to adequately discuss the merits of the Lincoln story.

"Permit me to say, however, that through his genius in arranging the story, his devotion to the subject treated and his absolute refusal to be contented with nothing but the best, even in the minutest detail of studio equipment, Mr. Chapin has made a lasting contribution in this splendid silent drama."

Seat Tax Does Not Agitate West Coast Exhibitors

San Francisco Theatre Managers Decide to Maintain Old Prices and Collect War Revenue—Straight Raise of Five Cents Is Decided Upon in Seattle—Denver Will Probably Follow Suit—Portland Does Record Business Regardless of Increase

THE San Francisco film theatres have decided to maintain the old prices of admission and collect the war taxes for the government. This decision was reached at a meeting and luncheon of the United Motion Pictures Industry of Northern California, in the Palace Hotel, October 23, when resolutions to act in accord with the combination and vaudeville houses were adopted. These other theatres, represented by the Allied Theatrical Managers, had the previous day concluded to make no raise of rates.

LOUIS REICHERT of the Metro Exchange presided at the meeting in the Palace, with Norman Eisner as secretary. Eugene Roth, of the Portola and California theatres, and J. A. Partington, of the Imperial theatre, were appointed a committee to confer with the theatrical managers and take any action necessary in establishing a uniform system for the collection of the tax. Only one manager advocated a raise in prices.

AMONG the film men present at the conference in addition to those already named were: Sol L. Lesser, Louis R. Lurie and Myrt T. Blum of the Rialto, Fred Dahnken, Secretary R. E. Johnson of Turner and Dahnken, William J. Citron of the Fox Exchange, Herman Wobber of Paramount, Irving Ackerman, representing the vaudeville and picture houses; Greenfield and Kahn, New Fillmore and New Mission; Emil Kehrlein of the Kinema, Oakland; Karski, Oppenheimer and Levy of the Royal, Sol Pincus of the Imperial, Rex Midgeley of the American theatre, Oakland; Managers Schmidt of the General Film Company and Simpson of the Triangle, and Managers Mix of the St. Francis, Gosliner of the Edison, Smith of Palo Alto, and Beatty of San Jose.

ALTHOUGH some of the Oakland managers attended the Palace meeting, they did not subscribe to the no-raise policy for their own houses. On the contrary, they had already made increases. The four leading film theatres in Oakland adopted a new scale of prices on October 22, the plan to go into effect with the beginning of November. These are: The Kinema, Emil Kehrlein, proprietor and manager, which has raised the prices from 5, 15 and 25 to 10, 20 and 25; the Franklin, owned by F. Kruger, from 10 and 15 to 15 and 20; the American, Rex Midgeley, owner, and the new T. and D., same schedule and change as the Franklin. These theatres will, of course, pay the tax. The smaller houses on the east side of the bay, of which fifty-two are represented in the Alameda County League, seem divided as to the policy they should adopt, but with a general tendency toward higher rates.

"THE public will accept the higher rates, there is no question about that," said Manager Kehrlein of the Kinema to a representative of the Motion Picture News. "We are putting slides in all the theatres giving full information in regard to the tax. We are telling our patrons about the tax of fifteen cents per reel that we have to pay on the film and the graduated tax on our seating capacity in addition. We are showing them that we give a program which is very expensive, as we run ten reels, and that for similar pictures much higher rates are charged elsewhere. The people know that they are getting far more than the worth of their money, and I do not think there will be any complaint."

PICTURE theatres in San Francisco are expected to benefit somewhat at the expense of the high-priced dramatic houses. A theatre charging two dollars will be compelled to collect a tax of twenty cents on each ticket, which is fully the average price of admission to a first-class picture theatre.

AT several preliminary conferences of film men, Turner and Dahnken favored a plan of paying the tax for the patrons without any increase of rates, though they readily agreed to the adoption of the majority plan.

Advanced Prices Make Record Business

A RECORD business under advanced prices is the Portland answer to the wails of many exhibitors that the public will not pay an additional five cents for film entertainment.

WHILE November 1 was the day set for the general advance of admission prices in Portland and throughout Oregon, the Liberty and Columbia theatres, the two Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Portland advanced from 15 to 20 cents on Sunday, October 21. At the Liberty, where William S. Hart was the attraction in "The Narrow Trail," all records for that 2,000-seat house were broken. At the Columbia, where Norma Talmadge held forth in "Poppy," business was unusually good. And this record was made in the face of such competition as "Jack and the Beanstalk" at the Majestic and Charlie Chaplin in "The Adventurer" at the Star.

PRICES for children in the downtown first-run houses have been advanced 100 per cent, or from five to ten cents. For several months the first-run price has been fifteen cents, against a ten-cent matinee and fifteen-cent evening and Sunday price for more than a year prior to that.

THROUGHOUT Oregon, where the 15-cent admission has generally prevailed, the jump was to 20 cents on November 1, when the 10 per cent government war tax on admissions went into effect. The few 25-cent houses did not advance, but they may go five cents higher within a few weeks.

The Portland suburban houses, most of which had been at ten cents, advanced to fifteen.

THE status of the 5-cent houses is still a matter of conjecture, or was when this was written. Several of them, notably the Circle and New Grand, are expected to maintain at least a 10-cent Sunday figure, with a better program offering on that day, while there is considerable talk of a drive on the part of the first-run houses against the exchanges to force the nickel houses to a universal 10-cent charge.

THE experience of the Portland houses in the advance to 15 cents under conditions more nearly normal proved so satisfactory that exhibitors are confident that any falling off in business occasioned by the 20-cent price will be adjusted within a few weeks.

EXHIBITORS refused to admit for weeks that there was a possibility of an increase over 15 cents, the general interpretation of the revenue bill being that the theatre must force payment from the public in the shape of a 2-cent extra charge at the box office. With the news that the exhibitor might pay the tax came the sudden shift to a unanimous agreement for a 5-cent jump to cover other taxes and increased cost of general operation.

Five Cent Increase Planned in Seattle

SEATTLE photoplay houses are patriotic, at least. That is, one should say, if the raise that the moving picture theatres are planning to cover the 10 per cent dividend can be called patriotism. For the rise is inevitable.

NOVEMBER 1 the straight raise of five cents on every price will be made. This means that all theatres charging ten cents for their pictures will then charge fifteen; all houses showing pictures at fifteen cents will raise to twenty; the few that demand twenty will ask twenty-five cents. At last we will have seen the passing showing of the 10-cent movie house and the forerunner of the steady rise of prices.

BUT even this does not seem to cause fear to photoplay managers and exchanges. In Seattle the motion picture theatre is the most popular. The three larger theatres are busy daily and packed, crowded, turning away thousands, Sunday. Some weeks are better than others, reason the actor or actress, but the favorites are frequent, and eagerly attended.

NOT only the motion picture houses are raising prices, but the vaudeville and speaking stage in Seattle will on that same date demand a 10 per cent raise.

Nickel Raise in Denver Likely

DENVER exhibitors have not yet reached any decision as to the proper method of collecting the war tax of 10 per cent on gross receipts. A few exhibitors in territory tributary to Denver have already announced a nickel raise in the price of admission, and this action has met with no advance protest. It is believed that this action is the only really feasible solution of the problem, especially in so far as it concerns the larger houses with heavy expenses. A meeting will soon be held to determine what action will be taken. It goes without saying that the public will cheerfully abide by whatever ruling is made by the exhibitors.

Lannon Includes Oregon

JACK LANNON, president of the Greater Features Company of Seattle, and distributor for the Northwest of some of the biggest film features in the United States, is enlarging his activity to include the Oregon territory. On a recent trip to Portland, where he was the guest of J. J. Parker, managing owner of the Majestic theatre and treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, Mr. Lannon booked "The Mormon Maid" with Mr. Parker.

Jack Lannon, President Greater Features Company, Seattle

In addition to "The Mormon Maid" Mr. Lannon, who is one of the most popular film men on the Pacific Coast, controls in that territory such pictures as "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour," "Where Are My Children?" and a film version of Dante's "Inferno."

Mr. Lannon's productions are not confined to dramas, however, for he is distributing the comedies made by Al Christie in Los Angeles.

We are enjoying a large part of the motion picture business of this city.

WHY

First— Because we offer fourteen hours of excellent banking service, from eight in the morning until ten in the evening, which affords an unusual convenience for all depositors who are busily engaged during the usual banking hours.

Second—Because we appreciate the worth of, and try to promote the welfare of the motion picture business.

Third— Because our many satisfied depositors bring their friends to the bank, who, in turn, become satisfied depositors.

Fourth—Because all of the stock of this bank is owned by The Citizens National Bank, the total resources of both banks being over twenty-five million.

Film Reports from Seattle, Oregon and Other Points

SELECT PICTURES BOOK WELL

MANAGER ROSENBERG, of the Select Pictures Corporation Exchange, reports Salesman B. O. Keller on the road going through Oregon closing contracts everywhere he stops. For instance, the following are doing splendidly; Clara Kimball Young in "Shirley Kaye"; Alice Brady in "Her Silent Sacrifice"; Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country"; Eva Tanguay in "Wild Girl"; "Public Be Dammed," with Mary Fuller and Charles Richman, and "Over There," authorized by George Cohan, with Anna Q. Nilsson and Charles Richman taking the leads.

All Select pictures are booked at the two Seattle theatres, Coliseum and Liberty, as fast as they arrive.

LEONHARDT PAYS VISIT TO GOLDWYN

GOLDWYN EXCHANGE had a visit during the week of October 17 from Harry Leonhardt, general Western manager of this corporation. "Freedom of the World," the newest and finest of Goldwyn features, is having good bookings, he reported. Manager Hill, of the Seattle Exchange, expressed his delight in Goldwyn's rising success by saying that the Seattle Exchange is unable to keep up with the demand of their films.

"NARROW TRAIL" SHOWN AT LIBERTY

"BILL" Hart in "The Narrow Trail," his first appearance under the Artcraft banner, opened at the Liberty theatre October 2, with raised admission prices. Both Sunday afternoon and evening crowds thronged the streets hoping for admittance. It was reported that at least one thousand were turned away in the afternoon; the same in the evening. It is recognized that "Bill" Hart is a Seattle favorite.

HAMRICK TO ERECT THEATRE

SEATTLE is to have another new photoplay theatre, whose policy will be "catering to the select." This newest bidder for patronage is the Little theatre, and is located on Pike street, one block nearer the city than the Coliseum. John Hamrick, the well-known theatrical man, is the owner and manager. He is also manager of the Seattle Rex photoplay house.

FIRST-run Triangle productions and Keystone comedy will be shown at the beautiful new playhouse. Everything about this theatre is of the best, and it will undoubtedly occupy a prominent place in amusement circles. "Broadway, Arizona," featuring Olive Thomas will open the new house.

"BATTLE OF ARRAS" SHOWN AT ORPHEUM

"THE BATTLE OF ARRAS," photographed by Pathe, the proceeds from the use of which is to go to various organizations active in war relief was played during the week of October 28 in conjunction with the regular bill of Orpheum Circuit Vaudeville. It will continue for six weeks, two reels appearing weekly.

LATHROP VISITS SEATTLE

CAPTAIN A. E. LATHROP, of Cordova, Alaska, owner and controller of all photoplay houses of Cordova, Seward, Valdez and Anchorage, was a Seattle visitor during the two weeks of October 17 to 31. While in Seattle he was concerned with the signing of new film features and closing of contracts for the future welfare of Alaska theatregoers. He was most optimistic over his theatre business in the North, and was more so after his trip to this city.

OTHERS who have been recent guests of Seattle interested in the motion picture business include Joe Lucas, of Centralia, owner of the Grand theatre, of that city, and J. J. Parker, of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore.

THE Theatre Supply Corporation in Seattle is unable to keep Motiographs on its local floor space. And the manager's assistant seemed rather disturbed at this. Up to the present time the eight machines ordered to fill floor space have all been spoken for—two sold outright.

MRS. VERNON CASTLE in "Stranded in Arcady" is the newest of Pathe offerings, and the exclusive rights have been given to the Strand theatre of Seattle, because Manager George Endert believes this theatre will give Pathe pictures better care than others in the city.

THE first feature, with Mrs. Castle, opened Saturday, October 20. The same film has been booked with the Clemmer theatre, Spokane, beginning November 1. With this announcement Pathe also adds its new stars, Bryant Washburn, Fanny Ward, Bessie Love, Frank Keenan and Pearl White. Manager George Endert is very optimistic as to the future of Pathe in the Northwest, and from the inquiries coming in everything points toward success.

SEATTLE photoplay managers and a few newspaper people had the honor of being at a luncheon given by Pathe Exchange, Inc., at the New Washington Hotel in honor of N. S. Kaplan, of the Russian Art Corporation and representative of the famous Moscow Art theatre, and his wife. Several motion picture representatives from other States were also present.

Mr. and Mrs. Kaplan left Vancouver October 25 to continue in Moscow the production of film features for Pathe. With their party went an American cameraman and laboratory manager, giving assurance of the best that can be produced in Russian and American photoplays.

"WHO'S YOUR NEIGHBOR?" began its second week run at the Rex theatre October 21. It is running under raised prices for admission.

"THE MORMON MAID," controlled in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana by the Greater Features Film Company, of Seattle, plays at the Clemmer theatre, Seattle, during the week of November 10, at increased prices. Bookings are big on this feature in these States.

AL ROSENBERG, secretary of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, of Seattle, returned October 22 from a three weeks' tour of the Northwest States booking "Redemption" and "Narrow Trail." Everywhere these two productions found the best in prices and went "strong."

A. W. EDEN, branch manager of Fox Features, has just signed up Fox features with the American theatre in Butte, Mont. He also has signed a second release for Annette Kellermann's "Daughter of the Gods" for some time in December.

E. H. GOWEN, who was formerly a salesman with the Johnson Chair Company, has been taken on the Triangle Distributing Corporation force as agent.

THE Johnson Chair Company is doing business! Of course, that is to be supposed, but when dealing with Seattle moving theatre owners, Manager Johnston has found it impossible to sell arc controllers. Along comes the monthly motion picture meeting of the Northwest, and with it Fred Mercy, of North Yakima, who this last week decided that the best thing for "his back Home" was two arc controllers. Now he has gone back to install them.

ANOTHER bit of salesmanship interesting to the Johnson Company was the arriving of R. R. Pratch, of South Tacoma, owner of the Idle Hour theatre, who purchased a Power's 6-A machine. Somewhere in the books there is also the selling of 250 theatre chairs to Mat Matson, of Wilkeson, owner of the only theatre in that part of the country.

OREGON EXHIBITORS REFUSE TO PAY TAX

THE members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon have flatly refused to pay the 15-cent per reel charge assessed by the Portland film exchanges against each rented reel. Each exchange has been furnished with a copy of a letter to this effect, the exhibitors contending that it is up to the manufacturers to pay their own film tax as their contribution to the war fund to be raised by the special revenue bill.

"BACK-TO-NATURE" MAN IN PICTURES

JOE KNOWLES, the "back to nature man," is going to make a wild animal picture at Seaview, Washington. Knowles is known throughout the country for his many stunts of invading the woods, minus clothes, food or weapons and emerging after several months clothed in animal skins.

KNOWLES has made one or two animal pictures, and backed by this experience hopes to get some unusual pictures of animals in their haunts in the high woods of the Oregon-Washington coast.

THE LIBERTY TO GIVE ORGAN RECITALS

THE Liberty organ recitals which are to be entertainment features of each Sunday in the big Portland house are meeting with an enthusiastic reception from music lovers. Albert Hay Malotte, one of the best known young organists in the West, renders a special program each Sunday from 12.30 to 1 o'clock.

VON HERBERG BUYS $100,000 BONDS

J. G. VON HERBERG, of Jensen and Von Herberg, owners of the Liberty and Columbia theatres, in Portland, dropped into town during the last days of the Liberty Loan drive and subscribed $100,000 to the loan. It is understood that the same amount was subscribed in Seattle.

COLLADAY ON TRIP IN NORTHWEST

G. M. COLLADAY, special representative for Vitagraph, is in the Northwest for a six weeks' stay, handling the William Duncan-Carol Holladay serial, "The Fighting Trail."

WINSTOCK REPORTS BIG BOOKING

MELVIN G. WINSTOCK, of Winstock & Schlaifer, is experiencing much success in booking his products in the Oregon territory. This firm owns four pictures in the Northwest, "Idle Wives," "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," "The Woman and the Beast" and "War's Women." It also handles a score of other features, 100 reels of scenic subjects and 40 reels of comedies. The Lampman Film Exchange material and Pallay Features subjects are distributed by Winstock and Schlaifer.

THE Majestic theatre of Portland has supplanted its boy ushers with girls and all are bedecked in handsome new uniforms of black broadcloth and gold stripes.

THE Orpheum, Grand and Empire theatres at Baker City, Ore., have been completely remodeled under the direction of J. P. Cotter, owner and manager. New equipment throughout has been installed, with a new pipe organ in the Orpheum. Contracts for the entire Artcraft, Paramount and Fox output have been made. The three houses have a combined seating capacity of 1,275, in a population of 8,000.

"Amazons" proved the biggest recent attraction in Baker City, where Marguerite Clark is a big favorite.

Co-operation between exchange and exhibitor, with the employment of competent exchange help, is sadly needed, Cotter declares, to eliminate endless errors and waste. "If exchanges would employ competent help," he states, "an exhibitor would have time to devote to his own business; as it is, he devotes the greater part to adjustment of errors occurring in the exchanges."

HALVERSON REOPENS HIPPODROME

HENRY HALVERSON has reopened the Hippodrome theatre at Shedd, Ore., and anticipates an unusually good season.

SLIPPER USES MOTIOGRAPH AND BAIRD MACHINES

IN order to better demonstrate equipment to prospective purchasers, the J. Slipper and Company projecting room is being fitted with Motiograph and Baird projecting machines, and a Hertner Transverter. The projecting room is a commercial one where exchanges give trade showings. The installation of the projecting machinery, which the firm is distributor for, enables them to give the best possible sales demonstration.

PARKER ENTERTAINS KIDDIES

J. J. PARKER, manager-owner of the Majestic, was host to nearly a thousand poor kiddies of Portland at a special morning matinee performance of "Jack and the Beanstalk."

MRS. LEITER INSTALLS ORGAN

MRS. O. C. LEITER has dedicated a handsome new pipe organ in her Arcade theatre, at La Grande, Ore. The theatre has been remodeled and a new lighting system installed. This theatre is one of the most successful houses of the State.

Activities in San Francisco, Salt Lake and Ogden

JEWELL THEATRE IS OPENED WITH "MANXMAN"

OPENING with Hall Caine's "The Manxman," Christie Comedies and other features, the new Jewel theatre in San Francisco, on Market street near Seventh, made its first bid for public favor on Saturday, October 27. H. D. Pressey, L. D. Graeter and Frederick M. Gibbs are the owners, with Mr. Gibbs, who has had years of experience as a Market street film manager, in charge of the enterprise. The Jewel is a pretty theatre, extending from Market street to Jessie, and th pictures are given a longer projection than in any other theatre of the city. A dazzling electric sign is jewel-shaped, and covered with glittering mirrored surfaces. There is an onyx stairway from the entrance to the loge section which contains 230 chairs.

VISITORS on Film Row, San Francisco, during the past week, were: L. F. Williams, Unique theatre, Santa Cruz; J. Langley, Vallejo theatre, Vallejo; A. M. Schuman, Gem theatre, Pleasanton; George F. Madson, Bell theatre, Lovermore; Charles Fraler, Arlington theatre, Tracy; W. R. Spalding, Visalia theatre, Visalia; Theodore Keech, Liberty theatre, Fresno; H. C. Schmidt, Marquee theatre, Palo Alto; Charles Goddard, J Street theatre, Sacramento; C. C. Carring, Rose theatre, Santa Rosa; Gus Johnson, Star theatre, Newman; F. G. Meismer, M .and N. theatre, Healdsburg; Frank Burgi, Fairyland theatre, Willows; District Manager Jensen, of the World Exchange; W. S. Webster, Strand at Woodland, and Auditorium at Dunsmuir; Harry Stark, Opal theatre, Hollister; C. Unger, Unger's Opera House, Sumner.

George M. Mann, district manager of Triangle, has gone to Los Angeles.

THE Imperial theatre, at San Francisco, booked the Leon F. Douglas motion pictures in natural colors for first public showing, presenting them during the week beginning October 28. These pictures show Yosemite Valley, Niagara Falls, with the rainbows at midday, forest fires, scenes in the conservatory at Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, bringing out the colors of the flowers, a Golden Gate sunset, and some patriotic subjects with vivid displays of the Red, White and Blue. Among the players in the color films are Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Ruth Stonehouse and Louise Huff.

INVITATIONS for the opening of the California theatre on Thursday evening, November 1, were in great demand, and patrons eagerly booked seats in the reserved section. These seats sold at 50 cents, and are the first to be taken.

CHARLES ROSENTHAL, JR., associated with E. B. Mayer in the Mayer and Rosenthal Exchange, has gone to New York on a business trip. He is accompanied by Mrs. Rosenthal.

THE Turner and Dahnken Circuit has purchased the Perfection franchise for the Tivoli, in San Francisco, and also for its Hanford, Watsonville, Richmond, San Jose and Berkeley houses.

Dr. John A. McNear, Jr., manager of the Petaluma Opera House and the Mystic theatre, at Petaluma, has returned from an Eastern trip.

Salesman C. I. Luntz, home from a Coast tour, reports business good everywhere.

MANAGER COHEN, of the George Kleine System, has been making a record during the past week with bookings all over San Francisco. He has been running Bryant Washburn in "Filling His Own Shoes" and Shirley Mason in "The Apple-Tree Girl" at the St. Francis, Mary McAlister in "Pants" at the Tivoli, "Law of the North" at the Mayo, "One Touch of Nature" at the Wigwam, and "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" at the Queen.

E. A. SERVISS has bought the liberty theatre, Marysville, succeeding K. C. Adelburg, who has taken a lease of the Pantages theatre at Seattle.

The Pride theatre, at Monterey, owned by H. Von Protz, has closed temporarily.

George Keats will manage the Liberty theatre, Fresno.

Lucius Freitas, who owns the Stockton theatre, is reported to be improving in health at a sanitarium in Colfax.

THE Maze theatre, at Stockton, has been transferred from H. Wilson to James W. Barlow. The later was an early San Francisco exhibitor, and for some time has been handling state right features.

L. G. Dolliver, business agent of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, is going East.

Gilbert Moyle, traveling man for Pathe, has gone to Los Angeles.

J. D. FARLOW, of Londer, Wyom., is in San Francisco, assembling the film of a big coyote and wolf drive taken in Wyoming wilds. In the picture are shown fully 1,500 wild horses, 1,000 coyotes, 150 wolves and 2,000 Indians.

The Garden theatre at Burlingame is to open in the middle of December. It is being erected by W. P. Archibald, who owns the Strand at Los Gatos.

DONALD B. SMITH has resigned his position as booker for the Progressive Motion Picture Company, to join the Three Hundred and Sixteenth Field Battalion of the Signal Corps at American Lake, Wash. Mr. Smith had served with Progressive for several years, and had become very popular with his associates, who, on his departure, presented him with an expensive wrist watch.

TAYLOR IS HOUSE MANAGER OF THE AMERICAN

THE theatrical and motion picture fraternity of Salt Lake City, Utah, is welcoming a newcomer this week in the person of James P. Taylor, newly-appointed house manager for the American theatre, who has just assumed his duties.

MR. TAYLOR has a long record of achievements in the theatrical business. As long ago as 1877 he was associated with Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence, when that couple were playing in "The Ticket of Leave Man." Since then he has traveled all over the country with theatrical productions, but of late years has been connected with the motion picture industry in New York City.

MR. TAYLOR is a brother-in-law of Ernest C. Ward, who produced and directed the big motion picture, "The Man Without a Country."

PANTAGES THEATRE WILL BE IN HEART OF CITY

PLANS for a new Pantages theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah, were considered last week at a conference between the architect and Manager Frank R. Newman. A central location has been secured, and the building to be erected will be one of the handsomest in the West, it is reported.

THE lease on the present theatre property now housing the Pantages Circuit Vaudeville in Salt Lake City still has two years to run. Work on the new structure will star January 1, it was announced.

"SPIRIT OF '17" EXCITES INTEREST IN SALT LAKE

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, theatregoers are looking forward with interest to the production at the Paramount-Empress theatre in that city of "The Spirit of '17," to be produced by the Paramount company and written by Judge Willis Brown, first judge of the Salt Lake juvenile court, and now a resident of Chicago and judge of the juvenile court there. Jack Pickford has been cast for the leading role in this new production.

STANLEY LEAVES PROGRAM FOR STATE RIGHTS

JAMES J. STANLEY, who has for the past two months handled the business end of the Mutual Exchange in Salt Lake City, Utah, will in the near future sever his connections with that concern and branch out in the state rights field. Stanley has a very flattering proposition to handle several large state right pictures in western territory. Since joining the Mutual forces Stanley has been the means of securing much new business for the concern in the Intermountain West.

FAIRBANKS AIDS LOAN IN SALT LAKE

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS was given a great reception by Salt Lake City, Utah, people on October 23, when he stepped off the train at the Mormon capital, and delivered an address on how to make "American dollars whip the Kaiser and make the world safe for democracy." Fairbanks was received by a committee comprising the Liberty Loan Board and Governor Simon Bamberger.

ADVERTISING SOLVES PATRONAGE PROBLEM FOR OGDEN MAN

SUGGESTIONS to managers of theatres in out of the way places, or on streets where traffic is too heavy, are made in a letter from H. E. Skinner, general manager of the Alhambra Theatre Company, at Ogden, Utah. This house is out of the beach tract, and all business must be drawn there by advertising, or other inducements, and Mr. Skinner has had a very interesting time in putting the theatre on a strictly paying basis. But he now has people coming there, and the business is reported very good.

"ONE of the first things I did was to put in an automobile checking feature, with special watchman to see that joy riders did not bother the cars. I directed a strong campaign for the patronage of children, being careful not to drive away adults, for I thought that if I could bring the kiddies I would also get the other people. It took considerable pounding, but the business finally won. One of the most successful business-getting innovations was the introduction of a fish pond. This provides each child who comes to the theatre with a souvenir by fishing it from a fountain in the lobby. I use this Saturday afternoon, and it creates a lot of enthusiasm."

"ANOTHER successful medium for inducing people to read my printed matter is the insertion in the folder occasionally of a coupon which entitles the bearer to tickets on a certain date. This feature, investigation has proven to me, has given me almost one hundred per cent. efficiency in the matter of getting attention from prospective patrons when the folders are mailed to them."

THE Alhambra theatre has a seating capacity of twenty-one hundred and is equipped with a twenty-thousand-dollar Kimball pipe organ. The building is fire-proof throughout and fitted with a very good ventilating device. Ogden has a population of approximately 30,000.

OGDEN MANAGERS LEAD FIGHT IN TRAFFIC DISCRIMINATION

THEATRE managers in Ogden, Utah, have led the fight of the city's business men to stop alleged discrimination against Ogden in electric interurban train service.

SALT LAKE CITY and Ogden are connected by the Bamberger Electric Railway. Between the two cities are a score of prosperous communities. Residents of these communities may throw their patronage to Ogden or Salt Lake as they see fit.

BUT the last train each evening departed from Salt Lake at 11:45 p. m. and the last train from Ogden at 10:30 o'clock.

MOTION picture men and others in Ogden declared that Salt Lake was getting more patronage than Ogden because the residents in the interurban communities had plenty of time to attend theatres in Salt Lake and get trains for their home, while in Ogden the early departure of the last electric train necessitated too much rush.

SMALL THEATRES HOLD THEIR OWN

THAT the day of small theatres, with capacities for handling 200 or 300 spectators each, has not passed, even though the immense theatres are competing, is disclosed by the success that Stanley Stek of Ogden, Utah, has attained.

STECK operates three small theatres—the Cozy, the Lyceum and the Rex. He fills them every night he operates. By picking the best re-run offered, keeping his theatres clean, and using short new pictures with lively human interest, he pleases a large class of Ogden's thirty thousand persons.

BIG FILMS OUT OF REACH OF SMALL EXHIBITORS

THE releasing companies have put the price out of reach of the extremely small town exhibitor on the worth-while subjects, according to W. E. Johnson of the Jewel theatre at Clark's Fork, Idaho. Mr. Johnson's house is located in a town of 250 and has a seating capacity of 150. He has attempted to give his patrons the best films on the market, but in all instances save one he reports he failed to come out alive.

RAHSPBERRIES

The P is Silent as in Pfillum

Blossoms——Fruit——Briars

This department has been inaugurated with the idea of letting readers know the estimation in which the West Coast Edition of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is held by exhibitors. It is a kind of "Bouquet Column" to catch the pleasant things people say about us. When these little tokens of esteem are thrown at us from time to time we shall—with all becoming modesty—hoist them aloft for the admiring gaze of everybody. Sometimes a briar might be found in the "bouquet," but what's a thorn, more or less, between friends! Each item is short, you will notice. There is a reason. We can grasp just so many more of these good-nature ticklers in our hands at once, for public inspection. Here is a handful for the indulgent reader.

"TELL the reader all you know," advises H. S. Graham, Clermont theatre, Winchester, Idaho. You forget the censorship, Mr. Graham.

"THE screen examinations, music cues and talks in Motion Picture News are most helpful," is the word from the Arctic theatre at Nez Perce, Idaho. "These are the only things many of the small town men have to give them on ideas regarding many plays."

"WE are sending our subscription herewith. It looks good to us." J. R. Linn & Sons, managers, the Crawford theatre, Carlsbad, N. M.

"GIVE us the plain, unvarnished truth and not play for big advertising," says E. O'Keefe, manager of the Regent theatre, Billings, Mont. Help yourself, from cover to cover, E. O'Keefe.

"THE Motion Picture News is O. K." John Larson, Empress theatre, Hope, Idaho.

"YOUR magazine is very good, especially the section on novel advertising," postals Ralph Gwynne, the Art theatre, Longmont, Colo.

West Coast Exhibitors

THE new Rialto theatre, at Fullerton, California, has been opened by Manager Wilbur, who used the Fox picture, "Jack and the Beanstalk," for his opening attraction.

SINCE the introduction of the Fox Standard Program, Manager Brown of the Majestic theatre, at Boise, Idaho, has changed the policy of his house to two changes of program weekly instead of four. The Standard Pictures are shown four days and the Fox Specials three days each week.

THE new Liberty theatre, at Fresno, California, built by Beatty and Keith, is to be opened about the middle of November with "Jack and the Beanstalk" as the attraction and the management has booked all Fox Standard and special feature releases. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of approximately twelve hundred. It occupies a strictly fireproof building, patterned after the Rialto theatre of New York. A feature of the house is a deep balcony with inclines leading to its several entrances. A big pipe organ has been purchased for the theatre.

MANAGER JAMES CLEMMER of the Clemmer theatre, at Seattle, has been meeting with great success since the policy was adopted for the showing of Fox Standard Pictures. At the same time the first of these releases was shown at the Clemmer the management increased the prices to 10, 15 and 20 cents, and has continued with increasing business regardless of the other theatres retaining the former prices of 10 and 15 cents. Manager Clemmer makes a feature of his Russian symphony orchestra, which now consists of eighteen people.

MESSRS. JOHNSON and Sharp will shortly open a new theatre, to be named the Isis, at Ojai, California. This town was formerly known as Nordoff, and when it was destroyed by fire the citizens renamed it before rebuilding.

AN unusual testimony has been received by Manager Robert Poole of the Laughlin theatre, at Long Beach, California, the chief executive of the city having written congratulating Poole on the booking of the Fox Standard Pictures. Standard subjects are each shown five days and the remander of the program is made up every other week of a Fox Special subject, and every other week a Goldwyn release.

ONE of the biggest newspaper advertising campaigns put on in Los Angeles for any film is that which will be inaugurated by the Superba theatre concerning the showing of "The Co-Respondent." Half and quarter page ads. will be carried in all of the six Los Angeles newspapers daily for several days preceding the initial showing.

M. D. HOWE, who has the Temple Hippodrome motion picture theatre at Santa Ana, has leased the Grand Opera House of that city and will use it for the exhibition of larger than program subjects and for an occasional road show.

EIGHT STORY FILM BUILDING PLANNED FOR LOS ANGELES

THERE is considerable agitation on the part of Los Angeles real estate owners for the erection of a building between Eighth and Ninth streets on Olive to fit the needs of the accessory dealers and film exchanges. This is to consist of eight stories and of a Class A type, being fireproof throughout. The building plans provide for a ground space of 60x100 feet, with a parking lot in the rear for automobiles of the film exchange men and exhibitors. If these plans go through it will mean the locating of all film exchanges between Seventh and Ninth on Olive.

FILM ROW, of Los Angeles, was last week made the home of the World Los Angeles branch, which was moved by Manager T. E. Hancock from Grand avenue to 818 South Olive street. This leaves but two exchanges off of Olive street, the Progressive Motion Picture Company, which handles Paramount and Artcraft, and T. L. Tally, who is opening the First National Exhibitors' Exchange.

West Coast Exchanges

FIELD CARMICHAEL, who has been manager of the Los Angeles Fox branch for the past sixteen months, is to be transferred to another territory, which comes as a distinct promotion for the excellent services he has rendered the Fox sales organization in that territory. Up to this time he has not been definitely advised what territory he will be transferred to, but assurance from Winfred Sheehan is to the effect that it will afford him bigger opportunities.

GUY GUNDERSON, who has been salesman for the local exchange for the past eighteen months, is to succeed Carmichael as manager, and will have the aid of Mr. Perry as salesman, Perry being transferred to Los Angeles from San Francisco.

Clayton Sheehan, who has been in Los Angeles for the past three weeks and on the coast fully twice that period, this week departed for the East to complete his tour of the Western exchanges. Mr. Sheehan went to Salt Lake from Los Angeles by way of Needles, Cloride and Kingman, Arizona.

DAVE BURSHON, manager of the California Film Exchange of Los Angeles, and C. L. Theuerkauf, Bluebird salesman, took care of the San Diego territory by a trip to that section last week.

A. A. LLOYD has leased the Argus theatre, formerly conducted by H. K. Marble at Santa Barbara, Cal., and will shortly reopen it, but not until after a number of changes have been made. Santa Barbara is a city of about ten thousand, and there are four motion picture theatres, the others being owned by W. Markus.

JOE RICKARDS of the Hipp theatre at Phoenix, Arizona, spent several days in Los Angeles last week, and while there contracted for the service of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange. He is planning a number of changes for his house which will be inaugurated along with the introduction of the new program which will only fill a portion of the time at the Hipp theatre.

DOUGLAS JARMOUTH has sold the Colonial theatre on Vermont avenue, Los Angeles, to G. P. Walker, who takes possession at once.

DORNER AND DICE, who recently purchased the Palace theatre at Forty-seventh and Moneta avenue, Los Angeles, have added all new equipment for the projecting booth. This includes two new Power 6-B projectors and two fifty ampere rectifiers of the General Electric make. The sales were made by the Pacific Amusement Supply Company of Los Angeles.

Los Angeles Studio Colony

HERBERT RAWLINSON will shortly be seen in "The Flash of Fate," jumping across a twelve-foot airshaft, nine stories above ground. In performing the stunt, Rawlinson badly sprained one ankle and wrenched his wrist. He is thankful that nothing more severe happened.

ALL the employes of Universal City accepted an invitation one evening during the past week to attend the Billy Sunday meetings, now in progress in Los Angeles, in a body. It was estimated there were 1,000 present, and to music furnished by the Los Angeles Ad Club's jazz band the Universalites sang their song, "Come to Universal City."

FRANKLYN FARNUM is said to be right at home in taking the role of a carefree son of a newspaper owner for the Bluebird "The Scarlet Car," adapted from the Richard Harding Davis book. Joseph DeGrasse is the director of this subject and has a cast that includes some of the best-known players of the screen, including Al Filson, Edith Johnson, Lon Chaney and Sam DeGrasse.

CHARLES DILL, leading comedian of the Henry Kernan Big V Comedy Company, has a green automobile which has been named the Dill Pickle.

DIRECTOR WILLIAM WOLBER has been charged with requiring his players for "The Eighth Great Grandparent" to do circus and near slap-stick in evening clothes. The complaint is voiced because of the increasing size of the cleaners' bill.

FRED CHURCH seems particularly happy in his new engagement at the Fox Studios. His debut in Fox Films will be the hero part in "Du-Barry," the coming Bara production.

ANID MARKEY is reported to have the larger part of "Responsibility" fall upon her shoulders, and because of her strenuous work in this subject she is promised a vacation shortly.

GENERAL MANAGER H. O. DAVIS has put into effect a new order concerning conditions at the Triangle Studio. The men hereafter will occupy dressing rooms on the first floor, and the ladies will be found on the second story tier of dressing rooms. The change caused some weeping and wailing, for players had in some instances handsomely decorated their quarters.

SHIFT OF BUSINESS DISTRICT CREATES NEW FIELDS

A SHIFT of the business district of Los Angeles, which for the past ten years has been located on Broadway, has created new fields for motion picture theatres. The Kuhrline Brothers, who have large houses at Oakland and Fresno, on November 1 opened their new house on Grand avenue just off Seventh street, three blocks west of Broadway. This theatre will have a seating capacity estimated at more than 2,000.

This shift has also caused a re-opening of what is known as the old Mozart or Strand theatre. It has been leased by R. W. Woodley, who formerly conducted the Woodley and Lyric theatres in Los Angeles, and who has renamed the house the Woodley-Strand. The theatre will be redecorated, and present plans provide for the showing of Paramount subjects.

WOODWARD WAS NOT ORGANIZER OF ISIS, SAYS BAXTER

THE statement appearing in a recent issue of the West Coast Section of MOTION PICTURE NEWS to the effect that W. O. Woodward, who had closed a deal with the National Company to act as its producing agent in Denver, was one of the organizers of the Isis theatre in that city, is incorrect, according to S. L. Baxter, proprietor of the Isis Amusement Company, Denver, controlling the theatre of the same name.

"Mr. Woodward knew nothing of the Isis theatre and was not in Denver at the time of its organization," says Mr. Baxter. "I am sole owner and organizer of the theatre."

BAXTER RUNS "FLAME" 15 DAYS

SAM BAXTER, proprietor of the Isis, recently run "The Flame of the Yukon" for the fifteenth day. The attendance broke all records, and is proof of the popularity of this picture.

S. R. KEMP, sales manager for the General Film, visited the Denver office last week on his way to Los Angeles.

W. C. CALHOUN, of the Star theatre at Scott's Bluff, Neb., placed some new contracts on a recent visit in Denver.

GEORGE F. MacCREARY, owner of the new U. S. A. theatre, at Sidney, Neb., has closed an annual contract for new Perfection pictures.

H. W. PERRY, of the Ogden theatre, at Ogden, Utah, has returned home from a recent Denver visit. He has signed up for Fox Standards.

R. J. CHURCHILL, manager of the Denver Fox headquarters, returned a few days ago from a trip covering Wyoming and New Mexico, and reports heavy bookings for Fox productions. Upon his return he left on a business trip to Chicago for a few days. The Denver office is a strenuous contestant for the big prizes hung up by the Fox Corporation.

A. F. BERGEN, of the Fox road force, has returned from a successful booking trip on the Western slope and in the Arkansas Valley territory.

CHARLES BISE, who recently opened a new theatre at Worland, Wyo., will open another new house in Greybull, Wyom., about December 1.

H. I. WALLICK has been transferred from the Triangle in St. Louis to the sales department of the Denver office.

WALTER S. RAND is back from Salt Lake, where he placed Goldwyn pictures with the American. Mr. Rand is up against a hard problem. He doesn't like the Rio Grande route, and every time he hits the Union Pacific the train is from two to seven hours late. He is thinking seriously of buying an aeroplane.

AN innovation has been introduced by the Woman's club of El Paso in an effort to benefit the children of that city primarily, and also to work for the educational and moral improvement of the community through the medium of screen pictures.

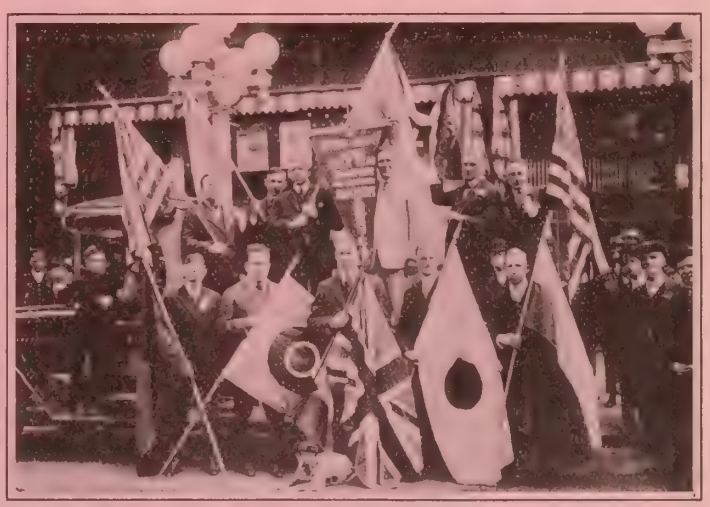
THE experiment has met with great success. It is so successful in fact, that the standing room only sign was necessary at the hrst and second performances.

MRS. T. W. NEWTON, president of the club, has placed a contract for Edison Conquest program pictures, after showing the seven reels of No. 2 for the second time. The club has also closed a contract with the management of the Garden theatre for one afternoon and evening of each week for the pictures.

THE High School at Sterling, Col., has also closed a contract for the Conquest series for the education and entertainment of its classes. The school building is equipped with a theatorium and modern apparatus for the showing of pictures.

RICHARD GRADWELL RICORD, general manager of the World Film Corporation, visited Denver recently, on his way to Salt Lake and San Francisco.

GEORGE BOURKE, local Bluebird manager, has returned from a successful trip to the Black Hills district, where he lined up a new circuit, placing Bluebird in every town between Denver and Billings.



THE local supreme management reports heavy bookings of Billy West comedies throughout Wyoming and Utah.

W. J. HAZELTINE, for four years membership secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association in Denver, has joined the sales force of the Triangle.

DENVER FILM MEN HELP UNCLE SAM

DENVER distributors and exhibitors are not behind in the general co-operation with the Government during the present war against the Kaiser. Everybody connected with the industry in that city has demonstrated his patriotism to the fullest extent, and not alone by money contributions, but in divers ways.

Australians Made Members of First National Circuit

Australasian Films, Ltd., and Union Theatres, Ltd., of Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania, Conclude Negotiations with First National Exhibitors Circuit to Handle American Chain's Acquisitions in South Land

AUSTRALASIAN Films, Ltd., which with Union Theatres, Ltd., imports and exhibits a goodly majority of the motion pictures seen by the people of Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania, has become a member of The First National Exhibitors' Circuit on the same footing as the American exhibitors who recently formed the big co-operative film purchasing organization.

Actually One Concern

The two Australian firms are really one concern—the former being the film dealing, the latter the exhibiting end of a well organized amusement business formed by the amalgamation, several years ago, of the interests of West Pictures, Ltd., Spencers Pictures, Ltd., and the greater J. D. Williams Amusement Co., Ltd. The head offices are in Sidney from where the business of the huge chain of theatres—about seventy in number—is administered.

The joining up of this overseas company with an association of American exhibitors is one of the most notable examples of international good-will and community of interest so far furnished by the motion picture industry.

Speaking of it, Mr. Millard Johnson, who has for several years been the new circuit members' New York representative, made the following comments:

An Interested Observer

"From the very outset our firm has been an interested observer of the formation and progress of the 'First National,' which is really based on the idea that made our companies dominant in the southern hemisphere. Its centralized purchasing power vested in a viewing board which is made up of successful exhibitors is not apt to make many bad buys. It didn't take us long to arrive at the conclusion that 'What is good enough for the First National is good enough for us.' Speaking for my firm, I am pleased to say the Circuit admitted us upon an equal footing with its American and Canadian members—in fact, made us one of them.

"It has always been our purpose to support the independent producing organization. I believe our Circuit is going to afford the independent producer a safe and profitable outlet for his product—which will encourage directors and stars who have been hampered by the limitations of the program plan in their efforts to do the best that is in them."

The news of the big deal was confirmed by the New York officers of the circuit, who expressed themselves as highly pleased at the successful conclusion of several weeks' negotiations.

Enid Bennett Wins Point Against Triangle

Court Decides Cancellation of Contract Was Valid, and Star Immediately Signs with Ince to Appear in Paramount Releases

ENID BENNETT, the young Australian actress who was discovered by Thomas H. Ince while playing in Boston, and who starred in a number of Triangle subjects when Ince was connected with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, won her suit against the Triangle Film Corporation for annulment of contract this week when Judge Russ Avery of the Superior Court, Los Angeles, gave a ruling following a hearing of five days.

Miss Bennett immediately signed a contract with Mr. Ince for the Paramount program, and will shortly begin work in the first release, which will be issued early in the coming year.

The Bennett suit was similar to that of William S. Hart, in that the plaintiff contended her contract with the Triangle was automatically cancelled when the subjects in which she was starred were not personally supervised by Thomas H. Ince. Counsel for Triangle maintained that subjects made for the New York Motion Picture Corporation under the contract prior to Mr. Ince severing his connection with the company, had not been made under Ince's personal supervision, and that Mr. Ince in making the contract merely acted as agent for the New York corporation. There were no arguments presented by the attorneys in the case.

Coincident with Miss Bennett completing her testimony and the cross-examination ordeal, she received a cablegram from relatives in Australia, announcing the death of her brother, Lieutenant Reginald Bennett, of the Australian contingent now fighting on the West front in Europe. Miss Bennett had just left the witness chair when the cabelgram was delivered to her. Arrangements are now being made by cable by Miss Bennett and her sister, Marjorie, who is playing in Ince subjects, for their mother to come to America and reside with them in Los Angeles.

It had been planned that if the suit was won by Miss Bennett she would begin work immediately for Mr. Ince in a subject for Paramount program, but owing to the news of her brother's death production will be delayed for several weeks. Story and scenario for her first photoplay are now being prepared, and arrangements have been made for Jerome Storm to serve as director. Storm has been associated with Mr. Ince for the past four years.

It is stated that Mr. Ince now has the maximum number of companies at work that will make sufficient photoplays for his allotment on the Paramount and Artcraft programs.

Carl Laemmle and the Universal's Service Flag of Two Hundred and Seventy-one Stars, Each Denoting a Man Sent to the War

Universal Unfurls Many-Starred Service Flag

Is Constant Reminder to Throngs of Broadway That Universal Has Two Hundred and Seventy-one Employees in United States Service

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company at noon on Wednesday of last week unfurled a brand-new United States service flag from a window of its offices on the third floor of the building at Forty-eighth street and Broadway, under most auspicious circumstances. Probably the most significant thing about the flag, which now snaps in the breeze lively enough to attract the attention of every passer-by, is the collection of 271 stars, each representing a man from Universal who has taken his place in the ranks of the country's defenders.

The flag, said to be the largest in the motion picture district, was run out from a window of President Laemmle's office at noon on October 31, to the accompaniment of cheers from the company's staff and the throng of spectators that nearly blocked the street below.

The best bunting available went into the making of Universal's service flag, which measures twelve by twenty feet. With its red borders and field of white thickly flecked with stars, each standing for the life of an employe offered to the nation, it is strikingly visible for many blocks to the thousands passing up and down that busiest section of Broadway.

The Universal men who have gone to the front represent every branch of the service of this, one of the largest of motion picture companies.

The flag raised in the honor of the men who have left Universal to do their bit for the nation is the latest, not the last nor least, of Mr. Laemmle's patriotic manifestations. From the first he has been in close touch with officials at Washington and has co-operated with them in the spreading of the propaganda of patriotism through the thousands of motion picture screens which Universal supplies, and, almost every day, in every town and city of the country, his work is seen in the News and Screen Magazine films shown in the motion picture theatres.

Speaking of the sentiment that all service flags embody, President Laemmle said: "The service flag is no holiday bunting emblazoned for gayety or vanity. Just as the Stars and Stripes are not a painted rag, but a whole nation's history, so is the service flag a solemn national insignia. I think, as Plato thought in his wonderful conception of the Republic, that the citizen should be willing to live for and die for his country. The Universal is proud to have contributed its quota to a nation's glory and a nation's hope."

General Enterprises Makes Large Purchase of Bonds

Harry G. Kosch, treasurer of General Enterprises, Inc., announces that this company, through him, has purchased $10,000 worth of the second issue of Liberty Bonds.

Fanny Ward Buys Liberty Bond from President

It remained for Fanny Ward to gain the palm in all the recitals of the activities of screen stars in furthering Uncle Sam's Liberty Bond campaign.

For the Pathe star, before the close of the campaign not only purchased a large allotment of the bonds, but the salesman who turned the trick was Woodrow Wilson himself. Miss Ward's purchase was $50,000—and no wonder, for who could take a smaller amount from the hands of the President?

Miss Ward was scheduled on the day of her purchase to be the principal feature of a whirlwind bond-selling day.

with the Paralta studios as publicity writer and more recently sub-title editor in the scenario department. O'Hara's only brother is a yeoman in the U. S. Navy.

It is told that when Miss Ward arrived at the Capitol the rain was falling in torrents and all hope of carrying out the original intentions of selling bonds had to be abandoned. However, the star was invited to meet the president, and, in the course of their conversation she remarked: "Mr. President, I wish that you personally would receive my subscription for $50,000 worth of the bonds."

Kenneth A. O'Hara Joins the Aviation Corps

Kenneth A. O'Hara, one of the most prominent publicity writers of the West Coast film colony, and author of the life of Thomas H. Ince, which was published serially, has given his services to the Government and is now a member of the U. S. Aviation Corps, stationed at Angel Island, near San Diego. O'Hara has been identified with the film industry for three years, the greater portion of which time he spent as manager of the publicity department at the New York Motion Picture studios. For the past six months he has been identified

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

TIMES are changing constantly. The old order passeth away and something new occurs almost every week these days. For instance, George Larkin, appearing in "The Natural Law," doesn't once don that black and white sport shirt of his during the entire seven reels.

AND Charles Condon, so long synonymous with Motography, has deserted that neat, little office in the Longacre Building and has attached himself to the Photoplay Magazine, for which publication he will proceed to garner large advertising accounts.

BUT the biggest surprise of all is furnished by the Moving Picture World, long a recluse down at 17 Madison avenue, which has finally pulled up stakes to settle down again at 516 Fifth avenue, as high as Forty-third street. This will come as a severe shock to those who entertained the conviction that the well-known "bible" of the film industry was rooted forever in the narrow confines of the Pullman Building. But be that as it may, we, with a fine show of brotherly love, welcome the members of its staff to the thriving centre of the film business and express the hope that they will soon become acclimated to the rush and roar of upper Broadway and Fifth avenue, so strikingly in contrast to the environment of their former home.

GERTRUDE MESSINGER, who gained favor as the dancer in "Aladdin and his Wonderful Lamp," has just been elevated to leading roles by William Fox. Gertrude, who is in the neighborhood of four years old, has a brother, Buddie, slightly older, and a sister, Margery, about seven, both of whom are working in Fox pictures on the Coast.

With so many Messingers in his employ Mr. Fox is considering the advisability of beginning an A. D. T. service.

AMONG other things pictures are the means of family reunions. Witness the case of Mary McDonald of Quincy, Mass., who through the medium of Hearst-Pathe News was permitted to catch a glimpse of her brother, George, manouvering around Paris. We only hope George was behaving himself.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTE:—A new star will shortly make its appearance in the firmament. Its name is Beverly Bruce, a Montreal society girl, who has come to New York to make her mark. She will appear in Willard Bradley's eight-reel allegorical photodrama. "The Supreme," which will shortly have its premiere on Edisonway.

BERT ENNIS, desiring the entire trade to know that he is working in the interests of McClure publicity, asked us to mention it here. We're always willing to grant such small requests.

F. J. BIRD, of the sales department of the Nicholas Power Company, was married on Friday of last week to a Miss Cox, former habitat Brooklyn. Atlantic City was their honeymoon goal.

ANENT this announcement Arthur J. Lang declares that Will C. Smith and himself are the only unmarried department heads left in the establishment. Not knowing Mr. Smith personally, we will venture no remark as to his state of bachelorhood, but this Lang person! Who cares whether he is unmarried or not. Do you, girls? We don't.

AL. WILLIAMS, who used to pound out Mutual publicity when that company recognized New York as the centre of the film business, but who is now back on the staff of the New York Journal, was presented with a son and heir by Mrs. Williams on Wednesday of last week. The chances are that the new attraction will be termed Al., Jr., although at this early date no returns regarding the selected cognomen have reached this office.

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, after resting up in Excelsior Springs, Mo., intends to arrive in New York shortly, according to a postal received here. His reasons are not stated, but we hazard a guess that New York will easily succeed in counteracting the rest furnished at the Springs.

FROM a four hundred word story we glean the fact that pink is the favorite color of Elaine Hammerstein.

THE city election and the Bronx Exhibitors' Ball have both been and gone by this time, but owing to the time of going to press we are unable to publish the returns of either one of these important affairs.

Herewith is another of Pat Dowling's series entitled "How They Did It in the Good Old Days." This one might well be called "The Birth of a New Idea."

The Movoscope Company, through its President, Joe Greenberg, announces that it is contemplating an entirely new departure in motion pictures—the use of wild animals before the camera. This idea grew from the necessity of keeping a savage bull dog before the studio door to prevent detectives from the rival company from gaining admittance and stealing certain devices of the Movoscope camera. Mr. Greenberg, cogitating one day after the bull dog had mistaken him for one of the detectives and had consequently removed a large piece of cloth from his nether garment, suddenly realized that the animal could be worked into the script of the company's next picture. The script originally called for a kitten but Mr. Greenberg says that it can easily be altered to fit the savage bull dog.

This is only one of the many innovations instituted by the Movoscope company, a concern which undoubtedly can lay claim to the title of "pioneer of the picture business."

Are You Pleasing YOURSELF or Your Patrons?

AS we study the new box-office reports OURSELVES—what interests us more than anything else is the difference in opinion of exhibitors AFTER they have run a picture. And the way their opinions seem to differ from their own box-office results.

An exhibitor who tells us frankly he thinks these box-office reports won't benefit HIM any, because he runs the pictures close to release, writes us a three-page letter. In that letter he names as his ideal picture a certain release that has proved a very popular booking and yet has not made above "average" in any theatre of which we have record. He says this picture was "97 per cent perfect for children, 98 per cent perfect for women, 98 per cent perfect for men." He says: "In my time I have viewed not less than 2,200 pictures, and I have found that what the patrons as a whole enjoy most are comedy dramas." Then speaking of the film above mentioned, he says if he could have got people into the house to see this picture, they would have been highly pleased, but "we could NOT GET THEM INTO THE HOUSE."

WE took a hurried glance at our reports on this picture. We could see the exhibitors liked it. One excused poor business by recording a "blizzard" on the day he showed it. Another said his patrons were very much pleased, but reported average business, no better the second day than the first. Only one out of several exhibitors complained of the picture as "Light comedy with nothing to it."

Now the BOX-OFFICE verdict showed that as a BUSINESS proposition this comedy was decidedly "light" and literally had "nothing to it."

You can't stay in business and run pictures that mean NOTHING to you from a box-office angle. The film company producing this picture has all the facilities and brains for turning out pictures that will offer you something more than "pleased patrons afterwards."

Unless your business is always the same, certain types of patronage will always be on hand to see their type of picture, and are pleased with that picture if it is well done of its class.

Those who like comedy drama will go in—those who don't, as the exhibitor above says, you CAN'T GET IN. So the audience which LIKED this picture was bound to like it, and ask for more of that kind.

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Making the Stars Work For You

Use Pictures of Them in Your Newspaper Displays and Get the Personality Effect

ONE of the favorite wails of the exhibitors these days are that the stars are "getting all the money." Much more time is spent on these exclamations than in study as to how you can actually make the stars work for YOU. Not long ago the MOTION PICTURE NEWS said editorially that there was no question that the present was the day of the star; whether the period would last only time will show. And whether it lasts or not you should take advantage of the situation now and capitalize on every star that appears at your house.

Many big productions go over in which there is no star featured and we do not believe that it is essential for you to have big stars every day at your theatre to attract patrons. But what we do insist on is that while you are playing pictures in which some one or two stars are featured, that you ought to get the most possible out of pictures you show.

One of the theories of star productions as applied to exhibitors is bad, bad because it is a false theory. Two many showmen expect the name of the star to carry over the production without doing anything themselves. They expect that the followers of Marguerite Clark or Pearl White or Francis Bushman will be brought to the theatre with the mere announcement that they are to appear.

Were the writer running a theatre he would advertise the most popular star all the more for that popularity. He would see to it that every possible patron in this section knew of the appearance of that player and that this fact was impressed on him with the most striking effect. If that were not true, every theory of advertising that is followed by the biggest advertisers the country over would be false.

And right here is another point. We receive complaints from many exhibitors that on certain programs and in certain brands of pictures they are offered there are some stars of great popularity and others that are little known and are of lesser drawing power. Before the exhibitor complains we would first ask him: "What are you doing to make these stars better known?" The sane producer is not going to attempt to force for long on the public stars that have no ability. It is too true that some of these come and go into the discard, but the point remains that you are never going to know what a particular player will do at your theatre unless you advertise that one.

Don't simply say that such and such a player is a poor drawing card until you find out for yourself. We have spoken in these columns time after time of exhibitors who jump to a conclusion and are hard and fastbound, not by some lesson that they have learned from experience, but something which they have made up their mind MUST be true. Many exhibitors are guided by what they THINK instead of what they KNOW. And in many cases it is not even a case of thinking, but supposition.

This is not meant to be an argument for any particular class of pictures, but we are merely trying to tell you how to get the worth out of the stars that you are playing, and not ten per cent of the exhibitors of the country are doing that. One of the principal means for doing this is through newspaper advertising—the right sort of advertising that attracts attention to the stars and keeps that attention fixed.

Certainly the personality of the star enters into his or her drawing power. And certainly the greatest way that you can express that personality is through a picture, either that of the star in the particular role that you are advertising, or in a stock pose. If you are a manager in the larger cities where you have engraving facilities at your hand, we would always advise showing the player in some scene from the production—one in which the star is not dominated by others, or still better in the part she plays, with nothing more to distract the attention.

But if you are in a smaller city or you have a house in which you cannot afford to pay for a special cut on each production, there is no reason in the world except lack of foresight why you should not be able to illustrate your advertisements with stock cuts. Practically every distributing concern furnishes these at less than cost and they are available in nearly all of the exchanges. We believe that every exhibitor who is showing the same stars from time to time should have a complete set of all the players and that there should rarely be an advertisement inserted that did not carry one of these cuts.

The outlay is small, and if it is made gradually as you play each attraction you will hardly notice the expense. And then you can fit yourself up a small filing cases or series of boxes to keep them for ready use. Get them back from your newspapers when you use them and put them away against that day that you may need them again.

Keep the faces of your stars before the public. Pictures appeal where mere TYPE fails to get over. They attract instant attention of every follower of particular players, and more than that, a picture will "get the eye" of your non-patron a great deal quicker than any other display. People who have passed by your advertisement because they never go to that house will read it when you have it illustrated, and a certain percentage of these will be found inside your doors.

Especially should this be true if your paper runs any photoplay news. If it does there will be short items printed about the players that will keep them closer to the attention of your patrons and there will be a quick response when you use the face.

On the opposite page we have reproduced, in about half their actual size, a number of good and bad advertisements of star attractions. No attempt has been made to select the best advertisements of the week or the worst, but to show what average exhibitors are doing with their star productions.

Notably standing out in this list is the Lothrup theatre, Omaha. This exhibitor felt that he could use very small space, and he only employed five inches one column deep, yet he gave over half of this space to a picture of Mae Marsh and the ad draws attention even in the midst of a number of larger ones around it.

Three ads of pictures in which William Farnum is appearing are reproduced. Broadway Strand, Detroit, and Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, both advertise him in "When a Man Sees Red," and both use the same scene from the production, one in half tone and the other in line drawing. Both of these attract attention. But note the display of the Muse theatre, Omaha. The manager of this house knew that the big thing in his advertisement was the name of William Farnum, the personality of him, if you will. Yet all the effect that was achieved was in using his name in 60-point type and crowding around it a mass of unnecessary reading matter. One-third of the space devoted to a distinctive cut of the star would have made a smashing display, but as it appears in the newspapers, surrounded by other advertising, it is simply a mass of type in a wilderness of other typographical more-or-less efforts.

Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, Ga., and the New Grand Central, St. Louis, both had Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Burglar." The New Grand Central, from the specimens of its advertising that we have seen, appears never to use the cut of a star and to use about the same size type in all of its advertising and to make a uniform effort to get a lot of matter into a small space. We have commented before that St. Louis is a poor advertising town so far as motion picture houses are concerned, but this is all the more reason why those managers who know the value of advertising should make their appeals the most striking possible.

The Forsyth theatre uses one of the designs furnished by Paramount. We would prefer Miss Clark alone in the cut, but still her name is so strongly brought out and so placed that one reads

Mere Masses of Type and the Contrast With Use of Cuts

Here are some remarkable contrasts in the advertising of motion picture stars. These advertisements have not been selected with the intention of getting either the best or the worst displays, but they have been taken from a number of papers through the country to show what average exhibitors are doing. A discussion of these advertisements, together with suggestions for getting the greatest possible pulling power out of your stars will be found in the article on the opposite page.

Exhibitor and Exchange Men Score Paper Supplied for Lobby Displays

A DAY'S mail brings two protests concerning the paper furnished by manufacturers for lobby displays. One of these comes from an exchange manager and the other from a "live wire" theatre proprietor. And they agree that the larger part of the matter now being supplied makes it impossible for the showmen to improve their theatres and to gain more business, as they are constantly being urged to do.

Both of these men also claim that the manufacturers need to get out on the road and become acquainted with exhibiting conditions through the country and see the needs. The point is made that the manufacturers are wasting hundreds of thousands of dollars every year by sending out matter that cannot be used.

Manager A. Dresner, of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, declares that he has more trouble with posters than any part of the booking work. He adds that the eight-sheet poster is almost a dead loss to the exchange, as few theatres can use that size and comes out for standardizing of paper by the manufacturers.

"Such a movement would work to a good end for exhibitor, exchangeman and manufacturer," says Mr. Dresner. "As most exhibitors use films from more than one manufacturer, it is necessary that they have uniform paper to use in their frames, easels and other exhibiting devices. This is of paramount importance at present and the manufacturer who starts this movement will be a boon to the theatre man.

"As for cuts and photos, that is another advertising phase that needs improvements. Photos should be made to be purchased outright by the exhibitor for say 25 cents a set—and I think it can be done—the exchange would be relieved of the constant writing and worry of having these returned. With the present rental system, cuts and photos are seldom returned with the show and the result is considerable loss of money and time to both parties. Exhibitors would readily pay a nominal price for the purchase of cots and photos to be relieved of the bother of returning them, or even remembering they have to be returned. Besides, this would give each exhibitor a clean set for exhibition material, and the exchange would have a good supply always on hand. Even the booking attending these small items is a nuisance and a task. This is a matter worth the serious consideration of the manufacturer."

"If the manufacturer must have higher rentals," writes T. E. Rickards, manager of the Hip theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., "then let them give the provincial something to assure him attention from the men and women who stop in front of his place and

Vitagraph Scores Hit with Alice Joyce Poster Display

VITAGRAPH offers as a distinct achievement in poster work a six-sheet stand issued in connection with the release of "The Fettered Woman," the Robert W. Chambers drama in which Alice Joyce is starred.

Vitagraph is giving much thought to its poster work, and an inspection of some of the recent work revealed to the Exhibitors Service Bureau that this company is taking a far stride ahead in honestly and strikingly advertising its pictures. Vitagraph holds that the poster is the only advertising link between the company itself and the exhibitor and seeks to give him the best.

In the first place the most striking large pictures of the stars are used in this display work, many of the recent ones being real works of art. They do not consist of meaningless scenes from the production, but the most striking that stand out as self explanatory. Gobs of red ink, scenes of horror and the "burlesque" type of "beauty" are barred from these displays.

"The Bettered Woman" six-sheet is a big dominating portrait of Alice Joyce, perfect in its likeness to the beautiful Vitagraph star. It is lithographed in five colors, delicate in its handling, yet by that very delicacy certain to stand out boldly against an array of the more glaring type of posters which so frequently fight each other to mutual ineffectiveness.

And combined with the artistic side of the paper there is a real box-office value in the selection of this particular portrait for use as a poster. "The Fettered Woman" is an appealing title. Linked with an exquisite portrait of a player whose beauty is most enhanced by the air of tragedy that surrounds the roles for which she is best known, full advantage is taken of the personality of the star.

Too much cannot be said in commendation of the tendency of the leading companies to improve the quality of their poster output. Vitagraph, through its sales force, and by correspondence with exhibitors, checks the effectiveness of its posters to the end that the selling value of its paper, from the exhibitor's standpoint, may at no time be impaired by an over-artistic effort. Yet exhibitors have given the company every encouragement in the gradual trend toward a higher type of poster, and the Vitagraph line of paper, as it is being issued today, may fairly be considered as representing the combined thought and work of both exhibitor and producer—the kind of paper that gets business and gets it clean.

Some months ago Vitagraph issued a series of window cards with portraits of leading stars tipped-on in the style of mounted photographs. One was issued as an experiment, and so unanimous was the exhibitors' approval, that a series was made covering the entire list of Vitagraph's feminine stars.

Successful Exhibitors I Have Known

By Carl Horton Pierce

Mr. Pierce, who has traveled the United States and Canada for the past four years, calling upon exhibitors in the interests of the Morosco Photoplay Co. and later for Paramount and Artcraft, is in an unusual position to give his impressions first hand of the men of whom he writes. His perspective has enabled him to pick out the high lights among the exhibitors of the continent. His deductions will be of interest to you, undoubtedly.

NO man in the business has shown more of a desire to keep pace with the industry than Frank L. Newman, proprietor of the Royal and Regent theatres of Kansas City. "Frank," as all of his friends, who are legion, term him, is a live one. You might call him the Rothapfel of the Middle West.

Thre years ago, over a table in a little anteroom in the Baltimore Hotel, Frank, Carl Mensing of Leavenworth, Kansas, and I sat for several hours discussing raising prices. Surely the market indicated the demand. Mr. Newman recognized it, but he was a cautious man, and the change from ten to fifteen cents meant the taking of a momentous step. In fact, one of Mr. Newman's steady patrons came to him and said: "The day you raise your prices to fifteen cents, that day you seal the doom of your theatre." But did that deter him? It did not.

The Royal went to fifteen cents, and went over that figure. This was a much more difficult proposition than it sounds to read about it, because the Royal theatre is a small house in the heart of the town—588 seats. Now you come to make 588 seats pay with Paramount and Artcraft pictures in the heart of a big city and you are "going some." But that change to higher prices—among other things—is the very thing that put the house over and kept it over. This might be well for some of you exhibitors to put down in your note books—for present and future reference.

"Foresight Plus Backbone"

In other words, Frank Newman had the foresight plus the backbone to go through with a policy that was written on the face of the wall in large letters that were large enough for anyone to read who would. And even now when some exhibitors are short-sighted enough to fear raising their prices; when—three years later—they cannot see that the very thing that will save their lives is the step that Mr. Newman took, do you think that Frank is stopping? He is not. He is surging ahead—ahead of the procession.

"It isn't a question of price," says Mr. Newman. "A man may be satisfied—he may be making money—but that isn't the thing for you to think of: You must CREATE SOMETHING. The man that does stand still, when a man with new blood comes in and he raises his admission price or does anything new or starts something, has to be left behind. The new man—if he charges the new price—has opportunity to pay for better service. Then the better service, plus the new ideas and all, command the better class of people, and then the first man is a dead one.

"The trade journals have all had comments from a great many exhibitors about the employees being courteous, the cleanliness of the theatres, etc. That is—or should be a thing of the past, now, because business are conducting the theatres, and they understand that these things are essential in any business. The question at this time is this: How to keep up with the times, stepping even a little faster than the industry itself."

Courtesy and Cleanliness

Mr. Newman takes the courtesy and cleanliness as a matter of fact, yet here is the compliment paid Mr. Newman recently by one of his competitors who—though thirty miles away—nevertheless follows the lead of the Royal and Regent theatres in the big city. He said: "There is no doubt about it, Frank. You put that genial radiance that people call Frank Newman into every one of your theatres. Your Royal and Regent theatres abound with the geniality of your own personality. You MAKE the theatre go over because it is a part of YOU."

Absorb that—you gentlemen who think that you can run a theatre the same as you run a piece of machinery. You can't. It requires personality.

"Did you ever stop to figure," says Mr. Newman, "that 95 per cent of the exhibitors throughout the country try to get their help as cheaply as they possibly can? After all, you only get what you pay for. My idea has been that I have tried to get the BEST—the best help, the best in music, the best in everything—and I always pay them more than any other theatre pays. In the first place, employees are competent and they become more so—they become a part of the theatre—and the patrons see for themselves that the same people are kept. This establishes a welcome and a hominess that makes for business on a permanent basis.

Permanency of Help

"In theatres where there is a charge of two or three admission prices this permanency of help is an asset to the management, because when a cashier gets accustomed to the priced seat that a man usually buys she does not to bore him by asking—she simply hands him the ticket or tickets that he is accustomed to order.

"Take the history of the Regent theatre as an instance of the outworking of this principle with my help. When I started in the Regent I could not get people in at ten cents—this was because they didn't know the class of show that I was trying to run—I was in a cheap neighborhood—the people had to be made patrons of the theatre. In other words, it took time for them to find out the class of show that I was conducting. When they did, a regular clientele was established, and now it is easy—even easier—for me to get fifteen cents than formerly it was to obtain ten cents. All of this brings me back to the point that it isn't the price but the tout ensemble.

Frank L. Newman, Proprietor Royal and Regent Theatres, Kansas City

"A great many exhibitors—on the days when business is coming—will cut or they will run the show they have so fast that they will ruin the picture. I started out in St. Joe, Mo., in 1912, to make a schedule for my shows, because at that time I showed my first big production—'Queen Elizabeth.'

"Ever since that time I have made a schedule for my operator for each picture—in other words, I established a regular show time for each day of the week. When my subjects were short, I would add on a reel to fill out the regular schedule time. I feel that we should please the people that are in the theatre—we should give them the show that they have paid for, the way that it should be shown. Those that are in are then satisfied. Those that can't get in are an adv. for you. This is always a better plan than to murder some production—thereby destroying your clientele."

Best in Musicians

One of Mr. Newman's competitors said to him a day or so ago: "Frank, I never hear people speak of your pictures—they speak of your music." Frank replied: "Thanks. It isn't the number of musicians you have in your orchestra. Pay a little more and get the BEST. Sweetness counts. Don't drown your people out with mere noise. Give them fitting music of high grade. The people will do the rest."

When Frank opened up the theatre—the Royal—the price was ten cents. Then came ten and twenty—and now it is fifteen and twenty-five. "At the rate things are going now it will soon be twenty-five and thirty-five," said Mr. Newman last week.

Your Idea—and Ours

FLOATS, auto displays and the like are of much more value in small towns than in cities where they would have to make an almost endless journey to be seen by a greater part of the people. However, Ludeke Brothers, of St. Peter, Minn., showed their value on the occasion of the showing of "The Fall of a Nation." The British tanks being foremost in public attention the Messers Ludeke used their auto to fit up a miniature model of a trench conqueror and sent it through the town. Inasmuch as the entire outfit cost only $3 it certainly was a cheap enough way to exploit the picture.

There's one tax that all can evade—that of the patron's patience.

HERE is a very catch advertisement that was used in the New York papers during the run of Theda Bara in "Cleopatra." It's an idea worth saving for those who are going to show the picture later. Exhibitors will be able to obtain full-sized copies of this display by writing to the William Fox office.

Note that this display is "different." It occupied a quarter of page space and gave plenty of room for the text matter and illustrations and then left the desired white space. Here is an example when a catch phrase can be used to the very best effect.

Almost every one will read the entire ad and talk about it.

An hour's thought to the presentation of a picture is worth ten days of crying from the housetops.

FOX'S Comedy theatre, Brooklyn, not only got all of the admirers of Francis X. Bushman into the theatre on a specified day, but made the souvenir that was presented advertise the next picture to be shown. On a certain day the management handed every person leaving the theatre an envelope bearing the words "His Photograph," and in this was this letter telling of the photograph offer.

When this Bushman photograph was distributed it bore on the back an announcement of Ethel Clayton's play, "The Woman Beneath" and a personal message from the star.

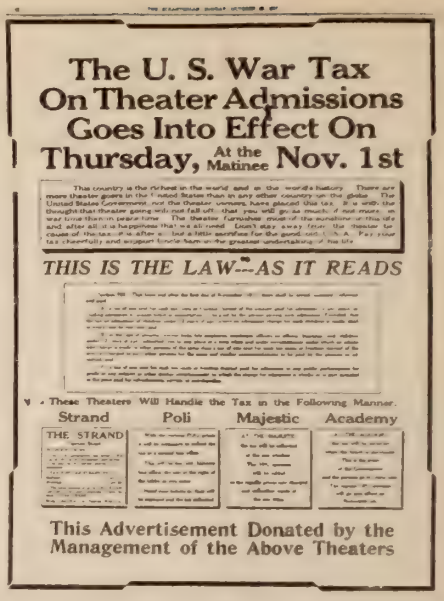
194 GRAND ST.
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Dear Madam;-

A Photograph of Francis X. Bushman will be presented to all Ladies on Wednesday, Oct. 10th, at Fox's Comedy, 194 Grand Street, in celebration of an event extraordinary.

We knew that we would be serving you by letting you know that Francis X. Bushman has returned to the screen, and will appear at Fox's Comedy Theatre.

Mr. Bushman was kind enough to supply us with a number of his photographs for the ladies.



Very truly,

COMEDY THEATRE.

P. S. Bushman and Bayne's latest Photoplay, "THEIR COMPACT", will be shown at Wm. Fox's Comedy Theatre, 194 Grand Street, on Wednesday, October 10th. Please remember—One Day Only.

Always let the "added feature" at your theatre be the smile of satisfaction on the face of the departing patron.

WAR taxes are not going to hurt the progressive exhibitors of Scranton, Pa. These men are up on their toes to take advantage of the situation and they have put the matter straight up to the public in page advertisements in the Sunday papers. The public is naturally suspicious and the ordinary patron has not read the law with the same attention that the exhibitor has. Many of them, especially women and children, probably do not even know that there is such a thing as a war tax on pictures. Four theatres of Scranton realized this and they used big space to call attention of the various methods that would be followed in collecting the tax and telling why they were forced to put this added charge on the public.

Long ago big corporations realized the necessity of taking their troubles to the public, of telling the truth about increases in prices, etc. It's a mighty good thing when exhibitors realize the same thing. And there's another thing. These four theatres did not hesitate to unite in making their talk to the public.

If competition is the life of trade, co-operation may be the soul of progress.

CORT theatre, Fort Thomas, Ky., sends out one of the best announcements for each week's bill that we have seen. This is in the form of a card with a hole at the top so that it can be hung up for the convenience of the family and not mislaid on the reading table among a bunch of magazines.

There is something more about this card

What Live Wires Are Doing

that gives a hint to the exhibitor. This is the frank statement about each film. Note that in referring to "The Double Standard" the card says that this is not a picture that will appeal to children. There are just a few words used in describing each picture, but these are sufficient to describe their character. The Fort theatre is not trying to get anyone into the house with false promises or exaggeration.

Y Gwyr yn Erbyn y Byd is Welsh. It is the Druid tribatic and it means "Truth Against the World. There are a lot of exhibitors who could borrow it.

HERE is a rather novel method of advertising. Manager Robert Poole of the Laughlin theatre, Long Beach, Cal., uses a full page in the Sunday paper telling of the week's attractions at his theatre. He pays for the whole amount and only occupies a small amount of it with the display, the remainder being devoted to reading matter. This is probably a good plan where your local newspaper does not co-operate with you, but we believe that it would be much better if the manager would go to his editor and tell him that he is willing to use a page advertisement every Sunday, but that he wants co-operation in the news columns. If your paper is worth anything, it will co-operate with you. When a manager is paying for the reading matter there is a very strong temptation to use adjectives and strong expressions that do not convince the public.

The advertising reading public is a mighty wise public these days.

Help yourself to another portion of the idea dish.

WE note with interest that many of the liver exhibitors of the country are coupling their theatres up with the national advertising being done by several of the distributing companies. Certainly this is the wise thing to do, to direct every possible penny spent by the distributor to your own house.

We have taken many specimens of good advertising from the Strand theatre, Omaha, and here we have another example of coupling the theatre up with Paramount advertising. Yet there is one slip here that was probably made unconsciously, but it is a bad one. The impression would be left by this display that "Fighting Odds" is a Paramount picture, when as a matter of fact it is a Goldwyn product. There is always a certain element of the public that is looking for things like this as a basis for theatre criticism and it's a mighty good idea to play absolutely safe.

The best way to keep ahead of the other fellow is to start first.

MANAGER POWELL, of the Rex theatre, Racine, Wis., in a recent issue of his house program announces that he has raised the price of admission. After reciting that the costs of everything in the motion picture industry have gone up just like in other lines, Mr. Powell fully justifies the increase. But he isn't going to impress his patrons very much with the policy of better entertainment when he uses such phrases as this: "Yesterday two of us went into a commonplace restaurant downtown (one of the 'hash houses'), etc." This sort of language isn't going to add to the dignity of the theatre and you are putting your house on a low level anyway when you compare it with a "hash house."

Keep lost motion out of your projection machine—and your exhibiting sense.

THE greatest novelty stunt to boost the sale of Liberty Bonds among theatres of Boston was an original scheme of Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park theatre, by strapping an illuminated sign, bearing the words, "Buy a Liberty Bond," on the back of each usher. The white flashes of the Liberty Bond seen twinkling through the auditorium of the theatre made a big hit.

Beside this up-to-date stunt Manager

Soriero was able by the aid of Marguerite Snow, to sell $100,000 of bonds at the Park theatre, during a matinee and evening performance. The ushers were each trained when a patron came down the aisle to stand at attention and salute. As he turned his back to lead the patron to a seat the electric sign was flashed on and continued flashing until the party was seated. Boston newspapers each day commented favorably on the action of Manager Soriero, and several managers of other houses copied the idea with success.

Half the worry that you spend on your competitor could well be used in sizing up yourself.

HERE is a novelty that is a novelty; it's the idea of a manager who shows that he is thinking about how to attract new business to his house. Manager Otis Hoyt of the Liberty theatre, Long Beach, Cal., recently advertised an "old fashioned picture show" to start at midnight. He finally obtained a print of the first Keystone comedy that was ever made, and this was accompanied by the most primitive of "nickelodeon" music. After the audience had seen a slide programme that lasted fifteen minutes, an illustrated song was introduced. This was sung by Keystone Director Harry Williams, who wrote the song over ten years ago.

William C. O'Hare, Manager Majestic Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa

Des Moines Man Makes Second Run Hit

William C. O'Hare, of Des Moines, has shown that it is possible to score a success where there has been nothing but failure before. He proved this with the Majestic theatre, and he did it in an unusual way.

Year after year, under different managements, all sorts of policies has been followed. After repeated failures with the legitimate and numerous periods of vacancy motion pictures were introduced, and for a short time the house enjoyed unusual prosperity, but this was short-lived. Again the house changed management and "big features only" were tried, but though money was spent with a lavish hand the house did not prosper.

Then Mr. O'Hare bought a half interest in the house and after two weeks of experimenting he found that the other houses in Des Moines had tied up all of the best features and that the public was educated to these theatres. So Mr. O'Hare hit upon the plan of booking second-run pictures which had proved popular at other houses. The result was that the Majestic is prospering, literally turning people away from the doors.

Triangle Urges Mats as Exhibitor Saving

Triangle is urging exhibitors of the country to use mats instead of cuts or electrotypes for their newspaper advertising. After investigation the publicity department has found that only papers in the smaller towns are not equipped with stereotyping apparatus that enables the use of the mats and that these will save the exhibitors a large amount of money in the course of a year.

Triangle suggests that exhibitors consult with their newspapers at once and that when they find that mats can be used instead of the cuts, they notify their exchange and get the immediate benefit of the saving.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

THEATRE H. is truly a suburban theatre. It is located in a residence district, about five miles from the heart of the city and outside of the municipal limits. It has a population of some 4,000 and practically all of the men folk and some of the women work in the city.

The house itself is a neat one, seating about 400 people, built of frame, but attractive in appearance and well managed from the physical point of view. The house had recently changed management for the reason that two previous managers had failed. There had been one period during which the theatre was dark for about six months and this had helped to get the people out of the habit of attending motion pictures, for while the people were willing enough to make a night trip to the city to see some striking stage attraction and once in a while a special picture, they would not make the journey to see an average feature.

Another problem the new manager was up against was that when the men came home from the city the most of them were tired and were unwilling to walk to his house or to take another car ride. Previous managers had given shows only in the evening, arguing that the men folk were away in the daytime and that the attendance would not pay expenses, even though he had to pay as much for his film for the two showings at night as he did for the entire day. Practically all of the other expenses save the operator's salary and cost of electricity were the same as if the theatre ran the full day.

The new manager set out to get as much out of his film as he could. In the first place he determined that there should be a matinee, but the problem was twofold. First it must not be so early as to interfere with school and second it must not be so late as to interfere with the wives and mothers getting to their homes in time to see to the preparation of the evening meal. The manager also reasoned that a late show would not pay more than expenses, for such had been the experience of previous managers, so he decided to arrange his bill in this way:

All the schools were out at four o'clock, so he started his feature picture at three so as to appeal to the adults who were able to attend and then followed this with his three short reels. By this time he figured that the children would arrive and for them he repeated the feature afterwards. Thus he ran the feature twice in the afternoon and the short reels only once. In the evening he gave but one show, which started at slightly different hours according to the season, either 7.30 or 8 p. m. His entire exhibition was over by ten o'clock. The manager says that he could do even better if he were able to use special reels for the children, but he is unable to pay a double rental, especially since the greater part of his evening patrons are adults and he cannot show them juvenile films.

The next problem that he was up against was advertising. He could not afford large display space in the papers published in the city because of the fact that he got the benefit of only a small part of its circulation, there being only about 500 people in his section who subscribed for the daily in their homes and he figured that probably a fourth of the male members of the household took these copies of the paper off with them to their work and that therefore he would miss the members of the family that he wanted to reach. He obviated that difficulty by taking into his business the two boys who delivered the papers in the section, and each day had a small handbill struck off announcing the attractions for the day at the theatre. For $1 each a week the newsboys were quite ready to fold one of these handbills in each copy of the paper. These served the purpose especially well because they dropped out when the paper was opened and the handbills themselves remained in the home.

Still this means did not reach all of his patrons, for the suburb occupied a considerable territory and people were not willing to walk down to the theatre and take a chance on what they might see. This had been the great trouble with the previous managers and the new man set out to achieve that end. Next he figured out that those who bought the groceries in the city were those who read the daily papers and phoned their orders in. These people he was reaching by his circulars in the newspapers. Then he proceeded to go to the five or six stores in the suburb and induced them to include one of his folders in each package they delivered. He didn't do this by free passes or pay, but simply by presenting the business argument that if he could keep the patronage of the suburb in the suburb he would save each patron ten cents carfare on each admission, and that there would be more money left for the grocers and the butchers. And it was true. In addition to this he handed each patron leaving the theatre another one of these circulars, all of which he printed himself on a small handpress he bought.

This manager simply capitalized human nature. He kept the house scrupulously clean and absolutely orderly. He succeeded in bringing from the home every night a near capacity audience, and by the conduct of his house made it recognized as a safe place for the children to come alone in the afternoon or for women unaccompanied.

This manager had many difficulties to override. There are dozens of others who have the same problems.

Is this your theatre?

MR. S. L. Rothapfel.
RIALTO THEATRE.
NEW YORK City.
MY DEAR Sam.
ONE NIGHT.
A LONG time ago.
I WENT to your theatre.
AND THERE was a long line.
LEADING TO the box office.
AND I got in it.
AND STOOD there.
AND WAITED.
AND LOOKED around.
AND WAITED.
AND STOOD there.
AND RIGHT ahead of me.
THERE WAS a big man.
AND HE never moved.
AND I couldn't understand
IF HE was dead.
WHY HE didn't fall over.
AND AFTER a while.
I DISCOVERED.
I WAS standing in a crowd.
THAT WAS looking.
AT SOME funny hats.
IN THE millinery store.
NEXT TO your theatre.
AND I left them.
AND WENT to the box office.
AND BOUGHT a ticket.
AND THE girl smiled.
AND I wondered.
IF SHE'D seen me.
IN FRONT of the hat store.
AND WAS kidding me.
AND THE next week.
I WENT back again.
AND BOUGHT my tickets.
AND THE girl smiled.
AND LAST week.
I WENT back again.
AND THE girl smiled
AND I said to myself.
"SHE WASN'T kidding me.
"SHE KNOWS me.
"SHE READS my column."
AND THEN I saw.
THAT SHE smiled.
AT A little old lady.
WHO WAS back of me.
AND AT a big fat man.
WHO CAME next.
AND I watched her.
AND NO matter.
WHO IT was.
SHE ALWAYS smiled.
AND JUST because.
YOU NEVER buy tickets.
AT YOUR theatre.
I HAD an idea.
THAT MAYBE.
YOU DIDN'T know.
ABOUT HER smile.
AND I want you to know.
AND I want you to tell her.
IF IT ever happens.
THAT A strange man.
WITH A new Fedora hat.
PUTS HIS hand.
THROUGH THE little wicket.
THAT SHE mustn't shoot.
SHE MUST just take the hand.
AND SHAKE it.
IT'LL BE mine.

I THANK you.

Fox Offers $500 Prize for "Kiddies'" Essays

Fox Film Corporation is supplying its branch managers with attractive four-page booklets announcing a prize offer of $500 for the best reviews by boys and girls under fourteen of "Jack and the Beanstalk," the first of the big fairy stories issued by that corporation. These pamphlets are reported as having worked wonders in stimulating the interest in the production.

Exhibitors have been able in many instances to trace direct results from this publicity because large numbers of children who patronize their theatres during the showing of "Jack and the Beanstalk" carry note books or scratch paper and pencils, obviously for the purpose of making notes on the production.

Equally definite evidence that the idea is bearing fruit is furnished by the Fox Kiddies editor at the Fox offices in New York, to whom it is provided in the pamphlet that all reviews entered in the contest shall be sent. The submitted matter, which generally complies with the requirement that it shall be concise, already fills the Kiddies editor's desk and a large filing cabinet in the office as well, and additional contributions are pouring in with every mail.

Smile of Cashier Brings Tribute from K. C. B. in N. Y. Paper

DOES politeness in a motion picture theatre pay? Does the smile of the cashier with the sale of each ticket bring patrons back to the theatre?

Read the answer in probably the biggest piece of free advertising that a New York theatre ever received. K. C. B. who writes his own invented style of vers libre for the New York American was so impressed by the smile that he was given when he bought a ticket at the Rialto theatre that he returned to his office and wrote one of his famous creations about that smile. It impressed him and of course it impressed everyone of the several hundreds of thousands that read it.

And S. L. Rothapfel was quick to appreciate the value of this. K. C. B.'s "article" appeared in a Monday issue of the American. The following Sunday Mr. Rothapfel bought space in the Sunday issue and answered it. Both of these are reproduced on this page as probably the most unique contributions to motion picture advertising. As Mr. Rothapfel says, it was "good publicity" and he takes advantage of the fact to say that one of the two young ladies will be taken to his new Rivoli theatre soon to open. And you see the great point that Rothapfel emphasizes that all of his ticket sellers are going to keep smiling when they serve the public.

Politeness—and the smile—have come to be recognized as a necessity in the motion picture business. The public comes to the theatre for amusement and the public isn't going to be delighted when it is met by a CRAB. Courtesy and all that courtesy means is just as much a theatre necessity as are the pictures that are thrown on the screen.

But evidently all theatres are not following this policy, or else K. C. B. would not have picked out the Rialto to give it an advertisement worth hundreds of dollars. And courtesy ought to be so universal in its rule as to need no special mention.

"Parentage" Supplies Complete Exhibitors' Campaign

Frank J. Seng, distributor of "Parentage," reports the receipt of letters from exhibitors all over the country praising the service that his office is giving every exhibitor who books the picture.

An interesting and complete publicity plan is followed. Immediately after an exhibitor, no matter where he may be located, books the picture the fullest material goes out to him. This is accompanied by a letter from the publicity department making suggestions as to how to treat the picture in newspaper advertising, special stunts, etc.

This is not merely a bunch of press notices, but a comprehensive campaign which includes newspaper articles suitable for publication from the time that the picture is booked. If the exhibitor will use these stories in connection with his paid advertising there is no reason why "Parentage" should not be well known to everyone before the picture is shown. There are further notices to be used during the run of the film.

This service is in addition to the "Parentage Messenger," a magazine published every two weeks under the editorship of Victor B. Johnson. It is filled with pertinent advertising suggestions, care being used to make all of these ideas applicable to "Parentage."

How S. L. Rothapfel Replied to the Appreciation in a Paid Advertisement in the Same Newspaper and Elaborated the "Smile" Idea

Portland Manager Adopts Saturday Opening

Where a program is running a week, it is policy to introduce the new bill on Saturday, the best day of the week, according to Manager James Parker of the Majestic theatre at Portland, Ore.

Mr. Parker recently inaugurated this policy, and he attributes a thirty per cent increase in his business to the change. Parker's argument is that if a picture is first shown on Saturday will all the attending publicity the theatre gets the greater benefit from the word of mouth advertising from the people who see it on Saturday and Sunday.

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

LAST week the bill at the Rialto was rather heavy, with the Geraldine Farrar picture, "The Woman God Forgot," as the feature. This week it is striking contrast, full of fun and life. And this is not an accident. Rothapfel does these things for the effect they have upon Rialto patrons. The sharp contrasts are created for the psychological effect. The change "rests" the audiences and contributes to that atmosphere that always prevails at the Rialto—that you never know what you are going to see until you see it.

To digress for a moment. It may be interesting to know that "The Woman God Forgot" was the fourth biggest week in the history of the house, and to know too that the war tax has not had the slightest effect upon attendance. Mr. Rothapfel told the writer that he has not had a single complaint, and everyone of his employes were instructed to watch for any comment. Rothapfel always wants to know what the public is thinking and saying. It's an examule that every exhibitor in the country could safely follow with sure benefit to his business, for after all its the public. And it is a tribute to the Rialto that not a single soul complained about the increased admission.

Julian Eltinge is the star in "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," this week's feature, and is even better than his last one. There are enough laughs to fill an evening, but on the same bill is the Mack Sennett comedy, "Roping Her Romeo," which is not only screamingly funny, but introduces a series of daring feats that would do credit to the most widely-advertised "thriller."

But as good as both of these are the Rialto Animated Magazine is the striking feature of the week, because of the way that Mr. Rothapfel has made it. There has never been a more striking effect achieved than the arrangement which follows.

The magazine opens with a Food Editorial. The U. S. bureau sent the Rialto some cards to be shown, but instead of using these Rothapfel made a moving picture of the message and accompanied it with the "Battle Cry of Freedom" and followed it with a cartoon showing the Hoover barber shop preparing to cut off the excess profit whiskers. With this the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" was played. Anyone can imagine the effect that these pictures, with the music by the immense orchestra has upon the audience. Note there were already two patriotic numbers, and then the picture swung into a scene showing the Great Lakes Training Station, one of the greatest pictures of the largest number of sailors that we ever saw in a film, and to this the orchestra burst forth into "Red, White and Blue" in a way that brought cheer after cheer. This was followed by Ambassador Reid, a visit to the Y. M. C. A. "hut" and was accompanied by "Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier." The British tank performing on the New York streets was shown to the music of "Boys of Tipperary." Now get a wonderful effect with the topical. "Our Feather Friends," in colors, was then put in, and with a purpose. "Sunbeam" was the music for this, and then after a few bars of "Queen of the Air" the pictures turned into that of the Curtiss School Fliers, probably the most remarkable aviation picture ever made with the airmen doing all sorts of stunts. See the contrast—real birds and the man-made ones? After the few bars all music stopped except a wind effect just loud enough to be noted. At the end of this came yachting scenes and there was forced to one's mind unconsciously the comparison of the air and the sea. "Sailing" was played with this and, before one knew what had happened, Greek Evans, baritone, stepped upon the stage in sailor uniform. At the same moment the curtains at either side had parted showing striking sea scenes. In the meantime the whole lighting effects of the theatre had become a deep blue. Then Mr. Evans began to sing "Three for Jack" and so thoroughly was the audience carried away with the arrangement that it insisted on bursting into applause before he had ended.

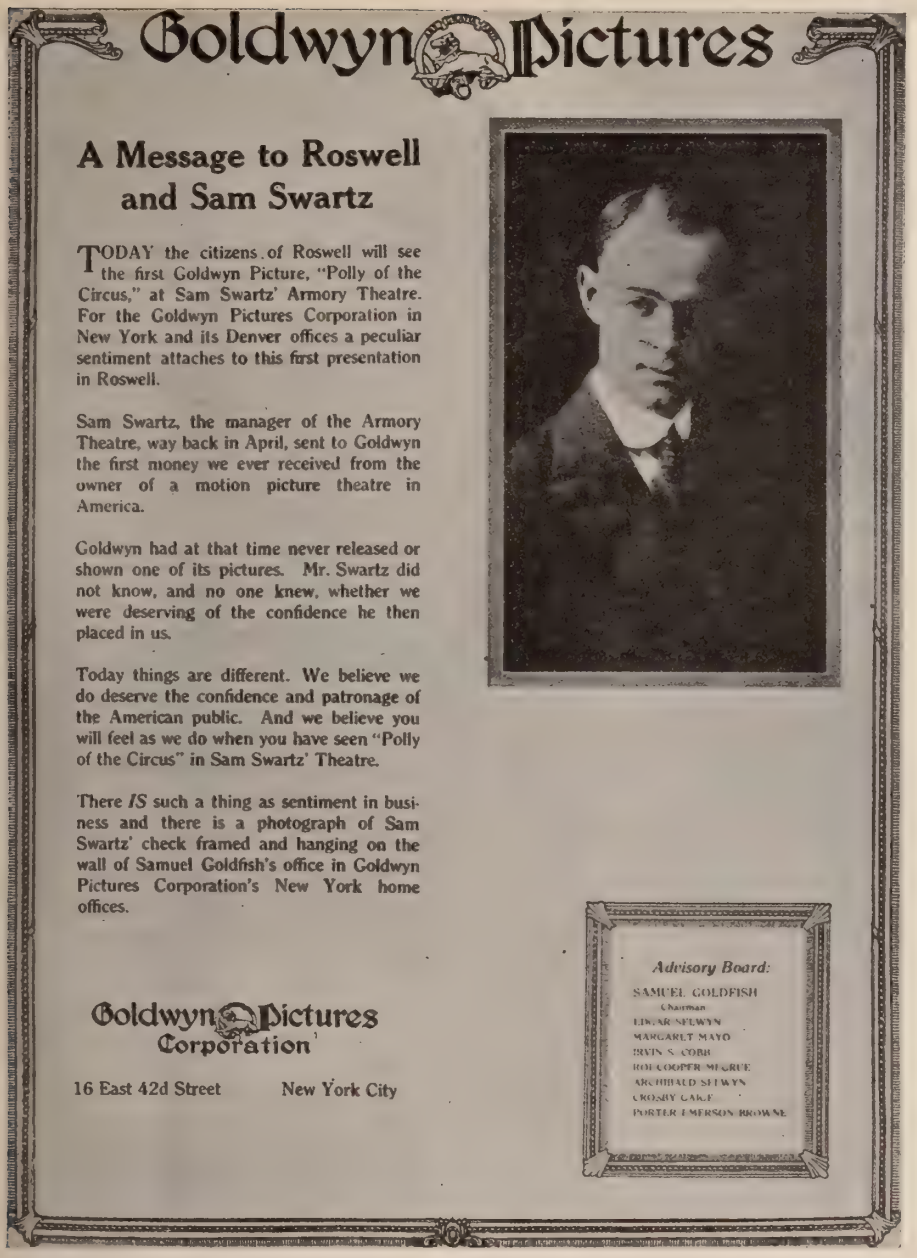
Did you think that this could be done—the welding the picture with the human voice so that one is almost unconscious where one ends and the other begins? In our opinion, this is one of the most remarkable of the many achievements of Rothapfel. It shows surely and without question the perfection to which motion picture entertainment can be carried. And, more than that, it shows what the manager who studies and thinks can do. You may not be able to do the same thing, for you haven't equal opportunity, but if you put into your presentation the same thought that Rothapfel puts there you would have a presentation increased one hundred per cent.

Let us show you again what can be done with a scenic. First let's take the overture which imediately preceded that picture. This week it is the Fantasie from "Faust." Of course everyone knows that one naturally connects this production with Hell and before the music started the flashing red lights gave one the immediate effect. The lights remained red for a time and then grew white and passed into blue just before the scenic was shown. And then the lights seem to leave the theatre and there were chimes and musical effect that told one at once that it was Sunday morning in Bruges, Belgium, the city that was pictured in this wonderfully beautiful hand-colored film. Again the effect on the audience, for everyone sat spellbound as they listened to Rosse's "Poesia Pastoral" and Nevin's "Narcissus" from the orchestra. Music and the lighting brought every mind into complete harmony with the picture. It raised the artistic appreciation immeasurably and it is not surprising that more applause greeted this picture than most features receive and the applause was vigorous and prolonged.

Mr. Rothapfel urges the exhibitors to pay attention to the smaller subjects. If you will turn back in your mind you will remember that it is not the features that we have commented on so much here, but the shorter subjects—the little things, if you will. And it is the great attention, the intimate touch that Mr. Rothapfel gives these things that makes his whole presentation an artistic feast. He doesn't put on a scenic or a comic merely to "fill in," but he makes everything stand out. And that is the reason that he was happy after the first performance, because the huge audience spontaneously and vigorously applauded EVERY number.

A clever feature this week is a duet from "Lakme," rendered by Misses Mary and Louise MacFarland, who are twins. The other musical number was "Polka Caprice," a piccolo solo by Carmine Stanzione.

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF OCT. 21



STRAND theatre patrons went into a veritable tornado of laughter over "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," a Fox comedy which is one of the features of the bill. It is one of the most remarkable animal pictures that has ever been shown and the audience testified its appreciation. The writer really feared for the life of a lady who sat next to him—she couldn't stop laughing to breathe.

As a matter of fact this might be called "animal week" at the Strand for the Mae Marsh feature, "Sunshine Alley," is built around birds and other animals and the effect goes over great with the special music.

After the orchestra had rendered Tchaikovsky's "March Slav," the excellent Strand Topical was shown. This opened with Camp Lewis, Wash., showing soldier boys at sports and was followed by ginning cotton ahead of time at El Centro, Cal. Paramount-Bray contributed a novelty in showing how to put volcanos to work. Cheers greeted the pictures of the German soldiers being put to work by the French. The visit of King George to Glasgow and his honors to the women munition workers and wounded soldiers got a big hand. Then followed another Paramount-Bray, "Farming for Fox," an interesting novelty. St. Louis's home defense army, and pictures of the Eighth Illinois at Houston, Tex., followed and the picture was given a stirring ending with a view of the first of our boys in France ready to go into action—in fact, marching to the trenches.

"Picturesque Postcards of Japan," a Pathe in colors, was a novelty.

Grace Hoffman, soprano, sang "Une Voce Poco Fa" and Mischa Ellman, violinist, played "Canto Amoroso," while lights were dimmed and a beautiful stage setting of sea and mountains shown.

This is the advertisement of appreciation that was placed by Goldwyn Pictures in the newspapers of Roswell, N. M., on the day that the Armory theatre showed "Polly of the Circus."

Goldwyn Pays Tribute to First Buyer of Its Pictures

Goldwyn Pictures publicity department takes pride in doing the unexpected. Here is an example of it.

When Goldwyn began its publicity campaign a year and a half ago Sam Swartz, manager of the Roswell theatre, Roswell, N. M., accepted the new organization at its face value and sent his check to cover the first run booking in his town. The check was framed and a letter of appreciation of confidence sent Mr. Swartz. But the incident was not forgotten.

The other day it came time for the Roswell theatre to run the first Goldwyn Picture, "Polly of the Circus." Without the knowledge of Mr. Swartz, Goldwyn secured one of his photographs and had a carefully prepared advertisement placed in the daily papers of Roswell. And when Sam Swartz opened his papers at the breakfast table to take a look at his own display he was surprised to find a quarter of a page carrying his own portrait and carrying a message from Goldwyn to the people of Roswell. The advertisement is reproduced here.

'picture shop.' They don't walk right in now. They give the lobby more consideration than they do picking out a suit of clothes."

Mr. Rickards declares that lobby display is the most important part of theatre management today and his comment on the material sent out by most manufacturers is breezy. He continues:

"The exhibitor in provinces, is smothered in a barrage fire of lurid literature, shot through the mails daily, some of which costs the producer more than the exhibitor takes into his theatre in a year, and to what end? To induce the exhibitor to sign a contract. And when he has that name on the line, Mr. Producer feels assured that he has done 'his bit.'

"I wonder if he ever stops to think after getting his contract and his deposit, what he has provided in the way of ammunition for the exhibitor to go gunning after the patron.

"Here is the formula and few if any deviate from it to any extent: Set of 11-14 fotos (indifferent brown sepia), pair 22-28 said to be hand-colored taken from 'stills' made from some ultra inception of the director, who is striving to bring a great light to the world, said light shy on battery power, save as it is discerned by the director. A one six or three sheet done from some lethargic scene taken from the worst bit of the picture, or the reproduction of a murder. They never miss a murder. Or perhaps it is a scene where the heroine sits gazing into the fireplace with an expression on her face like that of a woman who has missed a bargain store sale. This is supposed to be the 'big thing in artistic circles.'

"Honestly, now. What kind of an impression do you think the average fan, who has not been bombarded with the producer's seventy-fives in the shape of literature, that makes the old-time circus poster seem like a Sunday school tract, gleans from that dame gazing into the grate?

"Is there a suggestion of what the fan is to see contained in this supposed 'piece de resistance' of picture maker's lobby display?

"Not on your life. It is simply the average poster material. No better, no worse, than any of the others the exhibitor gets daily from his exchange.

"The producer sends you gunning like a Chinaman friend of mine was wont to do. He did not care about the selection of his weapon when the desire to hunt took possession of him. A forty-five-ninety Winchester was as good to kill snow birds, as twelve-bore shot gun was for bear.

"How many producers are shooting at the exhibitor with Krag-Jorgensens and giving him bird shot to bring down the bear patrons?"

It is only too true that the statements of these two men are true as applied to the great majority of the film manufacturers. Many of them are simply furnishing the same material that they supplied years ago. They are not offering the exhibitors the material with which to make displays in keeping with the picture. That lobby displays have progressed has been practically entirely due to the exhibitor.

Manufacturers who devote more time to achieving striking effects and novel plans for exploitation through the lobby are going to find the future sale of their films a whole lot easier.

"France in Arms"—The Story of the Part France Is Taking in the War

(Pathe Special Five Reels)

Taken by the cinematographic section of the French army, "France in Arms," a Pathe five-reel special, illustrates, as its title suggests, every side of the mighty effort France is making to defeat the Teutons. The picture takes up the activities of the French army from the time of the declaration of war, and comes down to the present when her armies are fighting desperately to drive the Germans from her soil. At the start we see the young men called to the colors, going through the course of training as prescribed by the military authorities. Then it shows how France has not alone mobilized her fighting machinery, but shows in detail what the industrial workers are doing and the vast amunition factories which are turning out millions of rounds of ammunition to supply the millions of soldiers on the firing line. It shows the ever-increasing efficiency along those lines of industrial activities, and as evidence shows mammoth storehouses filled with clothing, food, ammunition and small arms, to be used by her armies. The picture takes you to the country and shows the work that the farmers are doing. You are shown the manufacture of small guns, big guns, trench mortars, giant guns mounted on railways, and throwing shells weighing more than a ton, a distance of thirty miles. You are shown the advance made in aeroplane construction, and the part this branch of the French military service is taking in the struggle. In these scenes you are shown the most thrilling and most marvelous air activities ever seen.

"Who Is Number One?"—Paramount Serial Featuring Kathleen Clifford

(Paramount Serial—Two Reels)

Anna Katherine Green's baffling mystery story has been adapted to the screen, and produced by Paramount, with Kathleen Clifford in the featured role of Aimee Villon. "Who is Number One?" is the title of this story, which has been produced in fifteen episodes, the first of which is titled, "The Flaming Cross." The story centers about the plans of a gang of plotters against the fortune of Graham Hale, a millionaire inventor. It is a story of revenge—the revenge of a mysterious person who is the instrument through which a woman seeks to make a famous inventor and capitalist pay for his scorn. The woman scorned does not seek the life of the man who has scorned her, but she desires that he shall be ruined—that one by one the big things that go to make him a powerful factor in the world of invention and finance are taken from him, and, lastly, after his most valuable possession, his son, is taken, then that his mind shall be destroyed. Camille Arnot gathers about her men capable of fighting such a foe, and at the head of this body of men is placed "Number One," the mysterious person who directs all the activities against the happiness and fortunes of Graham Hale. In the midst of all this intrigue and plotting is Aimee Villon (Katherine Clifford), who is in love with Tommy Hale, and who fights to save the Hales from destruction from this mysterious foe.

The first episode of "Who is Number One?" entitled "The Flaming Cross," with Kathleen Clifford in the featured role, will be seen on the screen of the ———— on ———— of ———— week. The first episode of Paramount's first serial production.

Olive Thomas, One of the Beauties of the Screen, in "Indiscreet Corrine"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Thousands of New Yorker flocked nightly to the roof of the New Amsterdam theatre to see Olive Thomas in the "Midnight Frolic," the most novel and pretentious revue ever presented on the stage of any theatre. This was only a few seasons ago when Miss Thomas was the star attraction at Mr. Ziegfeld's "Follies." Since then Miss Thomas who was pronounced by Charles Dana Gibson to be the prettiest girl on the stage, has entered the motion picture studio, and has appeared in a number of productions, produced by Triangle, and pronounced by the critics to be excellent. ———— week she comes to the ———— theatre in "Indiscreet Corrine," a story of a wealthy young girl who had become bored with quiet home life and insisted upon establishing a "past." She sees an ad in the paper asking for two beautiful young girls "with a past," and she induces her maid to join her in answering the advertisement. They do so, and are surprised when informed of the nature of the work they were asked to do. A prominent young millionaire was expected to arrive by boat, and Corrine and Pansy Hartley (presented by Josie Sedwick), who is the other girl selected from among those answering the "ad," were supposed to attract his attention, and obtain from him a promise to marry. The events which follow the meeting with the young millionaire, form the main theme of the story, and give rise to some situations that go to make the best in screen drama. Miss Thomas is given the opportunity to demonstrate her ability as a dancer and entertainer.

Roy Stewart in Gripping Western Drama, "The Medicine Man"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Roy Stewart, who was last seen in "One-Shot Ross" has since then enacted "The Medicine Man" before the camera, and the results of his work will be seen on the screen of ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Mr. Stewart's work in Western character parts has entitled him to a place in rank with some of the best. He typifies the Western "bad-man" or the good-bad man, and always with realism. He understands the West and its ways. His latest story was written by Jack Cunningham, produced under the direction of Cliff Smith for the Triangle program. He is supported by Ann Kronan, who has the principal feminine role, Percy Challenger, Aaron Edwards, Carl Ulman and Wilbur Higbee. Mr. Stewart presents the role of Jim Walton, who drifts into a small Western town during the time when the man quickest on the trigger ruled. Because he was fearless and quick with a six-shooter, Jim was chosen sheriff. Within a month from the time he took over the office of sheriff, the town of Eldorado was cleared of undesirables. Joe Malone of questionable character is discovered by Jim in the act of taking gold from a deserted mine. He has the mine closed, and orders Malone to keep away. Malone tries to get control. A quack doctor comes to town, and has with him a young girl, who dances to attract a crowd. It develops that this girl is the owner of the mine. Jim meets her, and the two work to defeat the plans of Malone to get control of the mine.

Earle Williams, Vitagraph Star, in Mystery Drama, "The Grell Mystery"

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

Earle Williams, the Vitagraph star, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in a modern detective story, that has all the elements which go to make for swift moving action, stirring plot material and exciting mystery. Miriam Miles has the principal feminine role in this production. The remaining members of a strong supporting cast are: Jean Dumar, Denton Vane, who impersonates a dual role; Mabel Trunnelle, Frank Crayne, Bernard Siegel and Robert Gaillard. "The Grell Mystery" is the title of this detective story, written by Frank Froest, and enacted on the screen with all the exciting moments that usually accompany the reading of one of Sherlock Holmes's most exciting stories. There is mystery, love, romance and adventure—all combined in one gripping drama. Mr. Williams has been seen in several mystery dramas, but the management of the ———— theatre will venture the assertion that in none has he been seen to better advantage than in his latest, "The Grell Mystery." He impersonates the part of a rich criminologist, who places duty above love, and convicts his own sweetheart of murder by finger print evidence, afterward exonerating her of all guilt on the evidence contained in the confession of a dancer who confesses that she stabbed the man whom his sweetheart had been accused of killing. Exciting events follow in quick succession, and "The Grell Mystery" will keep you "guessing" from start to finish.

The Talented Child Actress, Madge Evans, in "The Adventures of Carol"

(World Five-Reel Production)

"The Adventures of Carol" is the latest picture in which Little Madge Evans, the World Pictures' star, appears. She is the featured player, and a more accomplished portrayal of a featured role has seldom been witnessed than the one little Miss Evans gives in her late picture. You will remember that this little star was featured with Carlyle Balckweek, in "The Burglar," an adaptation of Augustus Thomas's stage play of the same name. In this, her latest picture, Miss Evans has the role of Carol Montgomery, the little daughter of an officer in the U. S. Navy. Before leaving for the service, her father cautioned her against answering any questions asked her by strangers, and this little Carol promised to do. Left alone one day, she starts out to find her mother, who had gone to a friend's house. Little Carol is lost in the subway, and when questioned by a subway guard concerning her parents she refused to tell. She leaves the station and wanders about the streets, and is taken to the police station by an officer. She slips out while no one is looking, and again becomes entangled in the crowds. When night comes she lies down in a doorway, and is found by an organ grinder, who makes her accompany him South, and sing. She escapes from the organ grinder, and is taken in by Mr. and Mrs. Fairflax, an old Southern family. It develops that Carol's mother is the daughter of Carol's benefactors, and Carol is instrumental in uniting father, mother and daughter.

"The Adventures of Carol," with Little Madge Evans in the featured role will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

June Caprice, Fox Star, in Patriotic Drama, "Miss U, S. A."—Thrills Aplenty

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

In a red, white and blue story, full of patriotism and the spirit that, at present, prompts all Americans to think first of their country. June Caprice, the winsome, little Fox star, appears at the ———— theatre on ———— of ————week. The title of the production, which is in five reels, is "Miss U. S. A.," and it is as patriotic as its name suggests. Unlike any other role which Miss Caprice has interpreted before the camera, that of Capitola Black, does not offer the opportunity for Miss Caprice to appear in tattered clothes. Heretofore in nearly all her pictures, the little star has been seen in one or more scenes in the role of a poor, little girl, romping the tenement districts in rags. In her latest production Miss Caprice is given the opportunity to interpret strong, emotional characteristics, and she does so with all the ability of the screen's most talented emotional actress. The scenes of the play are laid in Virginia, soon after the United States declared war on Germany. Miss

Baltimore Paper Features Stars in Verse

Last Sunday the Baltimore News opened a verse-writing contest, which is to be a regular feature of the mition picture section. Every man, woman and child in Baltimore may enter the contest and prizes will be awarded. The first subject is Wallace Reid, the verse being limited to eight lines. The winner will be announced on Sunday, when the next subject will also be made known for the following week, and so on.

Caprice presents the role of Capitola, whose mother and father had died shortly after her birth. A brother of her father, wishing to gain control of the large family estates in Virginia, ordered the nurse girl to get rid of her charge and to kill if necessary. The nurse took her charge to New York, and left her with a tenement family. Years later when the baby had grown to womanhood. The nurse confesses to Major Warfield, brother of Capitola's mother. The Major goes to New York and gets the girl. Capitola assists in apprehending a gang of German spies, and it develops that the man who had ordered the nurse to kill her was one of the spies whom Capitola had captured.

June Caprice in patriotic drama, "Miss U. S. A.," to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Marguerite Clark in the Second "Sub-Deb" Story, "Bab's Burglar"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Marguerite Clark will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in the second of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "sub-Deb" stories, "Bab's Burglar." The first was "Bab's Diary," and a more delightful, refreshing comedy-drama had never been seen on the screen than "Bab's Diary." The second of this series, "Bab's Burglar" promises to be as rich in pretty romance and clever comedy as the first. It is unnecessary to venture the statement that Miss Clark is "at her best" in this, her latest picture. She is always at her best, and in this picture she leaves room for no exceptions to the rule. J. Searle Dawley, who has directed Miss Clark's most popular screen plays, is responsible for this, her latest. In the supporting cast are: Leone Morgan, Richard Barthelnes, Frank Losee, Gabriel O'Madigan, Helen Greene, William Hinckley and Guy Coombs. In order to economize, Bab buys a roadster, explaining that "it will save shoe leather." The roadster saves "shoe leather," but it does not save a milk wagon, and several gallons of milk which she succeeded in upsetting in one of her "joy rides." At last she hits upon the idea of using her roadster as a "jitney," and carries passengers to and from the station. She gets, as a passenger, a mysterious young man, whom she suspects as a burglar. A reward is offered for the capture of the mysterious burglar who had terrorized the neighborhood, and Bab determines to get the reward. Her older sister is anxious to marry. The young man whom she suspected of being the burglar was none other than her sister's beau, and Bab had prevented an elopement that had been planned.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "Bab's Burglar," with Marguerite Clark.

Madge Kennedy, Star of "Baby Mine," in "Nearly Married"—Stage Success

(Goldwyn Six-Reel Production)

Madge Kennedy, star of "Baby Mine," conceded by the critics, be one of the best comedy-dramas ever produced on the screen, is to appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Nearly Married," the comedy-drama that took all Broadway by storm when it was produced by Edgar Selwyn, the well-known playwrite and producer, last season. "Nearly Married" has been adapted to the screen and produced by Goldwyn, and it promises to surpass even "Baby Mine" in popularity. Miss Kennedy is the star. In her supporting cast are: Frank Thomas, Mark Smith, Alma Tell, Richard Barthelnes and Hedda Hopper. Have you heard of the latest and most novel profession—a professional corespondent? There is such a profession, and it is stated on good authority, there are those who have taken it up. At any rate, Hedda Hopper, who presents the role of Hattie King in Miss Kennedy's latest picture, has taken it up, and she will convince you that it is not only an exciting profession, but one that is full of romance, and incidentally carries with it a good fee—as fees go. Betty Griffin and her husband disagree from the moment they are married. "Hubby" objects to his wife's brother accompanying them on their honeymoon, and the two agree to disagree. Betty's brother is a lawyer, and he proposes that his sister get a divorce; he agrees, and her husband also consults his lawyer friend, and the two decide to enlist the services of a "professional corespondent." The divorce proceedings are well under way when Harry persuades his wife that "it is all wrong," and they elope. Dick, thereafter appears and announces that the divorce has been granted. Then the fun begins. This little tangle will be straightened out at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, when Madge Kennedy appears in "Nearly Married."

Peggy Hyland in the First Mayfair Production, "Persuasive Peggy"

(Mayfair Six-Reel Production)

Peggy Hyland, the charming young English actress, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre ——— week in "Persuasive Peggy," written by Maraverne Thompson, and produced under the direction of Charles Brabin for the Mayfair Pictures Corporation. You will remember Miss Hyland for her work before the camera, in Vitagraph productions a year or more ago. As the title suggests, Peggy is persuasive—at least her old-fashioned husband decided so after she had suggested a few changes in the manner of "back on the farm." When the story opens, Peggy is enjoying her honeymoon with her rustic husband, Ed. Niagara Falls is selected as the proper place to spend a honeymoon, after which Ed. suggests that they attend the State Fair. This did not seem the right move in Pegg's mind, and she rebels and steals away to the Falls. Thus the stand is taken early in the young couple's lives, and Peggy demonstrates her persuasive character. Back on the farm Peggy becomes restless, and she resolves to furnish the home in keeping with her modern ideas of refinement and taste. Because of her extravagance, Ed. rebels, in turn, but she maintains her point and the young husband submits. She then directs her attentions in favor of the custom of allowing the farm hands to eat at the same table as the members of the family. Her stubborn husband, at last, submits, and all is peace and happiness until she absents herself from the home on various occasions, the reason for which Ed. could not understand. It develops, however, that she has been sitting for a portrait which she presents to her husband as a birthday present. The appearance of a little stranger completes their happiness.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "Persuasive Peggy," with Peggy Hyland in the featured role, supported by William Davidson, Mary Cecil, Gertrude Norman, Charles Sutton, Jules Cowles and Arthur Houseman.

Juliette Day's First Appearance in Pictures—"Betty and the Buccaneers"

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Juliette Day who "broke" into the "movies" recently, being the latest recruit from the speaking stage, is to appear on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Betty and the Buccaneers," a five-part drama produced by the American Film Company, releasing on the Mutual program. If you like romance, adventure and would like to see a duplicate of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island" flashed on the screen you don't want to miss this latest attraction at the ——— theatre. Miss Day has not been seen before on the screen, but because of her excellent work before the camera in this picture she has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the critics that she is entitled to a niche in the hall of fame among the screen stars. Before entering the studio of the motion picture Miss Day appeared on the stage. She has a magnetic personality, screens like a "winner," and makes those who see her wish that there were more like her to tell their story on the screen. In her first production she presents the role of Betty, the daughter of a professor. Her father, not familiar with the ways of the business world, is easily the victim of an old sea captain, who persuades him to invest his money toward equipping an expedition to search for a "treasure island." Her father not only consents to furnish the money, but is persuaded to accompany the expedition. Once on the open seas, the old sea "dog" compels the professor to make his will, and leave him, the captain, executor of the estate. The plan works well enough until a secret service man meets Betty and the plan is exposed.

Juliette Day, first appearance in motion pictures, in "Betty and the Buccaneers," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Ann Murdock in Adaptation of Broadway Success, "Please Help Emily"

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

"Please Help Emily," a comedy-drama, which had an extended run on Broadway last season, has been adapted to the screen and produced under the direction of Dell Henderson for the Empire All-Star Corporation, releasing on the Mutual program. Ann Murdock, favorite on the speaking stage and recently induced to work before the camera, interprets the title role of Emily. In the supporting cast are: Herbert Bruce, Hal Brown, Amy Veness, Grace Carlisle, Katherine Stewart, Rex McDougall, Ferdinand Gottschalk, John Harwood, Jules Raucourt and Harriet Thompson. Miss Murdock made her professional debut in 1908 as Ardminter Nesbitt in "The Lion and the Mouse." After three performances of this play Miss Murdock was called to New York and created the ingenue role of Margy North, playing opposite Robert Edeson in "The Offenders." It is only recently that she entered motion pictures, but in the short time in which she has worked before the camera she has demonstrated that she can make possible five reels of sound entertainment. This is particularly true of her latest appearance in pictures. "Please Help Emily" is a rollicking comedy-drama with a "punch." Emily is a girl who can make more trouble for others in the space of twenty-four hours than the most harum-scarum type of girl. Miss Murdock will convince you of this when you see her unconsciously scare up trouble for Judge and Mrs. Lethbridge, in whose care she has been placed by her father, who is a professor. She has many admirers of the opposite sex, and two in particular. Don't let Miss Murdock leave the screen of the ——— theatre without every one of you seeing her impliedly ask, "Please Help Emily."

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

One of O. Henry's Most Appealing Stories "Renaissance at Charleroi"

(General Four Reel Production)

O. Henry stories have proved as interesting and entertaining on the screen as they did between the covers of a book. His millions of readers who have been brought in close intimacy with the human tragedies which he so vividly depicts in his stories are given the opportunity of seeing the characters which he made real in his stories tell their story in pictures. His latest to be adapted to the screen, "The Renaissance at Charleroi," is in four reels. J. Frank Glendon appears as Grandemont Charles, and Agnes Ayres as Adele Fauquier. Eleanor Lawson, Webster Campbell, Marguerite Forrest and Ethel Northrup are in support. It is a story of the South and O. Henry never wrote a more appealing romance. The story deals with the attempts of a wealthy Southerner to find Mlle. Adele, the girl whom he wishes to make his wife. His search reaches over a space of ten years, and in this time he spends a vast fortune. His last dollar he spends in rehabilitating the old family home on the occasion of the family anniversary. In bringing his story to a climax O. Henry has employed one of his most striking and sympathetic denouements. In modern phraseology he has given his story a "punch," and one that registers with all the realism that he intended when he penned the episode, "The Renaissance at Charleroi."

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, an adaptation from an O. Henry story. ...

"John Ermine of Yellowstone," a Butterfly Picture—Story of Indian

(Butterfly Five Reel Production)

"John Ermine of Yellowstone" was written by Frederic Remington in collaboration with Louis Evans Shipman. Mr. Remington will be remembered for his paintings of Western characters and his thorough knowledge of the Indian and his ways. He has written "John Ermine of Yellowstone Park," and it has been adapted to the screen under the direction of Francis Ford for the Butterfly program. Mr. Ford also takes the leading role of John Ermine. In the supporting cast are: Mae Gaston, Burwell Hamrick, John Darkcloud, Joe Flores, William Carroll, Duke Worne, Marc Fenton and Elsie Ford. If you like action in the photodrama, you will like this late Butterfly; if you like a story of the American Indian together with an unusual love romance and adventure, you will enjoy this production. There is everything contained that goes to make an entertaining screen drama. John Ermine, when a baby was stolen from his white parents by Indians and reared under the care of Fire Bear, chief of the Crow Indians. Until he becomes a young man, he believes that he is of Indian blood. With difficulty the old chief convinces him that he is the son of white parents. He finds a photograph of a young girl, who is the daughter of the post commander. He afterward meets her and rescues her from the hands of the Indians. An army officer is in love with her, and, in her defense, Ermine kills him.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Francis Ford in "John Ermine of Yellowstone," written by Frederic Remington.

Little Mary McAlister, the Child Actress in Strong Drama, "The Kill Joy"

(Perfection Five Reel Production)

Little Mary McAlister, the little screen star who has delighted the millions by her work before the camera comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Kill Joy," a five-part Perfection production, telling of the adventures of a little waif, left homeless on the Western plains, when her father while crossing the plains to the frontier town of "Contentment," falls from a cliff and is killed. Billie is picked up by Bob, the driver of a merchandise wagon, and taken to the town of "Contentment," where he keeps her hidden. His actions arouse the suspicions of the natives, and they suspect that he has a woman concealed in his cabin. A Vigilance Committee is organized and preparations are made for a "hanging" when they discover that the "woman" is a little child whom he has rescued from the plains. One of the questionable characters of the town kidnaps Billie with the aid of a band of Indians. Billie has made friends with the majority of the townspeople, and they set out to bring her abductor to justice and to death if necessary. "The Crab," who has planned her abduction, is won over by her smile and perfect confidence in him, but it is too late. He is overtaken and brought back to "Contentment" to suffer the penalty. Billie makes a plea for his life, and he is spared. He afterward reforms and becomes one of Billie's many "fathers." "The Kill Joy" promises entertainment for old and young. Little Mary McAlister plays the part of Billie to perfection. In the supporting cast are: Granville Bates, James Fulton, James West, William F. Clifton, U. K. Houpt and Cris Pino.

Little Mary McAlister will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Kill Joy."

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Metro Reaches Height of Production Career

Many Features Under Way at Both Eastern and Western Studios of Corporation—Stars Considered Best Company Has Had

MANY productions which are proclaimed by Metro as magnificent are under way at both the Eastern and Western studios of Metro Pictures Corporation, it was announced last week. Never in the history of the organization has it claimed such a notable group of photodramas and stars at the same time.

Prominent in the list of features under way at the Metro studio in New York, where Maxwell Karger is personal supervisor, is "An American Widow," the new comedy in which Ethel Barrymore will star. It is said to be a distinct departure for Miss Barrymore from the emotional roles she has been doing in previous Metro plays. Irving Cummins is Miss Barrymore's main male support in the feature, which will mark his debut in Metro subjects. Frank Reicher is directing the five-part production.

In the vanguard of the present Metro productions is "God's Message," with Nazimova as star. It is being directed by George D. Baker.

Emily Stevens, having completed work under the direction of William S. Davis on "Alias Mrs. Jessop," is beginning work on the screen version of "Daybreak," with Albert Capellani as director. Julian L'Estrange will play opposite the star.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have begun the production of "Red, White and Blue Blood," under the direction of Charles J. Brabin. William H. Tooker, Adella Barker, Duncan MacRae, Arthur Housman and Cecil Fletcher are among the players included in the cast.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew continue to produce one one-act Metro-Drew comedy a week. At present they are preparing "The Spirit of Merry Christmas," which will be released during the holidays.

At the Quality studio, under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, Harold Lockwood is completing his production of "The Square Deceiver," a screen version by Mr. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer of Francis Perry Elliott's story, "Love Me for Myself Alone."

Out in Metro's Western studios, at Hollywood, Edith Storey is engaged in the production of "The Legion of Death," based on the present situation in Russia.

Viola Dana has begun work at the Pacific coast studio on "The Winding Trail," under the direction of John H. Collins, who was also Miss Dana's director in the East.

Emmy Wehlen will return to appear in a new Metro wonderplay after a complete rest, following her completion of "The Outsider," directed by William C. Dowlan, adapted by Charles A. Taylor from Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "Nobody."

Bushman-Bayne Feature Has Well Selected Cast

Metro has announced that a cast of prominent motion picture players has been assembled to support Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, the Metro co-stars, in their forthcoming picture, "Red, White and Blue Blood."

Three C Comedies Get Three New Players

President Joseph A. Klein, of the Commonwealth Comedy Company, producer of the Three C comedies, released through General, has engaged three new players to be featured in these productions. They are Claude Cooper, Virginia Clark and Kenneth Clarendon, all with previous motion picture experience with leading companies. In addition, Arthur Ellery, comedy director, has been engaged to handle the new set of Three C leads.

General Issues New Press Sheet for "Camille"

General Film has issued a second press sheet for the de luxe six-reel production of "Camille," which is being distributed for the Hanover Film Company.

Mme. Nazimova, Appearing in Her Own Productions

Clara Kimball Young Begins on New Feature

Clara Kimball Young, it was announced last week, has started work on a new feature to be called "The Marionettes," which was at first expected to be the first feature for Miss Young under her own management. A misunderstanding with the Charles Frohman Estate is understood to have caused her to screen "Magda" and "Shirley Kaye" before starting on it. It is announced the question of screen rights to "The Marionettes" has been fully established.

The supporting cast will include Nigel Barrie, Alexander Francis and Corliss Giles, who appeared with Miss Young in "Shirley Kaye," which production marked Mr. Giles's first appearance on any screen. With Miss Young in the picture will also appear her father and mother.

Emile Chautard, who has just finished a picture for Lina Cavalieri, has been engaged to direct "The Marionettes," and will direct for Miss Young all pictures in the future.

Fun-Art Films Promises Much in Comedy Way

In "A Rag, a Bone and a Hank of Hair," the first two-reel comedy to be released by Fun-Art Films, Inc., it is declared that Vincent Bryan, author and producer, is at his best. Gordon Dooley and his sister, Ray, well known in vaudeville, are featured in the comedy. Edward Kimball, father of Clara Kimball Young, also has a prominent part.

The second picture, already under way at the Thanhouser Studio, will be a burlesque on "Cleopatra," called "Leo Patrick," it is announced, and this will be followed by "The Open Car Conductor."

It is the intention to release on the state rights plan eighteen or more comedies a year.

Butterfly Stars and Directors Are Rearranged

Stars and directors on the Butterfly program have been rearranged in accord with President Carl Laemmle's instructions and production at Universal City for features to be released under that brand will involve the following combinations: Harry Carey and Molly Malone, directed by Jack Ford; Jack Mulhall and Donna Drew, directed by Douglas Gerrard; little Zoe Rae, directed by Stuart Payton; Louise Lovely and Hart Hoxie, directed by Edward J. Le Saint; Ella Hall and Emory Johnson, directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. An important exception to the foregoing arrangement will be noted in the combination of Ella Hall, Emory Johnson and Little Zoe Rae, directed by Elsie Jane Wilson, in a special feature made for the Bluebird program, to be entitled "My Little Boy," and set for release Christmas week.

First Three Sunshine Comedies in Exchanges

It was announced last week that the Fox Exchanges in the United States have been supplied with the prints of the first three announced Sunshine Comedy releases and have held trade showings in their various cities. The exhibitors went to these showings all intent upon putting the "acid test" to the new brand of comedies which Mr. Fox is offering, Mr. Fox insisting that the exhibitors see Sunshine Comedies before they booked them.

"I have no fear for our Sunshine Comedies," declared Mr. Fox. "The trade showings and the response of exhibitors in booking them have convinced me that these comedies have not only struck a new note in the production of comedies, but that they will please the exhibitor and the public.

"Sunshine Comedies have now been shown the exhibitors in every section of the country. I have received hundreds of letters in praise of them.

"One exhibitor writing me from the Middle West said he regarded it as his patriotic duty to book Sunshine Comedies and show them to his audiences."

Fred Church Appears with Kathleen Clifford

The production at Balboa studios, Long Beach, Cal., of a new five-reel society drama by Harl McInroy and featuring Kathleen Clifford, has been started, it was announced last week. Fred Church has been engaged by President H. M. Horkheimer as Miss Clifford's leading man. The star's support includes Mollie McConnell, Gordon Sackville, Ruth Lackaye, Neil Cameron Hardin, Jr., Marie Van Tassell, Nell Holman and Ethel Pepprell. The title of the McInroy script is "Glad Glory." Edgar Jones, under whose direction the fifteen-episode serial, "Who Is Number One?" featuring Miss Clifford and released by Paramount, was staged, will direct the new production.

Dorothy Dalton Works at Night on New Feature

It is announced that Dorothy Dalton and her company are working after regular hours each evening on the next Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount. Special lighting effects are required, which is one of the reasons assigned for this strenuous activity. After the picture is finished it is said that Miss Dalton intends to hie herself to Arrowhead Springs, Cal., for a week or so of rest.

Herbert Standing Appears with Child Actress

In Baby Marie Osborne's latest picture, "The Little Patriot," which is not yet down for release, Herbert Standing played an important part, this being his first appearance in Pathe pictures. He has been an actor for over fifty years, and for twenty-three years in succession appeared at the Criterion theatre in London. The little Pathe star is said to be the first child with whom he had ever been cast.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Noted Actor of the Stage, Visits Herbert Brenon at His Studio

Herbert Brenon to Direct English Stage Star

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson to Be Presented on Screen in "Passing of Third Floor Back"—Released Before the New Year

SIR JOHNSTON FORBES-ROBERTSON, the English stage star, is to be presented on the screen by Herbert Brenon in Jerome K. Jerome's "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," it was announced this week. The role of the Stranger in Mr. Jerome's drama is said to be the English actor's most popular stage creation.

"I fel singularly fortunate in being able to present Sir Forbes-Robertson in 'The Passing of the Third Floor Back,'" says Mr. Brenon. "First, because Sir Forbes-Robertson is the greatest living English actor. Secondly, because Mr. Jerome's drama carries a striking message of love and uplift and human kindliness in these troubled times. I feel sure, too, that Sir Forbes-Robertson's playing of the Passerby will go down among the great things of the silent drama."

Sir Forbes-Robertson has just arrived in this country and expects to return to England as soon as the screen production is completed. The English star, it is said, came to this country solely to do the Jerome drama before the motion picture camera and the fact that he selected Mr. Brenon to interpret the play on the screen is a high compliment to the producer. Mr. Brenon has already commenced work on "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," and he plans to show the finished production before the first of the year.

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back" is, in a measure, a symbolical story. It is replete, however, with human humor and a compelling charm of telling, aside from the spiritual note of its message. To a dingy and drab boarding house in the sordid end of London, a house beset with bitterness and rancor, and peopled with souls discouraged with their never-ending struggle against circumstances, comes a Stranger—a Passerby—who is relegated by the landlady to the third floor back. The Stranger, by refusing to see in the landlady and his fellow boarders anything but the best, calls out the best in them and, one after another, they become morally rehabitated. Before his tender smile and understanding words, their bickerings and hatred disappear. They grow mutually helpful and strangely happy. Then, when love has entered their hearts, the Stranger passes from their midst as mysteriously as he came.

Mr. Brenon is surrounding Sir Forbes-Robertson with what is considered a brilliant cast. Many of the original players will appear with the star in the film adaptation. Mr. Brenon has temporarily postponed the filming of Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" until he completes "The Passing of the Third Floor Back."

Ethel Barrymore's Next Is a Comedy Feature

It was announced by Metro last week that the next picture in which that company will star Ethel Barrymore will be a comedy. After a series of screen plays of the dramatic type Miss Barrymore expects to demonstrate her versatility on the screen by appearing in a character said to be wholly different from any of the ones in which she has appeared. Coming close after "The Eternal Mother," work upon which Miss Barrymore is now completing, Metro considers the contrast surprising.

The name of the comedy, it is announced, is "An American Widow." Frank Reicher is the director.

"Freedom of World" Affords Publicity Chance

Goldwyn Asserts Feature Is One of Most Timely Patriotic Subjects Produced—Said to Show Army Life Thoroughly

IRA M. LOWRY'S photospectacle, "For the Freedom of the World," which is to be distributed to exhibitors through Goldwyn exchanges, is described by the latter as one of the greatest and most timely patriotic motion pictures ever produced, and is expected to afford one of the most seasonable opportunities given thus far for securing publicity.

At a time when the entire group of civilized nations is engaged in making the world safe for democracy Goldwyn expects the appeal of this drama to be universal. It is said to be not a propaganda picture in the ordinary sense of the word, for the story it tells is reported to have interest quite apart from any other appeal.

"For the Freedom of the World" is said to show the whole possible career of the man who enlists in the service of his country, from concentration camp to the front; work of the Red Cross nurse, life in the trenches and other details of the vast war machine. Regarded as a spectacle the feature claims one of the most powerful battle scenes ever produced, the photographic work of which was done under the eyes of men said to have participated in real warfare. Cooperation of the Canadian Government was enlisted in the work because the officials are said to have felt that the film was an authentic document designed for the good of all people.

One of the special means of securing publicity on the picture is the co-operation which Goldwyn expects from all enlistment stations. In this instance Goldwyn said in an announcement: "All enlistment stations will be glad to co-operate with the exhibitor on this release, from aiding him to dispose of tickets to taking seats en bloc. Patriotic societies of all kinds may be approached in the same way and certainly with equally good effect. The patriotic nature of the appeal will also open to the exhibitor certain window displays in the neighborhood of his theatre not accessible on ordinary release. The exhibitor must be cautioned, however, about using the American flag in advertising, as this is in violation of federal statute."

Theda Bara Begins Twenty-seventh Production for Fox

THEDA BARA, after a rest of two weeks, the first she has had in more than a year, started work on October 29 at Fort Lee, N. J., on her twenty-seventh production for William Fox. As usual, she is under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

Following a long sojourn in southern California, where, after the completion of "Cleopatra," she finished two other Standard Pictures. Miss Bara at first found it rather trying to work under the artificial light of the Eastern studios. She expressed herself as preferring natural light conditions such as usually are obtainable at Hollywood.

Miss Bara's new vehicle is said to be peculiarly suited to her talents. It was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and is declared to be a gripping, virile type of story to contain many decidedly tense dramatic situations. The action takes place in and around New York.

The Fox production of "Cleopatra" is now in its fourth week at the Lyric theatre, New York, and still is playing to good houses. Standing room only has been the condition confronting the management on practically every night since the opening, and it is estimated that half as many persons as have seen the picture have been turned away. The length of the New York City run is indefinite.

Jack Dill Gets Setback in Army Plans

Jack Dill, playing the lead in Henry Kerman's Big V comedy company on the Vitagraph lot, was all ready to go to war, resigned his part in the new Vitagraph picture, made himself a present of an army haircut and reported at headquarters, only to be told that his contingent would not be called for possibly six weeks or more. So Jack Dill is again cavorting in Big V's.

"Over Here" Distributed by World Film

"Over Here" is announced as the title of what is claimed to be an exceptionally timely and unusual motion picture of contemporary patriotic interest that will shortly be distributed by the World Film Corporation. The subject, which is in two reels, shows the building of one of the United States Army cantonments, from an actual wilderness to a city housing 40,000 troops, in a period of only fifty-two days' time. The scene is Camp Pike, situated in Arkansas, not far from Little Rock.

Charles Edward Russell Makes First Screen Attempt

Charles Edward Russell, Socialist leader, has just made his first appearance before a motion picture camera at the Herbert Brenon studios. Mr. Russell was one of the principal members of the American (Root) Commission to Russia and, since the return of the Commission to this country, has lectured and written extensively on the birth of democracy in Russia.

At the Brenon studios scenes were staged depicting the arrival of the Commission in Petrograd, the reception of Mr. Russell by the Duma, his welcome by the committees of workingmen as the representative of American labor, and glimpses of the Commission en route across the new republic in the former Czar's royal train, which actually was placed at the disposal of Elihu Root and his associates.

The new scenes are to be incorporated in Mr. Brenon's production of "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

"Son of His Father" Is Well Liked

Thomas H. Ince's first Charles Ray picture for Paramount seems to have struck a popular chord among both exhibitors and their patrons. Concerning "His Father's Son," the concensus of opinion has been summed up by Paramount as: "A feature quite above the ordinary."

It is expected that "His Mother's Boy," Ray's second film, supervised by Mr. Ince, to be released in December, will be fully as interesting if not even more striking than the first production.

Stern Brothers Change Places on Map

The Stern Brothers, of L-Ko, changed places on the map last week, and boosted trans-continental railroad travel in a manner thus: President Julius Stern departed for Los Angeles, where L-Ko Studios are located, at Hollywood, immediately upon the arrival of his brother, Abe Stern, treasurer of the company, from the Pacific Coast. While President Julius is in California, Treasurer Abe will remain in New York, to manage L-Ko affairs in the Mecca Building.

Donald Hall Has Role in Emily Stevens Subject

Donald Hall has been engaged to play the role of Raymond Fluery in support of Emily Stevens in the forthcoming Metro picture, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," it was announced last week. The picture was adapted by Albert LeVino from the story of Blair Hall, and is directed by William S. Davis. Hall recently played opposite Norma Talmadge in "The Moth," Shirley Mason in "The Awakening of Ruth" and Violet Mersereau in "The Raggedy Queen."

Especially Equipped Studio for Lee Children

When, recently, through General Manager Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation, it was announced that hereafter Jane and Katherine Lee would be starred in Fox Standard Pictures, there was set aside for them a special studio at Fort Lee where they will work for a solid year.

Dressing rooms such as are provided for the most important stars in filmdom are at their disposal; rest rooms, furnished with everything in which children delight, are there; playing quarters were not overlooked, and should they want to remain over night at the studio sleeping rooms are ready for them.

Harold Lockwood in a Scene from His Next Metro "The Square Deceiver," Based on the Novel "Love Me for Myself Alone"

Yorke-Metro Gives Lockwood Two Directors

Planned Under New System to Produce One Lockwood Feature Each Month—Fred J. Balshofer Is Director-General

ACCORDING to an announcement issued last week by Yorke Film Corporation, the dual director system, successfully employed with Bushman and Bayne, Edith Storey and Viola Dana, will be adopted by Yorke, whose star is Harold Lockwood.

This means that two directors will be engaged in directing Harold Lockwood. Each director will put on an alternate picture and use the time between to assemble and cut his last picture and prepare for his next production.

Under this system Yorke Film Corporation will make one Lockwood production a month for release through Metro without sacrificing quality for speed. As a matter of fact the system augers for smoothness in production on account of the length of time allotted each director for preparation.

Fred J. Balshofer, who has been directing Lockwood in his recent releases, will be director-general. He will have general supervision of the preparation and actual staging of the pictures.

In line with this policy Yorke Film Corporation has engaged Francis Ford as one of the two directors. Mr. Ford has been in motion pictures since its earliest days, both as a director and player. Mr. Ford's motion picture debut was made at a time when only single reel subjects were made. He was a member of the Melies Company in the days of the Westerns; this was one of his early associations. Later he became associated with the New York Motion Picture Company, which also produced Westerns.

The selection of the alternate director has not yet been made and should it happen that no one is engaged for the post up to the time Mr. Ford finishes his first production Mr. Balshofer will stand ready to direct the subject to follow.

The new system will go into effect immediately with Mr. Ford directing the next picture.

Capellani Begins Work for Metro Corporation

Albert Capellani, the director who will be introduced to Metro patrons in connection with an Emily Stevens picture, already has begun work on the new production, a screen version of "Daybreak," the play written by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. Produced in New York earlier in the season, and now touring the country, it has been adapted for the screen by the director himself in collaboration with June Mathis. Julian L'Estrange will play the part opposite Miss Stevens. Mr. Capellani is now directing Mr. L'Estrange and the other members of the supporting cast in the opening scenes of the play. Emily Stevens, it is announced, will begin her work in the production within a few days, being busily engaged in selecting her gowns for the new play.

New Photolight Used for Marguerite Clark

For what is said to be the first time in history of motion picture work, it is stated, the new Harmer-Mark Photolight is being employed in the production of a new picture starring Marguerite Clark, to be released by Paramount in December. Two of the lights are being used, each with a 100,000 candlepower.

Parading in Handsome Gowns Is Only One of the Things That Grace Cunard Does Well in "Society's Driftwood," a Butterfly Production

Bluebird and Butterfly Companies Active

Eight Kept Busy Creating Features for Distribution Early in New Year—Programs Scheduled Well Into December

UNIVERSAL publicity department this week announced that eight companies are busy at Universal City creating features for distribution early in the new year on the Bluebird and Butterfly programs. These programs, as already announced, are scheduled well into December, and it is said there are plenty of subjects ready to be listed.

For the Bluebird list Joseph De Grasse is completing "The Scarlet Car," made from the late Richard Harding Davis' story of the same title, in which Franklyn Farnum will star, supported by Edith Johnson, Lon Chaney and Al W. Filson. George Siegmann is directing Carmel Myers in Doris Schroder's screen version of Frank R. Adams' popular story, "Molly and I," with Kenneth Harlan leading the supporting company.

"Broadway Love" will have Dorothy Phillips, the Bluebird star, in its chief role, with William Stowell her leading man. The adaptation and directing is credited to Ida May Park, Juanita Hanson, Eve Southern, Gladys Tennyson, Lon Chaney, Harry Von Meter, and William Burress are supporting Miss Phillips. "The Highest Card," directed by Rupert Julian, from Elliott J. Clawson's scenario, is being produced on location as a Bluebird with Ruth Clifford the star and Monroe Salisbury to be featured as her leading man.

Butterflys in preparation include "Beloved Jim," a Christmas story written by Joseph Girard, and directed by Stuart Payton, with Harry Carey and Priscilla Dean to be featured; "Wolves of the North," from a story by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, scenarioized by Charles Kenyon, and directed by Edward J. Le Saint, starring Louise Lovely and Hart Hoxie.

Harry Carey and Molly Malone are working under direction of Jack Ford, upon a Butterfly to be called "Hawaiian Knights," a five-reel comedy by George Hively. Then, too, Douglas Gerrard is directing Jack Mulhall and Donna Drew in "Madam Spy," a narrative written by Lee Morrison and prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates.

The stages at Universal City are also occupied for Craig Hutchinson's comedy double-reeler, "Seeing Things," to feature Stanley Laurel and Kathleen O'Connor while the second episode of "The Bull's Eye," an Eddie Polo serial; the last chapter of "The Red Ace," the serial now running, and the seventh episode of "The Mystery Ship," just getting under way with exhibitors, complete the current list of Universal production activities on the west coast.

Alice Brady Starts on Second Select Picture

At the Paragon Studio in Fort Lee Alice Brady began work last week on her second Select picture. This is a screen version of Charlotte Bronte's immortal novel, "Jane Eyre." The picture is being directed by Edward Jose. Miss Brady's leading man is Elliot Dexter.

Coincident with the beginning of her second Select picture, it is announced that progress is being made on the cutting and titling of the first of Miss Brady's Select star series, "Her Silent Sacrifice." This picture was also directed by Mr. Jose. The director, Miss Brady, the star, and a few officials of the Select company saw a roughly-cut version of the picture for the first time on Saturday and were said to be pleased with its many appealing qualities. "Her Silent Sacrifice" is being put into shape for early release through Select Exchanges.

Pathe Bookings Mean Bonds to Exhibitor

Pathe this week made known through its publicity department a statement made by a New York exhibitor concerning "The Seven Pearls" and "The Fatal Ring," the two Pathe serials starring Pearl White and Mollie King. Creighton Hale appears with Mollie King in "The Seven Pearls."

The statement, which is no doubt of interest to other exhibitors, reads: "I was lucky enough to book both 'The Fatal Ring' and 'The Seven Pearls,' and as a result, when the Government called for subscriptions to the Liberty Loan I managed to make a good sized subscription. I have divided my bonds into two packages, one I call 'The Fatal Ring' and the other 'The Seven Pearls,' and it is going to mean joy to me for many years in the future to spend 'The Fatal Ring' and 'The Seven Pearls' income that accrues from these bonds."

Paramount Serial Advertised Big in Virginia

The Serial Department of Paramount Pictures Corporation, in charge of Jerome Beatty, last week announced that theatres in Virginia are launching big advertising campaigns and publicity drives on "Who Is 'Number One'?" the Paramount serial starring Kathleen Clifford, laying great stress upon the fact that Miss Clifford is a Virginia girl, claiming Charlottesville as her home town.

Miss Clifford is co-operating with Virginia exhibitors and is writing for them open letters, addressed to her friends, telling of her work in "Who Is 'Number One'?" These the Virginia theatre managers are said to be using to excellent effect in their advertising.

In Buffalo and vicinity, theatres booking "Who Is 'Number One'?" are driving home the fact that Anna Katharine Green wrote the novel. Anna Katharine Green has long lived in Buffalo.

Ashley to Direct Madge Kennedy Productions

Arthur Ashley, formerly actor and director for the World Film Corporation, has been engaged by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, it was announced last week, to direct the future productions of Madge Kennedy, whose first Goldwyn release indicated that other features with this star will be welcome.

"Oh Mary Be Careful!" is the first Goldwyn picture Ashley has been deputized to direct with Miss Kennedy as star. His company has gone to the South, where exterior scenes will be taken. Clarence Jay Elmer, assistant to Mr. Ashley at the Peerless studio, is also with him at the Goldwyn studios.

Second Series of Ade Fables Near Close

The second series of the Ade Fables in slang, made by Essanay for release through General, is drawing near a close. The eleventh of the twelve, which has just been completed, is "The Fable of the Back Trackers from the Hot Sidewalks."

William Desmond and Director Raymond Wells Followed the Trend of Fashion, and Donned Khaki in Triangle's "Fighting Back"

Select Claims That "Over There" Aids Recruiting

It was announced by Select Pictures last week that reports have been received by Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures, which indicate that one of the reasons why "Over There," the new Select production starring Charles Richman and Anna Q. Nilsson, is being heavily booked throughout the country is because of its very direct appeal to men of enlisting age throughout the communities where it is shown. It is estimated that its presentation will have an appreciable influence on recruiting for the United States army, and in this connection the land battleship, "The Recruit," which is anchored in Union Square, plays a leading part. The picture was produced under the direction of James Kirkwood.

Title of Harold Lockwood Picture Changed

The title of Harold Lockwood's next Metro wonder play has been changed from "Love Me for Myself Alone" to "The Square Deceiver." The original title is the same as that of the novel by Francis Perry Elliott from which the screen play was adapted. The picture is a comedy-drama and presents Mr. Lockwood in the role of a multimillionaire who, meeting his dream girl, conceals his identity, becomes a chauffeur and lives a most unusual romance. The production is in five reels.

Hayakawa May Get Scenes in Hawaii

Famous Players-Lasky last week announced, through its publicity department, that Sessue Hayakawa and a company of fifteen people may shortly go to Hawaii to film scenes in a forthcoming Paramount picture. The Japanese star's next picture will be "The Secret Game," a December Paramount release.

Triangle Staff Works on High Quality Reels

Olive Thomas Busy in "Betty Takes a Hand," and Authors Are Furnishing Scripts for Wide Range of Dramas—Directors Await Stories

THREE new pictures have been started, four are in various stages of construction and five directors have finished their latest offerings and are waiting for stories at the Triangle's Culver City Studios, it was announced last week.

With the scenario department working under full sail on some of the finest stories obtainable, including fiction from the Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan, and other publications, the coming Triangle productions from the West promise to include many sure-fire hits, the offerings of some of the nation's best known writers.

Three pictures have been shipped in the past week: "Indiscreet Corinne," starring Olive Thomas; "The Fuel of Life," with Belle Bennett in the stellar role and "Regenerates," featuring Alma Ruebens and Walt Whitman. Stories completed and awaiting shipment are William Desmond's latest offering, "The Sudden Gentleman"; "The Ship of Doom," featuring Claire McDowell and Monte Blue; "Fanatics," in which J. Barney Sherry has the leading part; "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," with the cowboy star, Roy Stewart, and "The Maternal Spark."

The large stock company at Culver City has been noticeably increased within the past two weeks by considerable promising young talent, and Casting Director Arthur Hoyt declares he has engaged several "dark horses" who may yet be numbered among the reigning favorites of the films. Several new players will make their initial appearance with Triangle in the new productions soon to be cast.

Jack Dillon is handling the megaphone on Olive Thomas' latest story, "Betty Takes a Hand," by Katherine Kavanaugh. Included in the cast are Charles Gunn, who is playing opposite Miss Thomas, George Hernandez, Diana Carillo and Frederick Vroom.

The five directors who are waiting for new stories include Cliff Smith, G. P. Hamilton, Thomas N. Heffron, Ferris Hartman and Wyndham Gittens.

Metro Star Stages Two Features at Once

Ethel Barrymore, the Metro star, and Frank Reicher, her director, have been trying recently to see how much work they can consume, according to their activities on two productions at the same time. They have been engaged in the preparation of "The Eternal Mother," a dramatic feature, and "An American Widow," a screen version of a comedy melodrama. In order to leave at the time scheduled for Savannah, Ga., to make the outdoor scenes of the latter production, interior scenes of both pictures had to be made simultaneously.

The main and most important point about this, according to the Metro publicity department, was the fact that this double-barreled program could not have been carried out except for the excellent mental balance of both star and director, whose "team-work" throughout was remarkable. Miss Barrymore was obliged to change her whole mental viewpoint daily, entering into the spirit of first one character and then the other.

Macdonald Scenarioizing for Jackie Saunders

Sherwood Macdonald, it was announced last week, is scenarioizing Lee Arthur's five-reel story for Jackie Saunders, the Horkheimer-Mutual star. Supporting Miss Saunders will be Daniel Gilfether, Mollie McConnell, Gordon Sackville, Arthur Shirley, Ruth Lackaye and Bruce Smith. "Billie" Beckway, who has been in the East for two months, is back in front of the camera in Director Macdonald's company at the Balboa studios, Long Beach.

Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman Are Featured in "The Flaming Omen," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon, This Scene from Which Appears to Be Divided Between Mirth and Consternation

Essanay Recent Releases Reported to Be in Demand

THROUGH the publicity department of Essanay it was announced last week that exchange men report recent Essanay releases are in good demand and that booking is brisk.

"Young Mother Hubbard," Little Mary McAlister's latest comedy-drama, has proved popular. Exhibitors who have already shown it have been so successful with the picture and have made such complimentary reports that other exhibitors are said to be hurrying to book the feature. It is described as a picture of the sort that is bound to be popular, for it unfolds the joys and the heartaches of four little abandoned orphans. "Little Mary" plays the role of "little mother" to the other three.

"The Fibbers," in which Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli play the leading roles, also has proved to be a winner. It is a comedy-drama based on young married life—the theme that made the Skinner series so popular. Many exhibitors have reported that they believe "The Fibbers" is as big a drawing card as the Skinner pictures, which also starred Washburn.

The luck of "Fools for Luck" is said to be continuing without a halt. The picture has made a hit everywhere it has been shown, and apparently it has a long run ahead of it. "Fools for Luck," in which Taylor Holmes, the noted comedian, plays the leading role, exposes the foolishness of superstition. It is Mr. Holmes's second Essanay comedy-drama, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" being the first.

The new prints of Charlie Chaplin's original comedies and the Ade fables also are reported to be in good demand.

Triangle Hurries Film for Uncle Sam

Director Hamilton, of Triangle, worked his company night and day on "The Maternal Spark," in which Irene Hunt is starred, in order to release Rowland Lee, who had been called to the colors, as soon as possible. The picture was turned out in record time, and Lee is now serving Uncle Sam.

Harold Lockwood Finishes First New York Made Picture

WITH the filmization of a number of scenes in Fifth avenue last week, Harold Lockwood finished his next-to-be-released Metro feature. The picture is the first Lockwood has made under the Metro-Yorke banner in the East.

Advance announcements gave "Love Me for Myself Alone" as the title, but this has been changed to "The Square Deceiver."

Francis Perry Elliott wrote the story and in the multi-millionaire young man who became a chauffeur in order to learn if his "dream girl" loved him for himself alone he provided Mr. Lockwood with what is said to be a most congenial role and one that is different from those he has played in recent releases.

The story is a romantic comedy drama of society life and dwells upon the machinations of Mrs. Pugfeather, who is anxious to break into the inner circle of society, hoping thereby to have her daughter Celia meet and win Billy Van Dyke (Harold Lockwood) whose splendid qualities of young manhood and whose vast wealth have made him much sought after by mothers of marriageable daughters.

The first step in Mrs. Pugfeather's campaign is to look for a liveried chauffeur and her ward, Beatrice Forsythe, is sent to hire one. Van Dyke sees her driving through the park and immediately recognizes her as his dream girl. When he learns of her errand and that it has not been successful he, struck by an idea, dons his ex-chauffeur's coat and cap, approaches his dream girl, offers his services as chauffeur and is engaged. Thus begins a romance that completely thwarts Mrs. Pugfeather's plans for her daughter and wins for Billy a girl who loves himself alone.

A cast including Pauline Curley, William Clifford, Dick L'Estrange, Dora Mills Adams and Kathryn Hutchison supports.

Picturized Novel, "K," Released by Jewel

Jewel Productions, Inc., announced this week that it will shortly release "K," adapted from the novel of Mary Roberts Rinehart which was published serially in a widely read magazine, and which has been prepared for the screen by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, who also produced it. Mildred Harris, Miss Weber's recently "discovered" star, is to be presented in the leading role, and True Boardman will have the role opposite in support. Albert Roscoe, Zella Caull and Carl Miller are also in the cast. The production is said to be on a very elaborate scale, and has been purchased by Jewel for distribution after a New York showing at the Broadway theatre.

Army Officers Host to Little Mary McAlister

Three thousand future United States army officers, members of the officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, were given a touch of home life recently when they were hosts to Little Mary McAlister, six-year-old Essanay star, at a reception in her honor at the fort.

Two hundred feet of film showing maneuvers of the command from the fort which recently visited the Essanay studios in charge of Dick Travers, former Essanay actor, also was shown as part of the day's entertainment.

Egyptian City Reproduced in Goldwyn's "Thais"

What is said to be a faithful reproduction to scale of one of the principal streets in the ancient city of Alexandria, Egypt, is a scenic feature of Goldwyn's production of "Thais," Mary Garden's first motion picture vehicle, the photography of which is progressing steadily at the studio at Fort Lee.

The scene set, which was built on the lot back of the studio, is said to have kept fifty workmen busy seven days a week for nearly three weeks. About 1,500 extras will be used in the scenes requiring the set, it is announced by Goldwyn.

Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in New Feature

In its production of "Sunshine Alley" Goldwyn has scheduled not only its second Mae Marsh starring vehicle, but also the reunion of one of the best known co-starring teams of the early days of Triangle. Robert Harron will mark his return to the screen as Miss Marsh's co-star in Goldwyn's "Sunshine Alley."

In addition to the appearances of Miss Marsh and Harron in the five-reel features, "The Wharf Rat," "The Little Liar" and "A Child of the Paris Streets," they also had prominent parts in the Griffith spectacles, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance."

It is announced by Goldwyn that Miss Marsh's next feature, following "Sunshine Alley," will be "The Cinderella Man."

Bryant Washburn Begins Work on Pathe Play

Bryant Washburn, the new Pathe star, according to an announcement made this week by Pathe, has arrived in Los Angeles and has begun work on his first Pathe play. A portion of the Kalem Studios as Glendale have been rented for Washburn, it is announced, and extensive improvements have been made.

Richard Foster Baker, who directed Washburn for Essanay, is also with him on the Coast, in charge of the direction of the new Pathe play, the working title of which is "Kidder and Koe." Gertrude Selby, recently of Fox, will be Washburn's leading woman.

Drews Complete Christmas Comedy

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Metro funmakers, have completed their Christmas comedy picture, it was announced this week, and it will be released at the holiday season.

Significant in Themselves Are These Two Dramatic Scenes Clipped from the Jewel Production, 'The Price of a Good Time"

Jewel Features Booked For Moss Theatres

"The Co-Respondent Is in Seven Reels and Stars Elaine Hammerstein—Prize Offered in Jewel Question Contest

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC., furnished enough activity in regard to two of its features during the past week to bring forth a bright ray of light from the calcium machine of the industry. Exhibitors will no doubt be greatly interested in the trend of events, which indicate that Jewel is not only maintaining its "place in the sun" but is even taking steps beyond.

Contracts were exchanged last week between Jewel Productions and B. S. Moss, whereby the latest seven-reel feature, "The Co-Respondent," with Elaine Hammerstein, will be shown in all theatres controlled by Mr. Moss.

"The Co-Respondent" is adapted from the stage play of the same name by Alice Leal Pollack and Rita Weiman, in which Irene Fenwick starred at the Booth theatre two years ago. It tells the story of Anne Gray, a New England girl, who is wooed by Langdon Van Kreel, a dissolute multi-millionaire whose wife has him followed to a small town hotel as he is about to have his friend perform a mock marriage after having brought the girl to the hotel.

Miss Hammerstein is seen to advantage in the role of Anne Gray. George Anderson, Winifred Harris, Richard Neil, Charles Smith, Josephine Morse, Hattie Horn and Jennie Mayo complete the cast. Ralph W. Ince is the director.

Officials of Jewel Productions, Inc., have offered a prize of $50 for the best answer to the question, "What is the Grand Passion?" the title of their newest Jewel release, in which Dorothy Phillips stars. The title of this feature was "The Boss of Powderville," after a story by Thomas Addison. When it was shown upon the screen in Jewel Productions, Inc., projection room, it was deemed necessary to change the title. Discussions then arose over the definition of the title, resulting in the offer of a prize of $50 for the best answer to the question, and $25 for the second ablest definition and results are anxiously awaited.

"The Grand Passion" is an Ida May Park production and the cast includes William Stowell and Lon Chaney, in Miss Phillips' support; Jack Mulhall, Evelyn Selbie, Bert Appling, and Alfred Allen.

"Mother" Offers Unusual Photographic Effects

George Loane Tucker Said to Have Taken Full Advantage of Opportunities, with Hills of England as a Locale

THE oft accepted theory propounded anent the unsatisfactory atmospheric conditions prevalent in England is said to be set at naught by the camera effects achieved in George Loane Tucker's screen production of "Mother." The story is said to lend itself admirably to beautiful scenic effects and striking panoramic views. George Loane Tucker has taken full advantage of the splendid photographic possibilities offered by a picturization of Mr. Philpott's book with its rural settings and pastoral beauties.

Selecting as a locale the hills of Dartmoor, England, made famous by "Lorna Doone" and other widely read novels, the American producer has secured a series of what are considered surpassingly beautiful views, embracing the quaint architecture and rolling expanses of a section in England hithertofore undiscovered by the eye of the motion picture camera. Mr. Tucker has also succeeded in securing a most realistic moonlight effect, exquisitely tinted and toned.

Said to be second only in importance to the scenes aforementioned are the striking effects obtained by recourse to night photography. One shot taken by Mr. Tucker shows a light burning in the window of a small cottage nestling in a valley, shadowed on either side by the hills of Dartmoor. The craggy peaks and sheer walls of the surrounding country stand out as though photographed in clear sunlight, while the little house with its shining beacon is silhouetted clearly in relief. A number of clever double exposures also add greatly to the camera values.

The six-part screen version of "Mother," starring Elizabeth Risdon and sponsored by McClure Pictures, is expected to set a new mark in the matter of artistic locations and stereoscopic photography.

Triangle Scribes Keep Pace With Production

Literary Department Under Julian Johnson Makes Things Hum with Wide Range of Subjects—Magazine Material Leads Field

THE Literary Department of Triangle at Culver City, under the supervision of Julian Johnson as editor-in-chief, is keeping pace with the steady production of feature pictures covering a wide range of subjects, it was announced this week, following late developments on the West Coast. The scenario force, it is made known, has a large volume of good material on file at present, most of it being from the pens of well-known writers whose product is in demand by the weekly and monthly magazines.

Jack Cunningham has just finished the continuity for "Betty Takes a Hand," by Katherine Kavanaugh, one of the prize-winning stories in the Photoplay Magazine contest. He is now working on "Limousine Life," by Ida H. Evans, which was published in a recent issue of the Red Book.

George Elwood Jenks, also of the Triangle script department, is working on the continuity for "The Alley of Flashing Spears," Don Byrne's story which appeared in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

George du bois Proctor, of the scenario force, is in the throes of another story. He is working on "Captain of His Soul," an adaptation from Eleanore Kinkade's story, "Shackles."

Catherine Carr, Triangle continuity expert, is working on the screen adaptation of "Real Folks," which won first honors in the recent Photoplay Magazine contest. The story is by Mrs. Kate Corbaley of Los Angeles.

Alvin J. Neitz, Triangle scenario writer, has just finished "The Gown of Destiny," from the Saturday Evening Post story, "Each According to His Gifts," by Earl Derr Biggers.

Verne Hardin Porter, author and former magazine editor, Joseph Anthony Roach, H. B. Daniels and Maude Reeves White are working on original stories for the Triangle, while Elizabeth Haas and Marion Dummer are reading the offerings of various authors.

Advertising Drive Brings Increased Publicity

Paramount and Artcraft Both Said to Have Profited Through Big Newspaper Drive, and Exhibitors of Their Features Should Share It

IN an announcement this week from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is said that as a direct result of the Paramount and Artcraft million-dollar advertising campaign in the dailies and magazines, a veritable flood of publicity for these pictures is going out to the people to whom the names of Paramount and Artcraft are invariably becoming synonymous with the best in motion pictures. It is said that newspapers that did not before accord much space to pictures are becoming more acquainted with the importance of this form of entertainment, and in every case, virtually, have employed the names of Paramount and Artcraft in their announcements as directly indicative of the best in screen entertainment.

Similar evidences of the popularity of the players appearing in these productions are constantly appearing. There can be but one answer to this—Paramount and Artcraft photoplays have become a standard of excellence in quality of production and character of subjects, while the popularity of the stars appearing in these pictures has become a recognized fact.

During the last three weeks statistics have been compiled by the advertising department of the organization which are said to show that by means of advertising in the national magazines every town in the United States is being blanketed successfully in this campaign. It is said there is hardly a city that has not more magazines in circulation than there are families in the community.

The satisfactory thing about the whole matter from the exhibitors' point of view is that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is backing up its advertising for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures by giving what it claims to give. It is claimed there has never been a time in the whole history of the industry when greater care, expense and skill have been brought to bear upon productions. Nothing has been permitted to interfere with this. The pictures released by Paramount and Artcraft have represented not only the cumulative thought of experienced motion picture men, but the best that could be had artistically and technically.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation states that it will continue to advance along the lines that have brought it success. And this advertising campaign is to tell the people that Artcraft and Paramount pictures are representatives of the most advanced methods in the production of entertainment for patrons of the photoplay industry of the present age.

Sing Sing Inmates Appreciate Tucker Photoplay

A touching and appropriate tribute to "Mother," the latest McClure Pictures screen offering, has been received by George Loane Tucker, who directed the feature. Through the courtesy of Mr. Tucker the inmates of Sing Sing prison were enabled to view "Mother" at a recent screening.

The letter, from a member of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing, said in part: "'Mother' is a picture possessing one essential outstanding feature, which will insure its success wherever shown; sustained human heart interest, and once seen will not easily be forgotten. Elizabeth Risdon's characterization of the quaint charming and lovable 'Mother' completely won all our hearts; carrying us back down through the years to home and to mother with the wisdom of the ages in her quiet, passionless eyes.

"Facing all things with courage and patience, making the countless little sacrifices for her boy's happiness, that only a mother can make; she was your mother, my mother—our mother, and the fires of desire, to be fine, and clean and decent rekindled and burned anew, within most of our hearts."

Fox Makes Change in One Scene of Bara Feature

It was noticed by visitors to the Lyric Theatre, where William Fox's spectacular production of "Cleopatra," starring Theda Bara, is filling an indefinite engagement, that a change has been made in the opening scenes of the feature, and that it now has a decidedly more effective introduction.

The first scene of the picture, as it now is being shown at the Lyric, shows the great desert outside Alexandria, the capital of Cleopatra's kingdom. In the distance are the Sphinx and two of the pyramids. The view changes quickly to a close-up of the inscrutable face of the Sphinx, which then fades slowly into the features of Miss Theda Bara, the star of the picture.

In this way, J. Gordon Edwards, who directed the photoplay, registers at once, and in unmistakable fashion, the thoroughly Egyptian atmosphere which it is essential shall be created.

Frieda Hempel, Prima Donna, to Appear in Pictures

The rumor circulated recently to the effect that Frieda Hempel, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, would shortly make her debut in motion pictures, found confirmation this week, when it was announced that the singer has received special permission to appear in a series of feature plays prepared for her exclusive use.

Miss Hempel, who will make her appearance as usual at the Metropiltan Opera House this season, has not decided, it is said, whether she will make a screen feature before or after her marriage, which is rumored as impending. Neither has the singer decided, it is announced, whether or not she will contract as a star with a producing company or organize a company of her own.

Beatriz Michelena Completing Her New Picture

According to announcements from Boulder Creek, Cal., where Beatriz Michelena is in the midst of production activities, the star is now completing her second picture at that place, under the title of "Just Squaw." It was preceded by "The Dead Line." Both are stories of the primitive West, and the outdoor scenes in which that section abounds are said to be a very decided feature.

It is understood that none of the Beatriz Michelena productions will be offered for release until the third is completed, and it is expected the star will begin work upon it immediately following the completion of the one in which she is now appearing.

Ann Pennington Plans New Paramount Picture

Ann Pennington, diminutive Paramount star, having completed "The Antics of Ann" for release by Paramount November 5, will, it is said, begin work shortly on a new production, the nature of which is not yet announced.

Variety in scene is said to be a feature of "The Antics of Ann." There are bathing scenes, dance scenes, boarding-school scenes and football scenes. A thread of love runs through the picture and the characters are interpreted by a cast who were especially chosen.

Fifth in Russell Series Is Aztec Picture

William Russell, American Film Compnay star, has started work on his fifth production of the present American series of six, according to news from Chicago this week. Raymond L. Shrock wrote the story, which centers on a treasure hunt that takes the scene into South America, and Edward Sloman is directing it.

New Theda Bara William Fox Feature Finished

"The Rose of Blood" Was Made During Star's Long Stay on West Coast—Story Said to Center About Russian Revolution

WILLIAM FOX announced last week the completion of a new Theda Bara Superpicture, "The Rose of Blood."

The picture, which was made during Miss Bara's long stay on the Pacific Coast, is said to concern the Russian Revolution and the part which the people of the White Empire played in bringing it about. It is said to show particularly the work done by a woman in overthrowing the despots who ruled the country.

It is announced that "The Rose of Blood" is from a story by Richard Ordynski, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House. In addition to writing the piece, Mr. Ordynski supervised the details of art in the staging; and also played the leading male role. As he was born in Poland, and has spent a great part of his life in various parts of the Russian Empire, it is said he has been able to make the settings and atmosphere of the production correct in every detail.

J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed most of Miss Bara's pictures, including her "Cleopatra," had charge of the filming of "The Rose of Blood." He claims to have told a straightforward story of deep dramatic intensity, in a manner which brings to the front all the power of its theme.

Theda Bara, it is announced, considers "The Rose of Blood" one of the finest things she has done. In it, she plays the role of a Russian girl who is led by circumstances to cast her lot with a group of Revolutionists. A short time afterward she marries a Prince. When he becomes Premier of the Empire and signalizes his power by deeds of oppression, his wife is instructed to assassinate him, which she eventually does.

The problem which confronts her in this crisis gives the big moment to the picture. The decision she makes is instrumental in bringing about the uprising of March, 1917, which resulted in the founding of a new republic.

American Accomplishes Laboratory Feat

Charles A. Ziebarth, superintendent of the American Film Company, Chicago, has completed what he considers a rather notable bit of laboratory work for a firm in Nashville, Tenn. It is claimed the American laboratories were found to be the only ones in the country equipped to handle the new process of filming a picture.

The process requires a strip of film a trifle over four inches wide, and runs from right to left in a six foot camera. There are five lenses which produce a strip of pictures five deep, each one three-fourths of an inch square. It is said that the picture thrown on a thirty-six-foot screen will give an entire view of any outdoor event, such as a pageant, parade or baseball game. The new film will be figured by weight instead of by footage and is the first development made of the new process.

Burns and Richards Join Sennett Comedy Forces

Neal Burns and Chris Richards, it was announced last week, have joined the Mack Sennett forces and will appear in a Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy to be directed by Clarence Badger, and featuring Marie Prevost. Burns is already known to screen patrons, but, according to the announcement from Famous Players-Lasky, Richards is from the "noisy" stage, whatever that is.

George Binns, an old-time Mack Sennett comedian, is again at work, and will appear, it is said, in the comedies Sennett is producing for Paramount.

Virginia Foltz Joins Triangle

Virginia Foltz, formerly in musical comedy productions, and who recently turned her attention to motion pictures, has been added to Triangle's playing forces at Culver City, and will probably be cast for the first time in "The Gown of Destiny," Director Lynn Reynolds's latest picture.

Grotto Scene for Barriscale Is Elaborate Kind

Paralta, in an announcement last week, states its impression that an idea can be gained of the magnitude of Bessie Barriscale's next production, "Within the Cup," from a description of one of the elaborate sets now under construction at the Paralta Studios at Hollywood. Although only a small part of the action is expected to take part in the set, the structure is being erected, it is said, with as great care as if the leading interests of the entire story centered there.

The set is known as a grotto cafe, and occupies a space of 60 x 80 feet and is 25 feet in height. It is said that fifteen tons of plaster and 1,500 pounds of burlap have been employed in its construction, in addition to a massive lumber framework. Twenty men have been constantly at work on the set for a month, it is said.

Mary Pickford Is Not Doing a "Vamp" Part; Merely a Pretentious Scene from Her Next Artcraft, "The Little Princess"

Long Beach Theatre Gives Arbuckle Warm Reception

THE Liberty theatre, of Long Beach, Cal., has written its name in indelible ink on that page of motion picture history reserved for "How Stars are Received at 'Personal Appearance' Parties," and the star in this case was no smaller a personage than Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle.

When Manager Otis Hoyt, of the Liberty, learned that the hefty comedian was headed for California he planned a rousing reception. The theatre is playing the Arbuckle-Paramount comedies, and, upon hearing news of Arbuckle's approach, booked a return of "Oh, Doctor" and arranged with Lou Anger for the appearance of Arbuckle in person.

With the stage braced for the occasion, Hoyt played to the largest house in the history of the theatre. After addressing the audience for a few minutes in his inimitable way, the comedian introduced his jumping-jack relative, Al St. John and the village pest, Buster Keaton. Arbuckle's canine pal and actor, "Luke," also horned in on the reception. Manager Hoyt sprung the surprise of the evening by presenting Arbuckle with a rattan chair of generous proportions which was built expressly for the star, and announced to the audience that the chair would be placed in a box which would be reserved exclusively for the Arbuckle party during their stay in Long Beach.

The announcement that passes would come under the new theatre tax was also provided for by Manager Hoyt. As box seats in the Liberty are thirty cents, it will cost Hoyt eighteen cents every time the Arbuckle party attends his theatre. A small item, to be sure, but it gives one an idea of Hoyt's thoughtfulness and thoroughness.

Mr. Arbuckle announced to the Liberty audience that he had signed a five-year lease with the Horkheimer Brothers for the use of their studio and that except for an occasional picture in the East, he would produce all of his future comedies for forthcoming Paramount programs in Long Beach, California.

Caprice Feature Shows William Fox Star "Dressed Up"

THE past week brought many things of interest concerning William Fox features and stars, not the least of which was the release on November 4 of "Miss U. S. A.," in which June Caprice has the leading role. The feature, along patriotic lines, is said to be the most dramatic Miss Caprice has had, and is also the first in which she has a "dressed up" part throughout the film. At no time does she appear in the rags which have been associated with her roles in the past. Harry Millards was in charge of the direction.

Richard Stanton has completed another story for William Fox, with Enid Markey, Ralph Lewis and Bertram Grassby in the leading parts. It is said to have taken Mr. Stanton forty days to make the stormy weather scenes which give the atmosphere.

Carl Harbaugh, who is directing Virginia Pearson in her newest vehicle, "All for a Husband," has completed the cast for the play. Out on the West Coast again, Bertram Bracken is progressing rapidly with "A Branded Soul," in which Gladys Brockwell will be presented by Mr. Fox. One scene in the drama will show the ancient and far-famed Babylonian slave mart in all its splendor.

"Troublemakers" has been selected as the title for the recently completed production starring Jane and Katherine Lee, which William Fox will soon release. The starlets are at present busily engaged on their third film for Standard Pictures.

The recent announcement that William Farnum had finished "Les Miserables," a picturization of Hugo's novel by Frank Lloyd, calls to mind the fact that the fast closing year has been one of achievements by Mr. Farnum. His outstanding pictures are "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Conqueror," and "When a Man Sees Red." In addition to these subjects, the star also had the stellar roles in "The Price of Silence" and "American Methods.

Aubrey Kennedy's Versatility Causes Comment

Various film men in bits of gossip recently have expressed themselves as not being open to surprise if a new male star suddenly looms bright and high in the motion picture sky. In fact, it is said that visitors to the Goldwyn Studio even now make the mistake of thinking General Manager of Productions Aubrey M. Kennedy is a screen idol. Just how soon he will take the leap is a matter of conjecture.

However, it is said that if Kennedy should decide to shift his talents to histrionic channels it would not be the only thing he has done in motion pictures. He has taken hold of the business end of the Goldwyn Studios and has systematized all departments to a remarkable degree of efficiency. It is whispered that he has written the scenario for one of the big productions, and that during an unexpected rush of work he personally jumped in and from 7 p. m. to 7 a. m. completed about one-third of one of the most successful features. In several instances he has personally cut the pictures, and he is the fountain of practical knowledge to which all departments turn for guidance.

Several years ago Kennedy's advertisements for the American Company created much comment in the trade. It is about ten years ago that he first became identified with the film business, soon becoming the general manager of the Essanay Company.

"Who Is Number One?" Creates Ticket Idea

The Palace theatre in Los Angeles is said to be handling with success the season ticket idea on "Who Is Number One?" the Paramount serial starring Kathleen Clifford. The Palace is advertising the Anna Katherine Green serial with the slogan, "Seats now selling fifteen weeks in advance."

"Babes in the Woods" Fox Christmas Offering

"The Babes in the Woods," one of the William Fox Standard Pictures, which had been set for release November 18, has, according to an announcement made this week from the Fox offices, been moved along to December 23, making it a holiday week offering.

Two reasons are given for the change. One is that another Standard Picture, Theda Bara in "The Rose of Blood," has been completed and, on account of its timeliness, has been set for release November 4. The other reason advanced is the success attending "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." These productions, the first of which has been released since September 2 and the other since October 14, are in the same class of productions as "The Babes in the Woods."

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin are the stars of the new picture, which is reported to be even stronger dramatically than either of the other two recent releases in which these juvenile actors have appeared.

Triangle Presents Juvenile in Feature, November 28

Richard Barthelmess, regarded by many in motion picture circles as one of the most promising juveniles in pictures, is scheduled to make his appearance in the Triangle play, "For Valour," adapted from the story "Melia No-Good," on November 28.

In "For Valour," which was directed by Albert Parker, under the supervision of Allan Dwan, at the Triangle Yonkers Studio, Barthelmess has the part of a young Canadian slacker who does not feel the stir of patriotism until touched by the sacrifice of his little sister, played by Winifred Allen.

Brenon Borrows Kerensky from the Army

When Herbert Brenon, last week, decided to incorporate some new scenes in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," he encountered one of the unusual difficulties that face the screen creator.

Mr. Brenon wanted to film scenes depicting the reception of Charles Edward Russell, the representative of American labor, by the Russian Duma. He particularly needed a young actor named W. Francis Chapin, who had played Alexander Kerensky, the Russian man of the hour, in "The Fall of the Romanoffs." But the vicissitudes of real war had already overtaken the mimic Kerensky. Mr. Chapin had been drafted and was a soldier in Company A, 305th Infantry, located at Camp Upton. Mr. Brenon sent a representative to the camp and obtained a special permit for Mr. Chapin to return to his character of Kerensky for twenty-four hours. A fast automobile raced Chapin to the Brenon studios, where the soldier-actor shed khaki and donned a Russian uniform. Then at the end of the day he dashed again to khaki and was hurried by motor back to Camp Upton.

Essanay Releases Unique Feature Picture

What is said to be an unusually unique feature picture, entitled "The Curse of Iku," has been released by Essanay. It is cited by Essanay as all the more a novelty in that, although primarily it is a drama of Japanese life, it is at the same time a historical film and a scenic picture.

Tsuri Aoki, wife of the Japanese star, Sessue Hayakawa, plays the leading role, that of Omio San, sister of a Japanese prince. The picture opens with the Japan of fifty years ago, when Japan was a land of barbarity and when no foreigners were allowed to land there with the exception of Dutch sailors, who were permitted to unload their cargoes at Nagasaki.

"Please Help Emily" Next Empire All-Star Release

"Please Help Emily," adapted from the stage production of the same name, is announced this week as the next Empire All-Star picture that Mutual is to release, Nov. 19. Ann Murdock is star of the feature as she was of the play, and many of the original cast have been engaged for the production. Ferdinand Gottschalk, Hubert Druce, John Harwood and others are in the supporting cast. Dell Henderson directed the feature.

Pokes Impersonates Scarecrow in New Picture

Pokes and Jabs, according to the latest reports from the publicity department of General, indulge in more romps in "Barnyard Frolics," the current Jaxon Comedy release of General Film Company. Pokes, who takes the place of a scarecrow, starts an uproar, which does not subside until the police are called in to rid the place of spooks. It is said to be one of the most whimsical laugh-makers in the series.

"Sunshine Alley" Is the Name of the Next Play in Which Mae Marsh Will Be Seen Among Goldwyn Releases. The Story Was Written by Mary Rider

"I Will Repay" Claimed to Be a Perfect Feature

Vitagraph Schedules It for Release November 12, with Corinne Griffith Featured—Was Directed by William P. S. Earle

WHAT is claimed by Vitagraph as a 100 per cent. feature is "I Will Repay," which Albert E. Smith, president of the company, has announced as a Blue Ribbon feature, adapted from O. Henry's novel "A Municipal Report." The picture is to be released the week of November 12 and features Corinne Griffith, with Mary Maurice and William Dunn in supporting roles.

President Albert E. Smith looks upon "I Will Repay" as a 100 per cent. picture viewed from any angle; a romance of the Southland which is said to have lost none of its strength or appeal in the screening. William P. S. Earle directed the feature.

A striking merit in "I Will Repay" is claimed in the lighting and photography, which is said to be especially marked in evening scenes under soft Southern skies. Seldom, indeed, thinks Vitagraph, have scenes fitted so happily into the theme and atmosphere of a story as in this Blue Ribbon feature, which is located in the city of Nashville.

Press critics who saw the pre-release showing of the picture were unanimous in pronouncing it one of the most finished photoplays they have ever seen, a real story convincingly and charmingly told.

"I Will Repay" is the romance of a young Northern magazine writer and the beautiful daughter of a Southern judge linked with the emancipation of a delicate and cultured authoress from the curse of a vicious husband.

President Smith has favored the feature with a cast, well balanced and considered of exceptional strength.

Cooper Writes Scenario for New Wharton Feature

Courtney Ryley Cooper, author of the Shoestring Charlie stories, has been engaged to write the scenario of the new Wharton super-serial of German intrigue and espionage in this country, from the stories furnished by William J. Flynn, chief of the U. S. Secret Service.

In spite of the fact that Cooper has written some two or three million words of fiction in the last six or seven years, in which he believed he had installed a few thrilling situations, he now claims that the Kaiser is a better dealer of thrills than any fiction writer could be.

"My whole trouble now lies in trying to put the excitement of sixty five-reel features into twenty two-reel episodes," says Cooper. "That's just about the amount of material furnished by Germany's agents in this country in the last three or more years."

The picture is to be distributed through the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges for the Wharton Releasing Corporation, and it is expected the date or release will be announced shortly.

English Hop Fields in New Selig Library

A combination of what are said to be interesting subjects gathered from all corners of the world is featured in the current issue of the Selig World Library No. 23, released through General Film. The subjects are: "The Hop Fields of Kent, England," "Shearing of a Prize Long-haired Goat," "Mammoth Tree Grove of Mariposa, Cal.," "An Odd Boxing Contest Between Blind Boys," and "Rice Culture in Java."

Greater Vitagraph on Eve of Campaign for New Serial

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, announced last week that the company will shortly inaugurate its campaign for "Vengeance—and the Woman," the new fifteen-episode serial, which is scheduled to start its run the last week in December. This campaign, it is said, will be wider in scope than that which attended the booking of "The Fighting Trail," Vitagraph's outdoor serial.

Reports received from the Western Vitagraph studio, in Hollywood, where William Duncan is directing and playing the leading role in the new serial, indicate that the actor-producer is going to duplicate his feat of turning out a big serial ahead of schedule time. The first seven episodes of "Vengeance—and the Woman" have already been shipped to the Vitagraph laboratory in Brooklyn and the work of titling and printing is well under way.

"Vengeance—and the Woman" is described by Vitagraph as a powerful story of the fight of a man and woman against a band of heartless men who strive to get the woman as a means of wreaking vengeance on the man. It was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, the former being in close touch with Director Duncan on every detail connected with the filming of the story. The authors are said to have provided a multitude of thrilling action and Duncan, whose reputation as a star has been builded largely on his work in roles calling for strengthful performance, is interpreting them in his usual heroic style. Carol Holloway is again featured with him in the leading feminine role.

Mr. Irwin and his executive staff, according to the announcement issued by him, are working out the details of the plan by which "Vengeance—and the Woman" will be introduced to the exhibitors and the public. The Vitagraph distributing chief says that in the marketing of "Vengeance—and the Woman," the company will follow the same policy that it pursued with its other work—that of having its salesmen see the serial before they set forth to offer it to exhibitors. Also, it is planned to have as many exhibitors as possible see the various episodes in the company's home office and branch projection rooms before they are invited to book it.

Norma Talmadge Begins Work on Third Select Picture

NORMA TALMADGE, it was announced this week by Select Pictures, began work on October 31, in her Forty-eighth street studio, on the third of her series of Select Pictures. The feature is a screen version of the play, "Two Women," by Rupert Hughes, in which Mrs. Leslie Carter starred some time ago. It will be noticed, however, according to Select Pictures, that when the subject is presented the first part of the drama has been changed and Americanized in theme and setting, and will be produced under the title of "The Ghosts of Yesterday." Charles Miller, it is announced, will direct the picture, which will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck, probably next in order to "The Secret of the Storm Country," which is the second of Miss Talmadge's Select Pictures.

In support of Miss Talmadge will appear what is said to be one of the most notable casts ever seen in her productions, including Eugene O'Brien in the leading masculine role, Stuart Holmes, Ida Darling and John Daly Murphy. The sets are said to be remarkable for their richness, even among the notably luxurious backgrounds which have been erected for Miss Talmadge's recent productions. The Forty-eighth street studio now contains a reproduction of the interior of the Bal Taberin in Paris, which will serve as a setting for one of New York's Broadway entertainments during the filming of the picture, and numerous sumptuous exteriors designed by well-known artists.

The photoplay is said to give Miss Talmadge an opportunity to play two strikingly different roles, first as the beloved little seamstress who redeems a young master from a spendthrift life and a suicide's grave, marries him, and dies just as he meets with success, and later as the Parisian singer, who so strikingly resembles the dead wife, and yet is so unlike her in nature.

Lois Weber's Latest Feature Plays Broadway Theatre

LOIS WEBER'S latest production, "The Price of a Good Time," with Mildred Harris and Kenneth Harlan in the leading roles, is being presented at the Broadway theatre this week, opening there November 4, being released by Jewel Productions, Inc.

The feature is described by Jewel as a story of life in "the city where nobody cares," and was adapted for the screen by Miss Weber and Phillips Smalley, both of whom also had a hand in the directing of the picture. It is said to dramatically reveal in a series of intimate chapters the life and moods of two department store girls who work side by side in the perfumery section of a store in a chain owned by James Winfield, whose only son, Preston, is engaged to a girl of aristocratic family, and who seeks after a bit for "diversion's sake" to show one of the girls "six nights of good times."

"The Price of a Good Time," is said to bring to the screen for the first time scenes from the various sections of a large department store. There is shown the girls at work at various counters, at play in the gymnasium, at lunch in the huge modern lunchroom, at rest in the rest and recreation rooms. All the scenes were made in a Los Angeles department store for which special permission had to be obtained from the store proprietors and the city officials. Miss Weber is said to have attained in "The Price of a Good Time" some of the most novel effects that have punctuated the work of the woman producer of "Shoes," "Where Are My Children?" and "Even As You and I." To Jack Bloom goes the credit for some unusual lighting effects.

The cast includes Helene Rosson, Ann Schaefer, Alfred Allen, Adele Farrington and Gertrude Aster. Allen Seigler is the photographer.

Vic Moore Turns Blacksmith in New Comedy

Klever Pictures, Inc., released this week, on November 5, a new Victor Moore laugh-provoker called "Faint Heart and Fair Lady," in one reel, written by Thomas J. Gray and directed by Chester M. DeVonde. In the picture Vic is a village blacksmith, with a husky comedian helping him. Things happen thick and fast when a bevy of city girls appear, and later Moore "dresses up" to go to the city to plan an elopement with the "queen of his heart," and he succeeds.

"Faint Heart and Fair Lady" is described as a different kind of a comedy than any the Klever Pictures Corporation have made and Moore has a character which affords him many opportunities. He is supported by Dave Don, Peggy Adams and a big cast of comedy players.

Triangle Adds Two Players at Culver City

The past week in Triangle circles was marked by the addition of two new players to the Culver City studios colony. The new members are Frederick Vroom and Edward Jobson.

Frederick Vroom, it is announced, has been engaged to appear for the first time under Triangle direction in Olive Thomas's latest play, "Betty Takes a Hand." He has been in pictures for the past five years as actor and director.

Edward Jobson, well-known character man with both legitimate and screen experience, has been added to Triangle's large force of stock actors, and will be presented shortly as a sympathetic father and in similar character roles, it is announced by Triangle.

"Ashes of My Heart" Claims Remarkable Scene

What is claimed to be one of the most remarkable scenes ever put into canned form for flickering purposes across a motion picture screen is announced as a feature of "Ashes of My Heart," an early release of the Berg Productions, featuring Barbara Castleton.

Some of the biggest action in the story is laid in a Chinese opium den in the old Chinatown of San Francisco.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Vitagraph Calls Sales Chiefs Into Conference

A special meeting of Greater Vitagraph sales chiefs was called last week by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the company's distribution, at which he received a complete report on conditions in all parts of the country. For several weeks prior to the conference, which was held in the company's offices in New York, Mr. Irwin had had the company's eastern and western division managers, E. Auger and H. D. Naugle on special tours of their respective territories and A. W. Goff, assistant general manager, made a special trip to the South to study conditions there.

Mr. Goff visited New Orleans, Atlanta, Baltimore and Washington, and spent a day in Philadelphia on his way to New York. He brought back encouraging reports of conditions among the exhibitors of the South, especially in Louisiana and Mississippi. He said that the recent sugar crisis, which means millions of dollars for the planters of Louisiana, is going to have a splendid effect on theatrical conditions, especially in the outlying parishes of the state, where the greater part of the population relies on the sugar industry for its income. Mississippi, he found, is enjoying an era of prosperity as the result of the good prices for cotton and the same condition prevails in Georgia.

Universal Exchanges Want More Nestor Comedies

Upon request of Universal exchange managers, the plans of that organization have been conditionally changed to allow four more weeks of Nestor comedies to be distributed, covering the month of November, it was announced last week. The selection of these releases has been made from the best negatives that have been prepared and include, for November 5, Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson in "Caught in the Draft"; the November 12 Nestor being Gale Henry and William Franey in "The Shame of the Bullcon," palpably a burlesque on a well-known novel and screen story. Selections of comedies for November 17 and 24 have not been announced.

Leo Udry Moves Up in Cincinnati

Leo Udry, for some time head booker in the Cincinnati Famous Players branch, has been chosen assistant to L. W. Foster, sales manager of the Famous Players Film Service. Udry was formerly with General Film Company.

Finley Nature Subjects Handled in Toronto by McKenny

J. R. McKenny announces that he will handle the Finley Nature Study Subjects in the Toronto territory. Mr. McKenny says that pictures of educational interest are in big demand in this territory.

Here and There

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures, has been receiving many congratulations on Select's, having engaged Fred C. Aiken as manager of the Chicago branch.. Aiken was installed as branch manager when Sydney E. Abel, executive office representative, was in Chicago a few days ago.

G. L. Hanes, of the Pathe Los Angeles office, has joined the colors, and has been appointed captain in charge of Army District 11. B. E. Loper, who represented Pathe in Los Angeles for some time, is also in khaki and is seeing active service.

G. A. Margetts, manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., of St. John, N. B., is recovering from a siege of illness that has kept him away from business for the past few weeks.

James Travis, formerly Pathe manager in Toronto, has become the manager of the Mutual exchange there, succeeding Charles A. Garner, now with K-E-S-E.

It is announced from Oklahoma City that Thomas Goggan & Brothers have become Texas distributors of the productions of the American Photoplay Company. Mr. Holt will act as special salesman for Texas and Oklahoma, and an agency will be established in Oklahoma City.

R. E. Bishop has been appointed manager of the Cincinnati branch of Jewel Productions, Inc., and has substituted his name plate for that of Ralph Peckham, formerly in charge of that office. Bishop has been with General Film in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Columbus in the capacity of booker and assistant manager, and was manager for Mutual in Minneapolis.

Ten Pathe representatives had their names carved in the Pathe niche of fame last week by leading the field in the efficiency race which the company has had under way the past six months. They are F. A. Grady, H. P. Calloway, H. I. Goldman, W. H. Rankin, J. Deutsch, J. J. Donnelly, E. F. Johnston, C. U. Martin, S. Hochfeld and E. G. Briggs.

A recent promotion in the Jewel Exchange at Cleveland has placed A. Kaufman in the salesman class, the recommendation being made by Manager A. J. Mentz, of the branch. On his first trip Kaufman closed some desirable contracts in Elyria and Lorain on "Sirens of the Sea." He was formerly salesman for General and Unicorn.

Manager Wessling, of Pathe's Cincinnati office, recently put over what is considered a ten-strike, when he went through a list of names of Cincinnati people who had never attended a picture show, and which list was compiled by a daily paper, and sent each of the persons named an invitation to a private showing of some of Pathe's best pictures. It is said all of the invitations have been accepted.

In line with the precedent established ten weeks ago to make an addition each week to the selling force of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, comes the announcement that Walter A. Blaney has been appointed representative of that company in West Virginia. He will handle in that territory "The Mad Lover," "Today," "The Deemster," "The Crisis," "Persuasive Peggy" and "Hate."

A. A. Schmidt, special representative of Jewel Productions, Inc., left New York last week in the interest of Jewel Productions. His destination was given at that time as Detroit.

Hunter Bennett, of Jewel Productions, Inc., has gone to Omaha, where he expects to work for three weeks in the interests of "Come Through," "Sirens of the Sea," "Pay Me," "Man Without a Country," "The Co-Respondent" and "The Price of a Good Time," which are said to be making a clean-up of the entire country.

B. Allen, president of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., and allied companies, was in Calgary, Alta., recently on a tour of inspection. In addition to visiting Calgary, Mr. Allen stopped off at Edmonton, Regina, Moose Jaw and Winnipeg.

Vitagraph St. Louis Exchange Prepares to Move

The Greater Vitagraph Exchange at 3630 Olive street, St. Louis, is preparing to move within a few days to larger quarters in the Plaza Building, where, owing to the shape of the building, the exchange will have two entrances, one on Olive street and the other on Lindell boulevard. More room has been needed by the Vitagraph Exchange for some time. Other exchanges in the Plaza Building are the Kleine, Goldwyn, Select and Triangle.

Back in film row on Olive street at Grand avenue, D. M. Thomas, manager of the William Fox Exchange, next door to Vitagraph, has made arrangements to tear down the wall between the Fox office and Vitagraph, thus increasing the Fox offices to twice the present size.

Omaha Steps to Fore as an Exchange Center

What is considered one of the most important and significant motion picture features of the Middle West this fall is the increasing importance of Omaha, Neb., as an exchange centre. In Omaha's territory are about 2,000 theatres, and its railroad facilities claim the best connection with all parts of Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Northern Kansas.

For years the General, Pathe, Universal, Mutual and World exchanges have been in Omaha. During the past year the Fox exchange and the Fontenelle Feature Film Company, state rights exchange, began to take an active part in the field. Others now in the swim in Omaha are the Standard Feature Film Company, managed by Jules Rachman; feature department of Omaha Film Exchange, with Phil Goldberg as manager; Triangle, Jewel, Bluebird, formerly in connection with Universal but now in separate offices; Butterfly, and Longacre Distributing Company, handling Alice Howell comedies.

Late reports indicate that Select Features, the Selznick organization, will open an exchange in Omaha in the near future, as will also Paramount.

Fox Boston Office Adds Three Salesmen

The Boston office of the Fox Film Corporation has added three salesmen to its New England force. They are A. F. Walters, formerly manager of the Opera House in Rumford, Me.; Mose Eberstein, former salesman for "The Battle Cry of War," and Claude Fredericks, who traveled with "The Birth of a Nation" in New England and who was also formerly connected with Samuel Grant, of Peerless Pictures Corporation, Boston.

Manager William Shapiro has transferred David I Gars, formerly representative in New Hampshire and Vermont, to western Massachusetts and Connecticut.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Film Arts Club Starts Drive for Large Sum

The Board of Governors of the new Film Arts Club met October 25, at the office of their president, C. R. Plough, of the Universal Film Company. In addition to outlining their by-laws for the coming year it was decided not to hold any meeting of the whole membership of the organization until the entire $10,000, necessary to equip the club quarters, is practically assured.

The responsibility of securing this money was placed on the shoulders of Secretary Hill Bernstein, who was one of the principals in the formation of the club. It was decided to solicit and accept membership in such a way that should the goal fail to materialize all money will be returned. The Board of Governors, however, are confident their project will succeed and expect the organization to be well under way by the first of the year.

Funkhouser Appeals to Women for Aid

Major Funkhouser, Chicago's censor, threw down the gauntlet before the film manufacturers last week at a luncheon of the Woman's City Club. He called upon the clubwomen to help him in what he termed his fight against licentious films.

"There are pictures shown in this city," he said, "which would make the high school girls who see them suspect their own mothers. It is not the Chicago firms, but those from outside whose pictures I am called upon to censor. I must wash New York's dirty linen.

"The time is past," he declared, "when I can submit to being vilified by the film companies for doing what the law calls upon me to do. The vice interests and the film companies are both against me but with the women with me I can fight and I shall do so. I appeal to the women to help."

Here and There

G. B. Swenson, contruction engineer of the Mutual Film Corporation, is back in Chicago after several weeks in New York.

A. St. Leger, superintendent of the shipping department of the American Film Company, is recovering from a minor operation performed last week at the St. Joseph Hospital.

Manager Mintz, of Unity Photoplays Company, reports the purchase of the feature film "Who's Your Neighbor?" for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. "Souls Redeemed," he states, is enjoying extraordinary bookings.

The Commonwealth Pictures Corporation extended a general invitation to the public October 26 to visit the Chicago Arena free of charge and watch the making of scenes featuring Charlotte, the ice skater, as she did some of her sensational work at the north shore skating rink.

Manager Frankland of the Pastime theatre has made arrangements to show first-run Triangle pictures in the loop every Monday and Tuesday, exclusively. He began by featuring "The Firefly of Tough Luck."

I. L. Lesserman, manager of the Laemmle exchange, was in Omaha last week on an inspection trip of that office.

Leaks in the Loop

The La Salle theatre at Division and Wells streets, owned by Tom Mitchell, has closed. It is rumored that Christy Brothers, who own the Elmo on Van Buren street, are making arrangements to open it again and place back in circulation the 1,000 seats which movie patrons have been deprived of.

Arthur S. Dowd, sales manager for Universal's Current Events, Screen Magazine and Animated Weekly, arrived in Chicago last week for an indefinite stay. He is boosting these reels throughout the country and comes to Chicago after a campaign in Pittsburgh. Mr. Dowd states that Current Events hereafter will be devoted entirely to the work, fun and training of the boys in camp, as it is a subject in which pretty nearly every one is interested.

Miss Grace O'Kane, operator at the center of all telephone communications for the Pathe office, slipped one over on her friends recently, when she let Carter O'Rourke lead her up to the hymeneal altar without saying anything about it until it was too late to hunt up old shoes.

Si Greiver confides that he expects to make a big clean-up on the Lillian Walker feature, "Lust of the Ages," which he has bought for Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin, as he declares the dimpled star is a strong puller with exhibitors.

Paramount and Artcraft are getting ready to boost their stock still higher, according to a report from "Doc" Hill, of the local offices. It's not a boost in rentals. Famous Players and Paramount are merely going to take over the entire twenty-first floor of the Consumers building.

Two Alfred Hamburger theatres on the South Side, the Panorama on Prairie avenue and 51st street, and the President on 55th, between Calumet and South Park, after undergoing alterations and repairs opened up last week as additions to the chain of Continental theatres. They were formerly operated by the Ascher Brothers.

R. P. Madden, sales manager of the local Triangle office, announces keen rivalry between the different Triangle exchanges throughout the country over the single-reel feature, "Who Leads the National Army?" Each exchange is making strenuous efforts to turn in the best booking report on this film.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, of the sales department of Mutual Film Corporation, spent a few days last week in Omaha on an inspection trip.

Richard R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Company, delivered an address Thursday, November 1, before the Illinois Women's Press Association on the "Psychology of the Motion Picture."

Sidney Abel, former manager of the local Vitagraph office, was in town last week looking after the interests of Select Pictures Corporation. This concern has established a local exchange in the rooms formerly occupied by Artcraft on the fourteenth floor of the Consumers building.

The Chicago office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is now in the hands of R. C. Seery, former manager of the local Triangle exchange.

Charles O'Connor, projection expert of the American Film Company, tested out twenty-nine of the new American Projectoscope machines last week and sent them out to their respective destinations. Every machine is accurately tested twice before it is allowed to leave the American shop.

M. M. Wolf, formerly of the Milwaukee Universal office, has been transferred to the Chicago office to take charge of the supply department.

The "Italian Battle Front" pictures, which had a successful run at top notch prices when shown at the Auditorium recently, returned to Chicago again last week for a four-day's run at the Orpheum theatre.

Manager M. J. Mintz, of the Unity Photoplays Company, announces that the first Chicago showings of the feature "I Believe," will be held throughout the city in the Lubliner and Trinz houses.

D. W. Griffith, the director and producer, was a guest last week at the local Famous Players office while on his way to California.

Earl W. Ferney, city salesman for the Motiograph Company, 564 West Randolph street, resigned his position last week as an exploiter of the well-known projection machine to manipulate a department store in a Michigan town. Homer G. Gill, who has been handling Motiographs in Southern and Western territory, has been called in by O. F. Spahr, general manager of the concern, to take Ferney's place.

Nat S. Stronge, Vitagraph publicity manager until recently, and now connected with the Training Camps Association, in introducing the special feature, "Who Leads the National Army," spent a few days in Chicago last week greeting his friends and pushing the project he is furthering. According to rumor, Mr. Stronge may soon be connected with Triangle in an important official capacity.

Among the distinguished visitors who paid respects to Chicago last week was Adolph Zukor, who stopped off for a day on his trip to the coast from New York. After a conference with Max Goldstein, chief of the Windy City Paramount office, on the subject of the fifteen-cents-per-reel tax, Mr. Zukor sped on his way.

Democracy Marks Aaron J. Jones's Career

Aaron J. Jones, head of the firm of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, probably Chicago's largest amusement concern, last week started on his twenty-third year of catering to the fancies and desires of the general public.

Mr. Jones is president of a concern that is looked upon as unique in many ways, and most especially because of the absolute democracy that prevails among the three members of the firm and their many employees.

Adolph Linick is the financial executive of the concern, while Peter J. Schaefer looks after properties and sees that they are always kept in ship-shape condition. Aaron J. Jones keeps in constant touch with the exhibiting end.

Samuel I. Levin, the general manager, is the oldest employee in point of service and was the first manager of the Orpheum theatre in the heart of the city.

Ralph T. Kettering, general representative and director of publicity, is well known in Chicago, where he has spent twenty years of his life. He is a playwright and author of reputation.

Norman E. Field, manager of the Colonial theatre, now playing legitimate attractions, was one of the early employees, having drawn a salary in what is claimed was the first motion picture house of the State of Illinois, opened in 1903 by Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

Louis J. Jones, brother of Aaron J. Jones, acts as manager of the smaller picture houses controlled by the firm, and he is probably the busiest man of the lot. His theatrical career dates back to the Chicago World's Fair, when he and Aaron were joint partners in the program privilege of the Anthropological building.

Sigmund Faller, manager of the Bijou Dream, has made good use of his many years of association with that playhouse, until at the present time in addition to managing the theatre, he boasts a large block of the capital stock.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Bluebird Presents Four Girl Stars in December

In announcing the releases set for the Bluebird program to finish the current year, Managing Director Carl Laemmle lists the second Mae Murray feature, another Robert Leonard production, for Christmas week; places Ella Hall's next appearance on the program for the week preceding, and gives Violet Mersereau and Ruth Clifford positions in the opening fortnight of December. Thus, it is cited by Bluebird's press department, appear four girl stars in Bluebird's galaxy in offerings that promise to capitalize the screen popularity of those players to the fullest extent.

Violet Mersereau's appearance in "The Raggedy Queen," week starting December 3, has previously been published. John C. Brownell prepared the scenario and the direction was accomplished by Theodore Marston. Donald Hall, Charles Slattery, James O'Neill, Frank Otto, Robert F. Hill and Grace Barton appear in the supporting company.

Ruth Clifford's appearance December 10, will be made in conjunction with Monroe Salisbury in Rupert Julian's presentation of Samuel Merwin's story, "Anthony the Absolute." George McDaniels and W. H. Bainbridge will have important roles in the support.

Ella Hall will next appear in what might be called her "honeymoon picture"—for she was married to her leading man, Emory Johnson, just previous to beginning work, under the direction of Elsie Jane Wilson, on "My Little Boy," the feature to be released December 17, with Little Zoe Rae and Gretchen Lederer sharing the billing honors with Miss Hall.

Mae Murray brings her second Bluebird to the schedule December 24 to mark Christmas week. Robert Leonard produced "Face Value" from his own story. Fred Myton helping on the scenario.

Brenon Plans Film Service for State Prisons

Herbert Brenon, as the result of a showing at Sing Sing of the Brenon production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," has laid plans for the formation of a distributing service for State prisons and it is announced the idea is now being worked out to the desired end.

Upon his return to New York Mr. Brenon dictated to his secretary letters to each of the wardens of State prisons throughout the country, asking their co-operation in this matter of arranging an organized method of the distribution of films to the prisons.

Up to the present time it has been more or less a matter of chance whether or not the prisoners have been provided with pictures.

Power Feature Among Mutual's New Releases

"The Planter," Scheduled for November 12, to Top Mutual Releases for This Month—Juliette Day in Five-Reel American Drama

THE seven-reel spectacle, "The Planter," produced from Herman Whitaker's novel, with Tyrone Power in the leading role, is scheduled to top Mutual's releases for the week of November 12. The picture is released as a special, it is announced. The star production release of the week is "Betty and the Buccaneers," a five-reel drama from the American studios, starring Juliette Day.

"The Planter" is described as a gorgeous production. The motion picture was produced by F. M. Manson under the personal direction of the author, who went into Southern Mexico with a company of a hundred actors and a technical staff to supervise the filming of the scenes from his book. It is claimed few productions have ever been made under more careful direction, with greater attention to detail and with more wonderful scenic effects.

"Betty and the Buccaneers" is Juliette Day's third production for Mutual. The production is in five reels, and was directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon. Supporting Miss Day in the picture are Charles Marriott, Joe King, William Kyle, Tote du Crow, Grodon Russel and Harold Wilson.

Chapter IX of "The Lost Express," the fifteen-chapter Mutual-Signal photonovel, is entitled "The Looters." The chapter closes with a fight aboard a runaway ore car between Miss Holmes and Leo Maloney, who plays the role of Pitts in the production. The story of the missing express train with its incidental plots is said to reach a new pitch of interest in Chapter IX in the course of which Helen recovers the stolen papers containing the formula from the gang of thieves who stole them from the train in Chapter I.

The comedy releases on the week's schedule are "That Dog Gone Dog," a one-reel Strand starring Billie Rhodes, and "Jerry's Running Fight," a one-reel Cub comedy featuring George Ovey. Miss Rhodes is supported in the Mutual Strand comedy by Jay Belasco and the same company which has been appearing with her in the new series of Mutual one-reelers. The Ovey comedies are directed by Milton Fahrney at the Horsley studios.

Universal Sets Butterfly December Schedule

Features Announced as Far as December 17, with Information That Productions Under Way Will Carry List Into the New Year

UNIVERSAL has arranged its schedule of Butterfly features as far in advance as December 17, it was announced this week. Productions completed or under way, it is said, will carry the list well into the new year.

For November 5 "John Ermine of Yellowstone," with Francis Ford as star, is released. Sensational moments are promised, attacks by Indians upon the old-fashioned stockade being the capping features.

November 12.—"The Cricket," presenting Little Zoe Rae, in E. J. Clawson's story. Rena Rogers, Hal Cooley, Harry Holden, Winter Hall and Fred Ward have roles of importance. Elsie Jane Wilson, one of the few women devoting themselves to moving picture direction, made the production.

November 19.—"The Man from Montana" offers Neil Hart and Vivian Rich in the star parts. Harvey Gates and George Marshall, of Universal's writing staff, furnished the story and George Marshall directed. The story pictures a miner's determination to avenge a swindle.

November 26.—"Fear Not," a feature introducing Brownie Vernon and Murdock McQuarrie, in a story contributed by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton, produced by Allen Holubar. Joe Girard and Frank Borsage will be featured in the support. In the first announcements this attraction was referred to as "The Twisted Soul," being a pictorial treatise upon hereditary tendencies.

December. 6.—"Fighting Mad," in which William Stowell is featured with Helen Gibson and Betty Schade prominent in the support. Messrs. Alexander and Myton also furnished this story, under the original title of "The Man of God." Edward J. Le Saint directed. Mr. Stowell has all along been leading man for Dorothy Phillips in Bluebirds.

December 10.—"The Silent Lady" will have Little Zoe Rae and Gretchen Lederer featured in the billing.

December 17.—"Bucking Broadway," starring Harry Carey, and Molly Malone featured as his leading lady. George Hively wrote the story and Jack Ford directed a pictured narrative of a cowpuncher who rescued his lady love from the "Great White Way."

November Brings "Luke" and "Rolin" Comedies

The weeks of November 18 and 25 and December 2 have been set down by Pathe in which to offer something said to be especially good in "Luke" and "Rolin" comedies. They are the two-reel Lonesome Lukes, "Clubs Are Trumps," and "We Never Sleep" and the one-reel Rolin, "All Aboard," in all of which Harold Lloyd, Snub Pollard and Bebe Daniels appear.

November Triangles Promise Program of Merit

Olive Thomas and Winifred Allen Slated Among Quality Productions, with Walt Whitman, Alma Ruebens and Roy Stewart Also on Bill

ACCORDING to Triangle's announcement this week of its program for November the list of five-reel features has a broad and varied appeal for all types of theatre-goers. The dramas are said to have light and heavy characters, plots sinister and complex, and also themes of more jolly vein. There is a play about prohibition, one with a military fulcrum, a couple of Westerns along modern lines, a society comedy-drama and a drama featuring Winifred Allen amid recruiting and training camp scenes across the Canadian border.

The first week in November William Desmond, with Claire MacDowell, is presented in "Fighting Back." In the supporting cast are Jack Livingston, Josie Sedgwick and a large company of Triangle Western players. The feature centers about the theft of despatches from an army officer by a peon servant.

"Up or Down?" also released November 4, is a story of wavering fortune, in which George Hernandez has the leading male role. Many of the scenes, it is said, were shot on the O'Neil Ranch, near Santa Barbara, Cal.

"The Medicine Man," scheduled for November 11, stars Roy Stewart, and deals with the work of a gun-man of the West. Ann Kronan has the leading feminine role opposite Stewart. The second half of the same week "Indiscreet Corinne," the comedy-drama featuring Olive Thomas, is scheduled for release. It is her first siren play. Miss Thomas is supported by George Chesebro, Josie Sedgwick, Lillian Langdon, Thomas Guise and Anna Dodge.

In "A Case at Law," slated for November 18, Triangle is said to offer one of the strongest pleas ever made for the suppression of the liquor evil. Riley Hatch and Dick Rosson are also presented in prominent roles, and Pauline Curley has the leading feminine part. The picture was supervised by Allan Dwan and was directed by Dick Dosson.

The second half of the same week will see what Triangle considers new in vampires, when "The Fuel of Life," featuring Belle Bennett, is released. Texas Guinan, J. Barney Sherry and Thomas Guise are members of the supporting cast. The picture was directed by Walter Edwards.

The week of November 25 Triangle expects to offer two features which should make many new friends for this brand of pictures. Walt Whitman, with Alma Ruebens, will be presented in "The Regenerates," supported by Pauline Stark, Darrell Foss, John Lince and others. The direction is by E. Mason Hopper. "For Valour," the second of the week, is said to give Winifred Allen a vehicle worthy of her talent. It is a story of war with the scenes laid in Canada. Richard Barthelmess has the role opposite Miss Allen. Allan Dwan supervised the picture.

Irene Castle Release Slated for November 25

"Sylvia of the Secret Service" is announced as the third of the Irene Castle Pathe Plays for release November 25. It is described as a detective play, said to be characterized by more thrills and fast action than any in which Mrs. Castle has appeared. In this the star has a part that is said to give her greater opportunity than over. The picture was produced by Astra under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

Bert Lytell Stars in Lone Wolf Adventures

It was announced last week by Herbert Brenon's Department of Exploitation that arrangements have been made for Bert Lytell to appear on the screen in Louis Joseph Vance's "The False Faces," a continuation of the adventures of "The Lone Wolf," which is now running in the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Lytell created the title role in "The Lone Wolf" and will have the character in the continuation, which will be released under the screen name of "The Lone Wolf's Return." "The False Faces" is said to exceed "The Lone Wolf" in adroitness and speed of story. Running as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, the story has been attracting wide attention. It is expected to be even better fitted to the screen than its predecessor since Mr. Vance wrote the continuation with the future film adaptation in mind.

For many of its scenes, "The Lone Wolf's Return" will have the background of the Flanders battlefield since the Lone Wolf, who, it will be recalled, was the masterful leader of a gang of Parisian criminals, returns in the guise of a spy. The Lone Wolf risks his life behind the German lines to obtain valuable information for the Allies.

"The Lone Wolf's Return" will be Mr. Lytell's first stellar vehicle since he entered pictures and scored one of the hits of the last screen year in "The Lone Wolf." He is now playing before the camera in the leading male role of "Empty Pockets."

"Battle of Arras" at the Pathe Exchanges

Pathe announced last week that the films, "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," which have been shown in the Keith and Orpheum vaudeville houses with much success, can now be secured at the Pathe exchanges.

Universal Is Actively Producing Serial Pictures

Because of the fulfillment of Universal's faith in the serial form of photoplaying, President Carl Laemmle has given instructions to add further to the effort that has always been put behind the "continued-in-our-next" productions at Universal City. As a consequence the serial directors have barely outlined the offering upon which they are proceeding, when they turn their surplus thought to successive creations.

Jacques Jaccard has finished the seventeenth episode of "The Red Ace," in which Marie Walcamp is now sustaining interest and is ready to enter that star in another race with adventurous fate. With "Liberty" and "The Red Ace" to their credit, Mr. Jaccard and Miss Walcamp realize that it will "take a bit of doing" to surpass their past records.

"The Mystery Ship," featuring Ben Wilson, starts its serial appearances November 12, as the Universal's successor to "The Red Ace." In this attraction, directed by Harry Harvey, under the supervision of Henry McRae, the heroine is Neva Gerber, who leads in the "stunts" with Ben Wilson a close runner-up. Mr. McRae has suggested the story for the serial to follow "The Mystery Ship" and James W. Horne will do the directing. Eddie Polo will be star of "The Bull's Eye," with Vivian Reed his collaborator in excitement.

Farrell Succeeds Mayer in Metro Territory

Edward J. Farrell, formerly manager of the Boston Pathe Exchange, has succeeded Louis B. Mayer as general manager of the New England territory for Metro. The change became effective last week.

Mr. Mayer will become New England manager for the Select Pictures Corporation, it is announced.

Pathe's "Hidden Hand" Released November 25

Doris Kenyon Is the Star, and Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton Are Featured—Much Expected of Feature

PATHE, in its announcement last week of the release of its new serial, "The Hidden Hand," on November 25, when the first episode will be presented, claims for the subject an interesting story, four screen favorites, mystery and interest and an advertising campaign that is expected to reach every part of the United States. Pathe considers this a combination that will spell success for the picture.

The story of "The Hidden Hand," said to be replete with suspense and mystery, is by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue. They have written both the story and the scenario.

Not the least important part of Pathe's announcement of the serial is that which concerns the star and associate players. In fact, it is said that "The Hidden Hand" has already become known among exhibitors as a "four-star-serial" because Doris Kenyon, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton have the chief roles. Miss Kenyon has appeared in screen productions for about eighteen months, and has in that time made a neat record. This is her first serial. Sheldon Lewis is well known to serial audiences, having appeared in "The Iron Claw" and "The Exploits of Elaine." Arline Pretty will, in "The Hidden Hand," make her debut in serials for Pathe. Mahlon Hamilton has played leads for Olga Petrova, Ethel Barrymore, Gail Kane and Marguerite Clark.

The advertising and publicity campaign on "The Hidden Hand" is being conducted by the International Film Service and large display ads will appear, it is said, in more than threescore important papers in the larger cities throughout the country. Most of these newspapers will carry the full novelization of this serial by Arthur B. Reeve.

"The Hidden Hand" is being produced under the supervision of G. A. Smith, former serial publicity manager for Pathe—the man who helped to make many of the serials Pathe has released the successes they are. He is said to know what the public wants in serials, and is responsible for giving additional thrills to the continued photoplay he is supervising.

Sonia Markova Feature Released on November 11

As Stella Dean in "The Painted Madonna," Mme. Sonia Markova, the Russian actress recently engaged by William Fox, is scheduled to have her introduction to stardom on November 11. She has the character of a country girl who goes to the city, becomes popular and then reckless as a member of the chorus, develops thence into a woman of the world and eventually reforms, turning her home into a refuge for friendless girls.

The cast includes Sidney Mason, who played Jimmie in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and Blackie Daw in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," and who is cast in "The Painted Madonna" as Milton Taylor, the artist; William Lampe, who plays the role of John Radon, the villain, who is killed by lightning; David Herblin, who is Frank Osborne, the artist's chum; Albert Tavernier as Rev. Charles Lamb, Anita Navaro as Helen, Edith Reeves as Fanny Ben and Julia Stuart as Annabel Dean, Stella's mother. The story is by George M. Scarborough and the picture was directed by Oscar A. C. Lund and photographed by Joseph Ruttenberg.

Patriotic Picture for Baby Marie Osborne

Baby Marie Osborne, the little Pathe child star, will make her next appearance on the Pathe program early in December, it was announced this week. The picture is called "The Little Patriot," and is said to be the best in which she has appeared.

Prominent Editors Contribute to Pictographs

Several Declare the Paramount-Bray Films to Be an Invaluable Educational Influence—Subjects Timely and Educational

J. R. Bray, President Bray Studios, Inc.

IT was announced through Famous Players-Lasky this week that prominent editors of various publications in the United States are to contribute to the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, "The magazine on the screen." It is said this arrangement was perfected last week, and it is expected to prove a valuable move in the direction of co-operation for the purpose of bringing to the public, by the medium of the screen, subjects of timely and educational interest.

Besides offering their co-operation with the Paramount-Bray films, many of the editors are said to have been eulogistic in their words of approbation for "The magazine on the screen."

Gertrude B. Lane, editor of The Woman's Home Companion, made the following statement: "Every magazine editor has moments of wishing to show readers with his own hands how things are actually done. Three pictures, or four, or even a dozen, we can use in our pages to accompany a single article, and these are merely the high lights. But think of showing the whole process of such homely, essential tasks as upholstering a chair, cooking a dinner, building a fire or bathing the baby! Imagine the boon to Mrs. Newlywed, or Mrs. Young Housekeeper, who can not only read about her daily problems in her favorite magazine, but see them made clearer than daylight in her favorite motion picture theatre!"

Carl Hovey, managing editor of the Metropolitan, wrote: "The Metropolitan will be glad to co-operate with you in every way in producing magazine features for the pictographs. Opportunities in the motion picture field of reaching the great American public are simply phenomenal, and when we combine this form of popular publicity with the drive of a national magazine, the combination is inspiring."

John A. Sleicher, editor of Leslie's, said: "The people of this country were never more eager to learn than they are to-day in this world-war crisis. I congratulate the Paramount Pictures Corporation on its purpose to give to the people films of educational value. It will help them to think, to know and to understand, and thus to be prepared to rule wisely and well."

Other editors expressed their opinion in like terms.

Educational Shows "Smaller Monkeys" at Strand

One of the specialties scheduled for presentation at the Strand theatre in New York last week is "Smaller Monkeys," supplied by the Educational Film Corporation of America. The picture is a chapter from "The Living Book of Nature," produced by Raymond L. Ditmars. Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, has been booking these pictures during the past fifty-two weeks, of which the Ditmars animal pictures were booked forty-five weeks. E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Film Corp., in speaking of this long time booking, said that Mr. Edel will continue booking this series because they have never failed to interest his patrons, who seem to be most discriminating.

Cinema Changes Name of War News Weekly

The Cinema News Syndicate has announced that the title of its "American War News Weekly," a General Film release, has been changed to "The American War and News Weekly," and that in the future it will be conducted on a much broader scope than in the past. Instead of picturing war-time activities exclusively, this program feature is expectel to include other live news items of topical interest, giving theatres a wide variety of subjects. It is announced that news pictures will be gathered from all parts of the world by the thirty cameraspondents who have been engaged in collecting war pictures for past releases.

Comedy Creeps Out in Hearst-Pathe News Reel

One never looks for comedy in a news reel, but occasionally it may be seen there, just the same. An instance is said to occur in the Hearst-Pathe News, No. 88, in which scenes are shown of the defeat of King Alcohol at Redondo, Cal., where "blind tigers" are being put out of business by the Government in order to keep the army camp located there free from evil influences.

Hearst-Pathe News Shows Points of War Interest

Hearst-Pathe News No. 87, a current release, is almost entirely given over to points of war interest, covering territory both in the United States and abroad.

The reel starts with Great Lakes, Ill., where Secretary of the Navy Daniels greets 5,000 jackies at the Naval Station, and proceeds to Red Wood City, Cal., showing steel, wooden and concrete ships in the making for America's merchant marine; Epernay, France, where new war scenes are presented; Jassy, Rumania, showing the first pictures of the visit of the U. S. Mission to the Eastern front; Quantico, Va., with the marines going through various manœuvres; New York City, showing J. A. Berst, of Pathe, engaging Bessie Love to appear in Pathe Plays, which contract was concluded over the long-distance phone; Fort Sheridan, Ill., for some more war preparation scenes, and the patriotic demonstration for the Liberty Loan in New York City.

Universal Animated Shows Some Aerial Stunts

What Universal claims to be without a doubt the most amazing series of airplane pictures ever shown consitute the main feature of Universal Animated Weekly No. 96, just released. The pictures were made at the Curtiss Aviation school at Newport News, Va., by F. J. Conway, and the men who made the flights are Ed Stinson and Carl Batts, instructors at the school. The fliers are shown in loop-the-loops, nose dives, spirals, tail spins and all the other hair-raising feats which have become a necessary part of the equipment of every air scout on the French front. Most aviators, however, insist upon an altitude of at least 3,000 feet for these stunts, but Stinson and Batts are shown doing them only 400 feet up.

Goodrich Dirt Lacks Not in Patriotism

According to his creator, Wallace Carlson, Goodrich Dirt is not lacking in patriotism and in his latest adventure in the ninety-second release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs he is shown at a training camp. He has enlisted with the evident desire to serve his country and incidentally to insure himself and his pup three "squares" a day. This feature is said to give a very pleasing variety to the latest release of the Paramount-Bray film.

Mutual Weekly Shows Treatment of Prisoners

In striking contrast to the reported manner in which the Germans mistreat their prisoners of war, as described in books on the subject, is the kind and humane treatment accorded German prisoners in France, as pictured in Gaumont Weekly No. 146, released November 4 by Mutual.

Another picture, taken in France, shows the training of American officers at the front. Other timely subjects are scheduled.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

To the Exhibitor

What sort of audiences do you want?

Capacity ones, of course.

But more than that, they must be happy audiences, pleased audiences, pleased not only with the performance but with themselves.

You choose your program with care, selecting what you believe will attract and hold your patrons. You wait for the laugh, the sudden stiffening up in the seat, the spontaneous applause. These are what make for a capacity house not once or twice a week, but every night in the week. "I always enjoy the show at the Blank theatre," says the neighborhood patron. And he not only drops in himself, but brings his family again and again.

Do you know what, in the big, successful houses, is the picture that instantly wins applause, that makes the spectator not merely an onlooker but a performer?

Nine times out of ten it is a scene from a topical review. Of course, you say, that is easy. Wave the flag, and you have them. But it isn't only and always the flag. It's very often something that pleases your audience just because it's something they know or have recently read about. We all like to display a careless familiarity, or a bit of inside information with what the newspaper headlines, whether it is a cabinet officer or a new way to utilize breadcrumbs.

Every one of the current events weeklies and the screen magazines contains material that will instantly awake that delightful feeling of "Yes, I know about that!" and will put the spectator in a good humor lasting over the entire evening.

You have been depending largely on the drawing power of your feature, giving it ample lobby display and utilizing in your press or house organ the material on it furnished by the publicity man. Do you realize that, when it comes to weeklies and screen magazines, the press of the entire country is your publicity agent? All you have to do is to call to the attention of your patrons the fact that the events which have been engaging their interest every morning in type appear with all the power of actuality on the screen in your theatre. Every man who has a penny to spend reads the paper every day. How many of them devote an hour a week to fiction?

Hereafter, this department, in addition to its regular reviews, will devote a brief editorial to those portions of the weeklies, magazines, and other short subjects which bring to a focus events and topics of current and universal interest, and will indicate how the exhibitor can take advantage of the news value of these to increase the attracting power of his house.

AMAZING AVIATION

There are several subjects of interest in Universal Animated Weekly No. 96, including scenes with General Pershing's original command, the Sixth United States Cavalry, along the Rio Grande, and of the fine parade for suffrage held recently in New York. But the amazing feats of the Curtiss Aviation School graduates, occupying fully a half of the reel, tempt the reviewer to neglect everything else. No words can convey the unbelievable daring of those human birds, who drive their machines in swooping spirals and headlong dives over the jutting roofs of the city. As we are privileged to make the ascent with the cameraman we feel all the exhilaration of flight in vast spaces and catch our breath as a sister plane drops alongside, turned upside down but still going.

No carefully concocted "thriller" can equal in continued and climactic intensity of interest these astonishing photographs of men who are about to enter the lists with the world's most illustrious heroes of the air.

THE GLORY OF THE YELLOWSTONE

It does not need the words of the film editor to tell us that the wonder of Yellowstone Park is the strange and beautiful coloring of its rock formations and tumbling waters. In Pathe's latest scenic release, "The Yellowstone," the cameraman has done his work well and generously, giving us sweeping panoramas of the most striking and beautiful parts of the park; but a great deal of attractiveness has been added by the artist who colored the film.

In a program of the ordinary black and white this picture glows like a gem.

INTRODUCING THE "ARGUS PICTORIAL"

With the first number of the "Argus Pictorial," International releasing through Pathe makes its entrance into the field of the screen magazine. The opening subject is a well-taken picture of spring logging. Then follow underwater views and close-ups of live starfish. The melting of sulphur and its rapid crystallization are demonstrated. Finally, a clever craftsman shows us how a carved potato (what will Mr. Hoover say?), a dish of lampblack and a square of linen are all that are needed to reproduce the highly prized and highly priced woodblock prints of the Orient.

The Katzenjammer Kids disport themselves on the remainder of the reel.

A REEL FOR THE FAMILY

In Universal Screen Magazine No. 46 pleasant views of the Brooklyn kiddies who are collecting paper and tinfoil to pay for tree planting are followed by a series of pictures worthy of Alma Tadema, showing girls dancing on the seashore. Then comes a vaudeville turn, the performer being a fly with a genius for dumbbell exercise.

The final and most important subject deals with the billion dollar Barge Canal that runs between Buffalo and Albany, and, by means of the Great Lakes and the Hudson River, connects Dakota with the sea and enables the boats that lie idle on the lakes in winter to reach a point of departure for active war service. There are views of the caterpillar tractors at work, and the operation of the locks. An animated map makes clear the route of the canal.

The reel is especially well-balanced and interesting.

LOSS BY THE MILLION

With the coming of the snow begins the work of harvesting the timbers that are to help us win the war. The Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 92 has some strikingly fine scenes taken during the winter and spring at logging camps in Maine. With the freshets swelling the rivers the millions of logs are started on their water journey, only to pile up in tightly wedged jams that must be blasted apart with dynamite. In the midst of the swirling waters the veteran woodsman spins merrily down stream on a log that threatens every moment to run amuck and toss him to his death in the crowding mass.

The fireless cooker is no novelty, but Uncle Sam, in his Hints to Housewives, demonstrates how easily and cheaply any woman can make such a utensil for her own kitchen.

Goodrich Dirt, at the training camp dreams of valiant encounters, only to wake to the humiliation of the impending guardhouse.

HIGH STANDARDS ACHIEVED BY UNIVESAL'S TOPICAL WEEKLIES

Exhibitors who have been watching with interest and pleasure the development of Universal's three topical issues, the Animated Weekly, Current Events and the Screen Magazine, will congratulate themselves on the attractive program about to be offered by this last, the Magazine.

First in importance is a series of twenty-six subjects made with the co-operation and under the direction of the United States Department of Agriculture, to appear every other week. Leading the list is the picturesque work of the Forest Ranger. This is followed by scenes in the life of that Jack of all trades, the Government Fire Fighter, who, in his lonely life spent here and there in remote stations on hilltops, must be surveyor, telegrapher, cook and skilled fireman. Other activities of the department to receive attention are the Bureau of Animal Industries, whose latest endeavor among young people, the Pig Clubs, lends itself admirably to amusing screen depiction.

Of those who patronize picture houses it is reckoned that 50 per cent. are women and 25 per cent. children. Recognizing this fact, the Screen Magazine makes special provision for their interest in each number. A new series, showing how some of our most startling and expensive fashions in clothes originate, promises elements of dramatic interest far beyond the ordinary screen "Fashion Notes." Suffice it to say that "in the cast" are to be found a Peruvian mummy some 2,000 years old, the Curator of the Metropolitan Museum, Roshanara, the dancer, and an opera coat fresh from Fifth avenue.

How a fact of scientific import can be conveyed in story form so that even the immature mind can grasp its meaning is shown in a demonstration of the working of the seismograph. The editor does not content himself with some close-ups of the instrument. The concern of the learned gentleman in attendance at the bureau in Washington at noticing the action of his seismograph arouses the curiosity of the spectator, while scenes of an actual earthquake convey better than any title the reason for the invention and the cause of its disturbance.

Screen magazines are often, and obviously, "thrown together." Not so with the Universal's publications. In the highly intelligent and painstaking work of the Screen Magazine's editor, Mr. Ernest H. Culbertson, we have fresh proof that men of experience and ability in other fields are devoting their talents to screen production. Mr. Culbertson has been a newspaper man and magazine contributor. He knows the value of coherence and climax in the development of an idea. He has studied the psychology that underlies the spectator's attention—or lack of it—and he is bringing these to bear in the arrangement and titling of the Magazine.

Seen week after week this screen periodical grows in dignity, interest and the manner in which it meets the demand for interest and entertainment among intelligent men and women and their children.

Rialto Starts Series of Educational Concerts

Rialto theatre, New York, has inaugurated a series of thirty concerts, educational concerts and films, which are to be shown each Saturday morning at 10:30 as the first step in a comprehensive plan to give the school children and the people of New York an opportunity to hear the best of music at the smallest possible cost. An admission of ten cents, which does not pay the cost of the entertainment, is charged.

Seven numbers are rendered each Saturday by the full Rialto orchestra under the direction of Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld. Works of leading composers are included and there will be at least one work by an American composer at each performance There will also be one solo number, rendered by one of the soloists appearing at the regular Rialto performances during the week.

In addition to the music there is an educational film. At the opening concert, October 27, this was Edison's "Getting Acquainted with Bees," and on November 3 Lyman H. Howe's "Yosemite Valley" was the picture.

The program for the second musicale was as follows:

Battle Hymn of the Republic.
Oberon Overture, C. Von Weber.
Gypsy Rondo, J. Hayden.
Gavotte from "Manon," J. Massenet, sung by Mlle. D'Espinoy.
War Dance, Charles Skillton.
(a) Reverie and "By the Fireside," R. Schumann.
March of the Toys, from "Babes in Toyland," Victor Herbert.
Star Spangled Banner.

Paramount November Releases Look Very Good

Among Features Is Julian Eltinge in His Second Photoplay and Pauline Frederick in Drama—New Billie Burke Release

PARAMOUNT'S line-up of releases in November, or at least the partial line-up, as announced last week through the publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky, will no doubt look very good to exhibitors. Included among the stars who will be presented are Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, Julian Eltinge, Pauline Frederick, Marguerite Clark, and, in December, Billie Burke.

Paramount is said to consider the announcement of a co-starring production for Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, invariably welcome by screen patrons and exhibitors. "The Ghost House," their last picture from Paramount, received good reviews in all the trade papers and was received generally with favor. "Jack and Jill," which Paramount will release November 12, will no doubt prove as successful.

November 12 is also the date set for the release by Paramount of Julian Eltinge's next photoplay, "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," said by those who have watched the filming of the production to be among the cleverest things of its kind. Hector Turnbull, author of numerous Paramount pictures, wrote the story with Gardner Hunting and the scenario was arranged by Mr. Hunting. Donald Crisp directed the picture. He also directed the first screen success of Mr. Eltinge, "The Countess Charming."

What is said to be an unusually attractive feature of the November Paramount release is "The Hungry Heart," in which Pauline Frederick is starred. Robert G. Vignola directed the picture. It is announced also that Miss Frederick has completed "Mrs. Dane's Defense," from the Henry Arthur Jones drama, which will be a paramount release for the near future. This was directed by Hugh Ford. She is now at work on a third picture. Robert G. Vignola is director.

In the enghty-ninth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures the celebrated traveler takes the spectator to Tokyo, metropolis of Japan. In his next picture Mr. Holmes will take his travelers to Nikko in snow time.

"Bab's Matinee Idol," third of the sub-deb stories, starring Marguerite Clark, is completed and this Paramount picture is said to be perhaps the most amusing of the three. It will be a November release. "Bab's Burglar" went to the public October 29.

It has now been decided that "The Land of Promise," starring Billie Burke, will be released by Paramount in December. While the production has been completed for some time it was held back because it was believed that "Arms and the Girl," recently released, would be particularly timely, owing to its war features.

Edison Announces New Perfection Production

A screen version of the Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews' story, "Courage of the Commonplace," will be released November 12 as an Edison Perfection five-part picture, through the Kleine System, it was announced last week.

The story is said to be a narrative of romance and action woven around a student's days at Yale, following him through later years. Some of the scenes were taken at Yale, it is said, with President Hadley himself in some of the "shots."

Weber Called to the Colors

Joseph S. Weber head of the Laemmle Film Service Company, at Omaha, Neb., postal department, has joined the National Army.

Fox Schedules Farnum Feature For December

"The Heart of a Lion" Based on Ralph Connor's Novel Called "The Doctor," and Is Star's First in East Since Year Before Last

ABOUT the middle of December, according to an announcement made this week by William Fox, the producer will release another William Farnum production, "The Heart of a Lion." The picture is based on Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor."

It is claimed that the original version of this tale of the Rockies has been closely followed by Director Frank Lloyd. This, and the fact that Mr. Farnum's supporting company has been carefully selected, should be sufficient to insure a picture of exceptional merit, in the opinion of the Fox publicity bureau. Arrangements are now being made by branch officers for trade reviews, in accordance with the Fox policy of insisting that Standard Pictures shall be seen by exhibitors before they can be booked.

"The Heart of a Lion" is the first big film feature Mr. Farnum has made in the East since 1915, and it is the only complete picture Director Lloyd has produced for Fox outside of California. Part of the scenes were taken on or near Mr. Farnum's estate at Sag Harbor and part in a wild and rugged portion of eastern United States. The studio work was done at Fort Lee, N. J.

With Mr. Farnum in the cast of the picture are Marc Robbins, Mary Martin, William Cortleigh, Jr., Wanda Petit, Walter Law and Rita Bori. There also are a number of village characters—residents of Sag Harbor and neighbors of Mr. Farnum—who are used as extras. These include Tom Carroll, who is said to be nearly 100 years old.

Taylor Appointed Select Manager in Omaha

C. W. Taylor, formerly manager of the Mutual, then the General and still later the Standard exchanges in Omaha, Neb., has been appointed manager of the new Select Feature Film Company exchange in Omaha.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

First National Exhibitors Buy "Alimony"

"Alimony," an independent production in six reels, has been purchased by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, it is announced. The story was written by Haydon Talbot and produced under the direction of Emmet J. Flynn. Josephine Whittal, Lois Wilson and George Fisher are in the principal roles.

The story, it is said, reveals some of the existing evils of the divorce law. It is said to be a powerful drama based upon facts gathered by the author in the capacity of a New York newspaper man. A member of the purchasing committee of the First National Circuit said: "We reviewed this production three times to see if there was any cutting possible, but found there was not a scene which could, with profit, be eliminated. We have looked at a number of features in the past month with a view to buying, but 'Alimony' is the first to measure up to our standard as a box office attraction."

Abrams Made Assistant Manager of Hoffman Exchange

Jerome Abrams has been promoted to assistant general manager of exchanges of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, it is announced. He left last week for Atlanta, where he will establish a branch. As soon as this office is put in running order and the branch manager installed, Mr. Abrams will proceed to Dallas, his second objective.

"The South offers abundant opportunity for such an organization as Hoffman-Foursquare," said Mr. Abrams. "At this time, especially, there is widespread demand for quality pictures. Having product which we believe conforms to this requirement, and having determined not to add the positive-print war tax to the reasonable prices we charge for bookings, I am confident that the South will welcome our coming and gives us the support deserved."

Middle West Likes Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures

E. T. Lux, division manager in charge of Hoffman-Foursquare territory, including Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, after visiting the Cleveland, Cincinnati and Indianapolis offices reports satisfactory bookings on all Hoffman-Foursquare features and mentioned the gratification of his patrons over the plan of his company to pay the positive print war tax on all releases.

Hoffman's Cleveland Manager Reports Good Business

G. W. Erdmann, Cleveland manager of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, is busy in the new offices of his organization, now located at 310-312 Sloan building, Prospect street. Mr. Erdmann reports a good business and a new record for Hoffman-Foursquare pictures.

"Rightly Administered Economy Essential"

M. H. Hoffman, of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, Says, However, That It Is Extravagance Not to Pay Well for Good Stories

IT is contended by M. H. Hoffman, of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, Inc., that even though the swift, onward march the last decade has witnessed in the Nation's industries, none has advanced with more rapid and "sure-footed" pace than the motion picture industry. Rightly administered economy, Mr. Hoffman contends, is the back-bone of success in any adventure and is bound to win. "The keenest judgment and the quickest moves," he says, "are required to hold the reins of leadership in one of the biggest and most powerful industries in America—the motion picture industry."

To the consistent appeal for economy in the expenditure of money in producing and distributing pictures, Mr. Hoffman makes one notable exception wherein he maintains that it is extravagance not to pay substantially for what is the heart and soul of the picture—the story. This expenditure, declares the head of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, is in the purchase of original stories by distinguished authors, or plays or novels.

"The very foundation of motion pictures is the good story," says Mr. Hoffman. "Provided with a good story, the director is fortified at the outset, and with it he is enabled, with an adequate cast, photographers, lighting, technical heads and settings, to produce a picture that will do credit to the organization back of it.

"The sooner producers look squarely in the eye conditions that must be adopted to turn out first-class product the sooner will the average rise to that level which, once reached, will benefit all in the industry—distributors and exhibitors as well as producers.

"For the better the average of the product, the stronger will be its appeal to the public. So with the number of patrons steadily added, all who in any way cater to them must profit. Let producers weigh well these facts, and welcome the chance to purchase a fine story—whether it be original, or in play or novel form—and be ready to save himself money in the end even though he pay a good price for it."

Raver Starts Production with Breese Featured

Under the Direction of Burton King, Harry Raver Commences Work on New Production for the Independent Market—Praise for "Public Defender"

HARRY RAVER announces that his next production is now under way at the Raver Studios, at Yonkers. Edmund Breese is to be featured with the principal feminine part taken by Alma Hanlon, who played opposite Frank Keenan in Mr. Raver's last production for the independent market, "The Public Defender." The title for this production has not been announced. The story, it is said, tells of a person afflicted with a peculiar form of monomania which results in mysterious thefts that baffle the police authorities. Burton King who directed "The Public Defender" is directing this new production.

Mr. Breese will interpret in this production what is commonly referred to as "crook" roles. It is said that he will be called upon to impersonate several distinct characters, all characterized by the expletive, "crook," in this production. Mr. Breese has had more than twenty years experience on the stage and before the camera. He is an able exponent of character acting. One of Mr. Breese's best known parts was taken in "The Master Mind," produced some time ago.

Mr. Raver reports that he has received numerous communications from prominent men in public life, praising his production, "The Public Defender," written by Mayer C. Goldman. Among those who have placed their stamp of approval on Mr. Raver's productions are: Justice Edgar J. Lauer, of the Municipal Court; Rev. John E. Zeiter, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Bronx; Edward J. Dunphy, Dr. William J. O'Sullivan, medico-legal expert in criminal law; Samuel J. Siegel, Rabbi Samuel Greenfield, Myron Sulzberger, Franklin Tomlin and Frederick S. Zobel.

Lust to Distribute Oro Pictures in Maryland Territory

Oro Pictures, Inc., announce that a contract has been entered into between this company and Sidney B. Lust, of Washington, D. C., whereby Mr. Lust controls the distributing rights to Oro productions in the territory which embraces the States of Maryland, Delaware, North Carolina, a section of West Virginia and the District of Columbia. The first releases of Oro Pictures which Mr. Lust will handle through this territory are "Loyalty," "Humility" and "When Destiny Wills."

Mr. Lust is prominent in exchange circles in the independent market and has been instrumental, in a large measure, for the progressive steps which have been taken in the territory which he controls for Oro Pictures. He expresses satisfaction with the acquisition of the Oro releases and says that he can promise the exhibitors in his territory features that will show results at the box-office.

"Newspapers Unfair To Silent Drama," Says Rapf

Harry Rapf Criticizes the Attitude Taken by the "Dailies"— "Screen Plays Equal in Importance to Spoken Drama," He Says

HARRY RAPF, prominent factor in producing end of the motion picture industry and a progressive worker in the interests of independent productions, has the following to say on the attitude taken by newspapers and newspaper critics in reference to the motion picture:

"Dramatic critics of the big dailies," said Mr. Rapf, "do not give the motion picture play the attention that its popularity and importance warrant.

"I have often wondered," continues Mr. Rapf, "if the newspapers and the critics realize what it means to put a production on the screen. There are very few outputs to-day in pictures that represent less than $40,000 and many of them upward to one hundred and one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The author, the director, the actor, and the manager of photoplays to-day represent a standard that is hardly surpassed in the personnel of the spoken drama.

"Yet, in the face of these compelling facts and the universal popularity of motion pictures, very few photoplays, outside of the most spectacular productions, are given an eye by the critic. Nearly all of the important motion picture producers advertise generously in the papers, but picture reviews must give way to the columns of space devoted to the stage pieces.

"In my forthcoming production of 'The Struggle Everlasting,' in which Florence Reed is the star, Edwin Milton Royle, the author, gives all his time and ingenuity to the completion of the piece, working along with the director, James Kirkwood. If a man like Mr. Royle, who is one of the foremost authors of the spoken drama, will devote all his time to the completion of his play on the screen, and if a stage star like Florence Reed will give over all to the pictures when the legitimate stage constantly calls for her, I can't understand why pictures should have secondary consideration from the newspapers.

"Hugh Ward, the Australian theatrical magnate, recently paid $100,000 for the rights to twelve Broadway successful stage plays, while A. H. Woods paid $125,000 for a half interest in one photoplay. What more powerful argument in favor of the importance of the photo play could be offered?"

Educational Films Establishes Exchange in Minneapolis

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, announces that on November 15 he will open an exchange in Minneapolis. The exchange will bear the name of Educational Films Corporation and will be under the management of P. H. Carey, who is well known as an exchangeman. Mr. Carey was formerly general manager of the Zenith Feature Film Company of Minneapolis. Mr. Hammons said that he now has distributing points for Educational Pictures in all parts of the country, except in the states of Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia. Plans are now being considered to establish convenient exchange facilities for this territory.

W. H. Productions to Release Hart Feature, "The Bargain"

The W. H. Productions Company announce as one of its first releases "The Bargain," featuring William S. Hart. This production was made under the direction of Thomas Ince. Clara Williams presents the principal feminine role. Others in the cast are J. Frank Burke, Barney Sherry and James Dowling. The picture was made more than a year ago. Mr. Hart has the role of a "good-bad" man, whose good side triumphs over the bad side because of the influence of a true woman. It is a typical Western drama.

"Mothers of Men," Robards Production, Propaganda Play

H. J. Shepard, of Shepard and Van Loan, who is handling the exploitation of "Mothers of Men" for the Robards Features, reports that he has received communications from independent buyers throughout the country asking for detailed information concerning this production. "Mothers of Men" was shown to the trade recently. It is a propaganda play in the interest of woman suffrage and tells the story of a young woman who is a justice in a court of law and later elected Governor of the State. Her husband is accused of murder, and as Governor she is confronted with the problem of freeing her husband. She has the right to pardon him but lets the law take its course until the day of execution when the confession by one of the accused men clears the husband of all guilt. It is in five reels.

Film d'Art Comedies to Be Released on Open Market

John D. Perry, president of the newly organized Film d'Art Company, announces that the two-reel comedies to be produced by this company under the personal direction of Mr. Perry, will be released on the independent market. Two comedies, "Cousins" and "Auntie's Triumph," are completed and will be given a trade showing this week. Announcement of the time and place will be made in due time.

"Cousins," the first two-reeler to be completed, contains a patriotic appeal and tells of Auntie's activities in organizing a "home guard." "Auntie's Triumph" is based on the temperance question and tells how Aunties swings the county in favor of prohibition.

Winkler Writes Score for "Zeppelin's Last Raid"

Max Winkler, it is announced, has completed the musical score for "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," one of the first productions to be released by the newly-organized U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

Kummer Praises Olcott for Work on "The Belgian"

Frederic Arnold Kummer, author of a number of plays and books, and who contributed "The Belgian," which was adapted to the screen and produced by Sidney Olcott and shown to the trade for review recently, has a word to say regarding the work of Mr. Olcott in producing for the screen his story of "The Belgian."

"Were all authors of motion pictures so fortunate as to have their works produced by such an artist as Sidney Olcott," said Mr. Kummer, "the prejudice which many writers feel against expressing their works in screen form would be eliminated.

"After my experience with Mr. Olcott in making 'The Belgian,'" Mr. Kummer continued, "I am convinced that the really big and notable screen successes are built rather than written. When, over eight months ago, I was asked to write this photoplay especially as a vehicle for Walter Whiteside and Valentine Grant, who are featured, I sat down and drafted a synopsis of the picture, containing much of the material which appears in its finished form. But that material, as then assembled, would not have made such a picture as was finally evolved had it not been guided by such a director as Mr. Olcott."

Backer of Mammoth Film Forms Producing Company on Coast

F. E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, announces that he has formed a producing company, with headquarters in San Francisco and will start on the first production about the 1st of January. Mr. Backer has been on the coast since last August and has thoroughly acquainted himself with the producing end of the business. He says that he has a few ideas that he is anxious to put to a practical test. He reports that the booking from the Mammoth offices in New York are satisfactory.

Lawrence to Direct New Ivan Problem Play

Edmund Lawrence, who directed "Married in Name Only" for Ivan Film Productions, has been engaged to direct the production of "Life Against Honor," by Ivan Productions and will commence work on same this week. Leah Baird, James Morrison and Edward Mackay have been selected to interpret the principal roles. The names of the others who will be selected for support, will be announced later. The production will be one of the series of problem plays which the Ivan are producing, the latest one to be completed being "Sins of Ambition." The theme of the new production is not announced.

Keith Circuit Book King-Bee Billy West Comedies

Nat H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Company, closed a deal with Tom Daly, representing the Keith Circuit, for twenty-days' showing of Billy West in King-Bee two-reel comedies. The first comedy to be shown on the Keith Circuit under this contract will be "The Fly Cop," released October 1.

Schlesinger Reports Sales On Peggy Hyland Picture

President of Mayfair Film Corporation Says That Middle West and Foreign Rights Have Been Sold for "Persuasive Peggy"

MAYFAIR FILM CORPORATION has launched its first independent production, with Peggy Hyland in the leading role. It was shown for review at the Broadway theatre, last week. It is titled "Persuasive Peggy," adapted from Mrs. Maravene Thompson's novel. M. A. Schlesinger, president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, announces that a large part of the Middle West territory, including Chicago had been disposed of before his production was shown for review, and says that he takes this as pretty good evidence that Miss Hyland's first picture is going over with a "bang."

Mr. Schlesinger in commenting upon his production has the following to say:

"Two sales plans presented themselves to me—either I was to attach the fortunes of the picture to a program or I was to place it on the independent market.

"It has been said that the program is the burying ground of many state rights' failures. In other words if your picture is not good enough to stand on its merits some program will take care of it. This means a sacrifice of individuality, and, of course, problematical results.

"The recent return to the plan of open booking in the exploitation of picture productions is an argument in favor of state rights methods. 'Persuasive Peggy,' in my opinion, is too good for program purposes. It has the advantage of the presence of a motion picture star, Miss Hyland. Miss Hyland is naturally talented. She takes to screen work as readily as a duck takes to water and registers emotion with dramatic appreciation. She had done stage work in England and had made many screen successes accrediated to her.

"The character of Maravene Thompson's heroine metaphorically fits Miss Hyland like a glove. Director Charles Brabin has given 'Persuasive Peggy' a flawless production. It is a story founded on the basic theme of a bride and her young husband building their home of happiness on the experiences of their early married life. The theme has a widespread if not a universal appeal. Everybody understands and appreciates it.

"Such a production is a sure-fire winner. It demanded world-wide and individualistic exploitation which you could only give it by the state rights plan of distribution.

"The foreign rights were soon disposed of, the Western and Middle Western territories have gone and buyers and exhibitors alike have already expressed themselves as delighted with the money making properties of the picture. Canada and a few territories are under consideration."

Schlesinger Visits New England States

Gus S. Schlesinger, manager of the Domestic Department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has left for a tour of the New England States in interest of the department he represents. M. S. Epstin of the same office has just returned from a successful trip of the Middle West States in interest of "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917."

Ogden Pictures Completes Second Walker Production

Ogden Pictures Corporation announces that "The Grain of Dust," the second Lillian Walker feature, is completed and will be ready for release about the middle of November. The picture has been under production for about seven weeks. It is said that 42,000 feet of negative film was used in the filming of this production.

Spitzer Corrects Statement by Trade Publication

Nat. H. Spitzer, vice-president and sales manager of King-Bee Film Corporation, wishes to correct an erroneous statement which he said appeared in the columns of the Trade Review of last week to the effect that he had severed connections with the King-Bee Corporation and would devote his time to the exploitation of the Leah Baird productions.

Mr. Spitzer sent the following letter to the editor of the above-mentioned trade publication, which he has forwarded to the editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and which explains Mr. Spitzer's attitude in the matter. Addressing the editor of Exhibitors' Trade Review, Mr. Spitzer wrote:

"Your last issue carried an announcement implying that I had severed my connections with the King-Bee Films Corporation. Will you kindly correct this in your next issue, as it is absolutely without foundation. I still retain my interests in that company, will continue my activities there, and nothing is further from my thoughts or inclinations than severing my connections with King-Bee Comedies.

"The success of King-Bee is now, and always will be, something toward which I want to point with pride. My efforts, coupled with Mr. Hiller's and Mr. Burstein's, have put these comedies where they are to-day, and now that the hard work is over I want to enjoy the fruits of it.

"Any announcement of my being interested in the Leah Baird productions has nothing whatever to do with my activities with King-Bee Films Corporation."

Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures Going Good in New England

Samuel Rubenstein, manager of the Boston Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange, arrived this week in New York and reports that Hoffman-Foursquare pictures are meeting the demands of New England exhibitors. "The quality of the pictures," said Mr. Rubenstein, "and the fact that we are co-operating to the full with every exhibitor, form two elements which appeal to every fair-minded business man. Then our prices are reasonable, which enables exhibitors to make a profit on every Hoffman release."

Jewel's Late Production Opens at Broadway

Jewel Productions latest seven-reel feature opened at the Broadway theatre, this week. It is titled "The Price of a Good Time," an adaptation from Marion Orth's story, "The Whim," by Lois Weber. Mildred Harris makes her debut as a motion picture star in this production. "The Price of a Good Time" is described by Jewel Productions as being a "Within-the-Law Cinderella," play, its theme dealing with the adventures of a department store girl who desires the good things in life and whose anxiety leads her to "pay the price."

Offices Established to Handle Flynn Serial

The Wharton Releasing Corporation announces that offices have been established on the third floor of the Longacre Building, Times Square, New York, for the purpose of handling the executive business incident to the exploitation of the serial, now under production at the Wharton Studios, Ithaca, N. Y., which will tell the inside story of German intrigue in America. The story for this serial, the title for which has not been announced, was written by William J. Flynn, chief of the United States Secret Service. The serial will be released through M. H. Hoffman, Inc. Charles V. Henkel will be in charge of the New York office.

"Sins of Ambition" Ready for Trade Showing

"Sins of Ambition," the late Ivan production, has been cut and edited and is now ready for a trade showing, it is announced. The date for the trade showing has not been announced. The story tells of the cause and effect of unrighteous ambition and is one of the series of problem plays to be produced during the coming year by Ivan. Ivan Abramson directed. Leah Baird is in the featured role. Others who interpret outstanding roles are: Wilfred Lucas, Barbara Castleton, James Morrison and Anders Randolf.

Seng Sells Canadian Rights to "Parentage"

FRANK J. SENG announces that he has closed a contract with J. J. Allen, vice-president of Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., of Toronto, whereby this company acquires the distributing rights to Mr. Seng's production, "Parentage." Mr. Allen left for Toronto last week, taking with him advertising helps which, Mr. Seng says, are without a doubt the most novel display of advertising sheets ever prepared for any one production.

Mr. Allen shortly after his return to Toronto reported to Mr. Seng the following information:

"We have booked 'Parentage' to open Loew's theatre in Montreal on November 12. We believe that you are aware of the fact that this will be one of the most beautiful theatres in Canada. The fact that 'Parentage' has been selected for the opening is, in our opinion, one of the strongest testimonials your production has ever received."

Ginsberg Assistant Manager of Sales for Oro Pictures

Harry Ginsberg has severed connections with the Short Features Exchange, to accept the position of assistant general manager of sales with the Oro Pictures, Inc. He took up his new duties last week.

Mr. Ginsberg's association with the motion picture industry covers a period of a little more than a year. He entered the business a novice, his first experience being with the Mutt and Jeff Exchange, of which H. Grossman was general manager. After a short time as salesman for that firm, he was made manager of the firm's operations in New York State.

When the A. Kay Company was formed to market state rights productions, Mr. Ginsberg was made assistant to the president of that concern.

Mr. Ginsberg toured the country in the interests of this concern. Up to about this time the A. Kay Company had not as yet found a market for its product in New York, and Mr. Ginsberg opened an exchange to handle A. Kay releases. This was the start of the Short Features Exchange.

Mr. Ginsberg's new connection puts him back with old friends again. His first position in the picture business was with the Mutt and Jeff Film Exchange, of which Mr. H. Grossman was general manager. Mr. Grossman is now president and general manager of Oro Pictures, Inc.

Henry Siegel Manages Select's New York Office

Changes made last week in the New York exchange of Select Pictures places Henry Siegel in charge as branch manager, it was announced last week. Mr. Siegel had previously been assistant manager, and when the opportunity arose his record made him a first choice for the executive.

Berg Reports Bright Outlook for Castleton Features

Harry Berg, President of Berg Productions, Says That the Trade Through the West Is Enthusiastic Over His Last Production

Harry Berg, president of Berg Productions, who is visiting all the large centers between here, New York, and the coast, in the interest of his latest production, featuring Barbara Castleton, to be released in the near future, reports that independent buyers throughout the territory which he has covered, including all important cities from New York to Denver, express satisfaction with his production, and he says that the success of his new organization is assured if the reception given him by the independent trade can be taken as a criterion for future business. In a letter written to his New York manager, Mr. Berg said:

"At every distribution point I have met with a most enthusiastic reception. The people out here know Miss Castleton's work, and the quality of pictures in which she has appeared. Consequently, they are only too ready to take over our releases for their territories. It is the easiest selling proposition that I have ever run up against.

"I have already closed two deals covering a territory of seven states and have several other offers which I expect to close in the near future. I am continuing on to the coast, and expect to close out practically the entire country, before my return. From all appearances at present, our Castleton productions will be one of the most successful groups of releases of the year on the state rights market," concluded Mr. Berg.

Wolfberg Thinks Time Ripe to Raise Admissions

HARRIS P. WOLFBERG, of Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, announces that as a result of a several days' trip through the territory of Ohio, he has noticed that few if any exhibitors in this territory have raised their admission prices as the result of the War Tax on amusements. The following is Mr. Wolfberg's statement on this situation:

"The majority of the exhibitors in this territory are making it plain to the public that the tax which is being collected, goes to the Government, but in very few instances has there been an attempt made to raise the prices.

"Here is a lost opportunity," says Mr. Wolfberg, "the war tax has been placed before the people in its true light but no attempt has been made to present to these same people the constant rising costs of doing business. Who is going to take care of these? In every line of business they have been taken care of by an increase of price, but those exhibitors who are still charging the same prices that they did two, three, and four years ago are playing a losing game.

"It is clear that the time is ripe for the general advance of the price of admission and the sooner exhibitors will get together and bring about such a rise the sooner will the business of entertaining people become more than an exchange of dollars for the small exhibitor."

Billy West Company Start Work in Hollywood Studio

MEMBERS of the Billy West comedy stock, who left New York last week for the coast are reported to have arrived safely and will commence work in the Christie Studios, Hollywood, Cal., which studio the King-Bee Corporation has taken over for the period of a year.

Over twenty people traveled in the party, including Babe Hardy, Leo White, Ethel Gibson, Budd Ross, Fred Baine, Henry Bard, Susie Bard, Bennie Berk, Rex Taylor, Henry Obrock, Millie Burstein and Louis Burstein, president of the King-Bee Company. Billy West and Arvid Gillstrom joined the party in Chicago. About January 1, Billy West will be seen in the first five-reeler made by the King-Bee Company, entitled "King Solomon." Work on this production will be started soon.

There were twenty-seven members of the King-Bee roster taken to Hollywood, including the stage hands, property men, carpenters, scenic artists, cameramen and scenario writers.

Nat H. Spitzer sales manager and vice-president of the company had to remain in New York to close some important deals for foreign rights. He expects to rejoin the party in California for the Christmas holidays.

"Daughter of Destiny" Title of First Petrova Production

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY" is the title chosen for the first production of the Petrova Pictures Company, in which Madame Petrova is featured. Frederick L. Collins, president of the company, announces that the production is completed and that Director George Irving is now engaged in cutting and titling it. Mr. Collins stated that when the picture was shown recently at a private review S. L. Rothapfel and members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit expressed satisfaction.

"Daughter of Destiny" tells of the career of an American girl whose father is an American ambassador, stationed at one of the political "hot-beds," in Europe. The girl becomes entangled in a web of diplomacy. She has many exciting adventures, but holds true to her American ideals and wins out in the end.

It is announced that Mme. Petrova will commence work on her next picture at once. It will be produced at the Biograph studio and the name of the director for the next production will be announced as soon as possible.

THE WORLD MARKET

The Far East Discussed by a Film Woman

Chinese Exhibitors Loading Up for Bad Spell—Manila Weak—Japs Doing Land Office Business—Orient Shipping Badly Crippled

WE visited the Philippines, China and Japan all during the rainy season and found business somewhat dull on account of it. Between Nagasaki and Manila we were caught in a typhoon and after being whirled about for two days and two nights were nearly dashed on the rocky shores of Formosa. On one part of that island it is said only women live, so the men on board were praying that if we had to be shipwrecked it would be there! In Manila picture men were inclined to be conservative regarding new business as the Philippines have been very hard hit by the entry of the United states in the war and they are waiting to see what the future will bring. The territory there is usually worked in connection with China as there are not enough houses in either country to use a supply of film alone.

In China we found the rainy season extra long and heavy. Exhibitors were losing business on account of floods. In Canton, where the streets are only six feet wide, the owners of houses were worrying for fear that their experience of a few years ago would be repeated.

At that time the floods rushed down the narrow streets and became so deep that they washed into buildings on the second story and caused considerable loss of life as well as great damage to property.

The rainy season in China is followed by the typhoons and people are afraid to adventure abroad much during this time of the year so that picture proprietors cannot expect very good business again until about November.

Film dealers in China are buying with Chinese money (Mexican silver) every inch of suitable film they can lay their hands on as the exchange is very favorable for them just now, silver being higher than it has been for twenty years.

Two years ago, Chinese merchants had to pay two dollars Mex. for film valued at one dollar gold. Now they have to pay only one dollar fifty cents Mex. for the same amount so they are investing their money in pictures and putting them on the shelves until they need them.

Transportation of film is extremely difficult in China, especially when it is being sent into the interior. There the Chinese pirates are still doing business in the same old way, and when the Government sends soldiers to capture them they offer the soldiers more than the Government is paying them so the soldiers promptly turn to the side of the pirates and help them with their looting. At present foreigners are not allowed to travel about much in the north part of the republic on account of the recent revolutionary attempts.

The picture business as well as most other business in Japan is flourishing. The Japanese are becooming a very rich and prosperous people and are making themselves almost indispensable in the manufacture of certain articles. They manufacture a great many pictures, including Japanese dramas, adaptations of European dramas, scenics and industrials. They have big, fine, modern studios and are going at the thing in a scientific and artistic way. As far as other business goes, Japan is very busy manufacturing shoes and clothes for the Russians in wholesale quantities as well as building ships, the latter industry having increased over 400 per cent since the beginning of the war. Japan is enthusiastically with the Allies and intends to see the war to a finish!

Oriental film dealers are having considerable difficulty with their shipping, as there are not enough ships on the Pacific to handle the tremendous business growing there. They complain that their film and mail are constantly delayed and that the freight rates they now have to pay are atrocious. There seem to be no German raiders in the Pacific at present, although several interned German boats have escaped from Java. When near Honolulu we were alarmed by the sight of several submarines. When they came out of the water, however, and we saw the Stars and Stripes floating behind them we lost our fears and realized that we were back in the protection of Uncle Sam.

Denmark Thinks Our Entrance Will End War in Six Months

Through a downtown business man the export department is informed of the receipt by him of a letter from Ingvalid C. Oes, Scandinavian representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who resides in Copenhagen, Denmark, in which he says:

"There is a feeling over here that the action of the United States in entering the war will bring about a conclusion of the conflict in six months."

Inter-Ocean Hears from Optimistic Belgian

Most interesting letter was received this week at the offices of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation from an optimistic manager of one of the largest houses in Belgium who stated that he would be pleased to enter into a contract now for exclusive rights for Inter-Ocean film productions for Belgium after the close of the present conflict.

Holland Firm Has Mutuals

J. Boun, of the Algemen Internationaal Filmbureau, Mauritskade 25, Amsterdam, Holland, wishes to announce to the trade, through MOTION PICTURE NEWS' Export Department, that his concern has secured the exclusive rights to the Mutual Chaplin films for Holland, the Dutch East Indies and West Indies. The deal was negotiated through the Oceanic Film Corporation, the overseas agents for Mutual.

Garrett Is Youthful Executive

Sidney Garrett, who at the age of thirty-four finds himself president of the film exporting business of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, New York, belongs to the new school of film executives, upon whom the industry in this country rests its hopes. Born in England, Mr. Garrett had considerable commercial experience in London.

Mr. Garrett, in 1916, went to New York and broke into the film game by buying pictures for foreign markets. About the same time Mr. Brockliss established an American branch of the world-wide film distributing business and early this Spring the two joined forces.

Sidney Garett Is President of J. Frank Brocklis, Incorporated

Mr. Garrett has handled such film deals for abroad as "Intolerance," "The Deemster," "The Barrier," "The Mormon Maid," "Billy West Comedies," "For the Freedom of the World" and others. He buys pictures for England, France, Italy, the Balkans, China, Japan, for South America; for all the world outside the United States that isn't fighting, in fact.

Newsy Notes from Busy Inter-Ocean

John H. Taylor, managing director of the London office of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, has cabled to the home office here of his safe arrival in London after being three days overdue.

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation announces it has procured for the United Kingdom and the Continent a new line of five reel productions, name of same withheld for the present.

Malitz Explains Exporters' Case to Washington

FELIX MALITZ, general manager of the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, in a lengthy letter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Daniel C. Roper, last week, took up the cudgels on behalf of the exporters. Mr. Malitz explained forcibly the case of the world market men in regard to the new war taxes. His letter follows:

October 27, 1917.

Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.
Attention of MR. DANIEL C. ROPER, Commissioner.

"Gentlemen: A few days ago we made free to send you a telegram regarding the new taxes imposed on films.

"While we are believers in taxes and fully appreciate their necessity, we, however, respectfully want to draw your attention to the fact that when it comes to export, the imposition of such taxes might have a very discomforting effect on the trade of this republic.

"Our firm is one of the most important exporters of films from this country; in fact, we export to all countries of the world except enemy countries and we represent quite a number of the most prominent producers in this country, abroad. Therefore, the question of taxes on export films is not only for ourselves, but mainly to the producing concerns whom we represent, a very vital one.

"Kindly bear in mind that the exporting of films from this country before the war was never very lively and successful, and on the average only very cheap prints were exported.

"As soon as the war broke out the main buyers of European film productions turned to this country because they had difficulty in receiving films from European countries on account of war conditions and taxes imposed through the war.

"It is, however, a fact that most of these buyers address themselves to this country more or less reluctantly because they contend that the European productions are more advantageous for them and, as a rule, cheaper.

"Now, therefore, the American producers face there a very acute question and they must make all kinds of efforts in order not only to firmly establish themselves in foreign markets, but also to be in a position to hold their own when the war will be over.

"We all are interested in expanding, in the first place, American commerce, and this firm, we believe, is one of the most courageous fighters for the acquisition and maintenance of such supremacy, and in this regard we firmly believe that, together with other firms engaged in the same line of business, we should receive all the encouragement possible, because of the fact that our fight is a very hard one and we are up against almost impossible conditions every day in order to carry on the business of exporting films.

"The tax of three-quarters of a cent per foot, as it now practically stands, will curtail the business very materially, because there are certainly a great many countries, especially Latin-American countries, which cannot stand such an increase in price because the density of the population and the social and financial conditions are such that they cannot pay high prices for the films they receive, and the prices obtained by the American producers in these countries so far are such that they most certainly do not allow an addition of three-quarters of a cent per foot tax. In other words, the American producers will have to sell at prices which would mean a loss to them or forget about the business; or the foreign customers will have to pay prices which are prohibitive for them.

"We beg to repeat that we are respectful observers of the laws of this country and wish to do anything prescribed by such laws and pay all duties and taxes faithfully and cheerfully, but would ask you to kindly consider the questions brought up in the present letter and let us know what your views in this matter are and what can be done to meet conditions."

Here is another striking stage display by Manager Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. It was used in connection with the Liberty Loan Campaign and the greatest credit was given Mr. Franklin for his assistance. The theatres of Buffalo themselves contributed $200,000 to the bond subscription.

Make Stars Work for You Thro' Advertising

straight into the picture. We would have advertised here that this was the second of the Mary Roberts Rinehart "Bab" stories done into films, and the fact that the name of the author and that the story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post weakens the pulling power of the display.

Madison theatre, Detroit, may seem in contrast to the advice that we give last week—to hit the big idea hard. But look at this display and you will see that the big idea has been hit hard. The triple program is featured, true, but there is a cut of each of the three stars. Detroit theatres are much better advertisers than those in most cities, yet this one stands out among the rest, even though the display of the Majestic, in the same city, is hard to beat, with a cut of the star and the name properly displayed.

Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, gets the right idea of making a strong display of the picture of Dorothy Dalton, but the designer has hurt the pulling power by using too much type. The name of the star appears cramped. The matter about the picture being the talk of New York is badly repeated. If the first three lines about the picture had been left off and the word "Dorothy" given the place there would have been a much more striking display.

A good, safe rule is to try to see how little you can put in your advertisement, and not how much.

The display of Wells theatre, Norfolk, Va., is reproduced because this is, from every angle of advertising, utterly bad. We don't like to pick out pictures for their quality in this department of exploitation conduct, but it is nevertheless true that here are three attractions of unusual worth, and the stars are three of the greatest appearing on the screen. Yet the three attractions were given equal space and all without a picture. What would we have done here? Bearing in mind that all three attractions were great ones, we would have done one of two things—really both; used much larger space or made an effort in this display to pack the people in to see Geraldine Farrar and let the week day advertising take care of the other two attractions. But if we had used much larger space, and here is a case where the exhibitor could have used half pages and have made money, we would still have given the Farrar picture dominating position because it is the first attraction of the week and we would have used smaller space for the other two pictures. The man who designed this advertisement passed over every pulling point that he had. The display reads like the work of one who felt that he had to advertise and who did it in the easiest way, simply ruled off the space and divided it among the three attractions.

All the stars in the world, the greatest of them, and for that matter the greatest of all productions, are going to avail a theatre little so long as it follows such a policy.

There are lots of other ways of popularizing a star and of getting the fullest benefits of that popularity. In previous articles we have spoken of the use of their pictures in the programs of elaborate lobby displays containing as many different pictures of them as possible, of telling the followers of particular players that their favorite is coming to the theatre soon in such and such a play. We are going to take this matter up again in a separate article

The star is getting big money. Make him work for you. He is there ready and willing to do the work if you will put the punch behind him. Every exhibitor can do that, no matter what the conditions are in his town.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

PATHE west coast studios will be opened during the coming week when work will be commenced by Bryant Washburn in the filming of "Kidder and Ko," a five-reel comedy drama, the first of the Washburn series for the Pathe program.

Mr. Washburn, accompanied by his family and Director Richard Baker, arrived in Los Angeles Wednesday of the past week, and have been busy organizing his producing staff. In this he was aided by C. R. Seelye, general representative of Pathe, who has been on the coast for the past eight weeks, and who departed Saturday for the east, having completed his work here. The entire staff for the Washburn company has not been selected. Gertrude Selby will play the leading feminine role.

The Pathe western studio will, for the present, be located at the former Kalem plant in Glendale which was recently taken over by the Diando Film Corporation, under management of W. A. S. Douglas, who is making the Baby Marie Osborne subjects for Pathe.

Carlos Returns to East

A. Carlos, who since the opening of the William Fox western studios in Los Angeles, has served as general manager, has left that post for the east where he will be identified with the Fox Film Corporation in a more important capacity. Mr. Carlos departed for New York Saturday, October 27, and his leaving the friends he has made at the producing studios, was made an important event in his life by the entire organization accompanying him to the station, where he was presented with numerous remembrances. Sol Wertzel is to succeed Mr. Carlos at the Fox studios.

It is very probable that Director Richard Stanton will be sent to the eastern Fox studios within the next few days to make one or more subjects. No official action has been announced at the William Fox Hollywood studios, but preparations are being made for this move.

Work is progressing very satisfactorily on the next subject directed by Bertram Bracken which has Gladys Brockwell as star. This film which has been in production for two weeks has now been given the title of "A Branded Soul," which may later be changed.

Director Frank Lloyd has begun the filming of a Fox Special feature with Jewel Carmen as star. This will take Mr. Lloyd's time until the arrival of William Farnum, whom he will again direct.

The Franklin Brothers, C. M. and S. A., are now making the last scenes for "The Mikado," which has a big company headed by Francis Carpenter and Virginia Corbin, and are also working on scenes for "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" in which George Stone and Gertrude Messenger take the important parts.

"U" City Center of Rumors

If the hundred and one rumors, current this week, could be verified as authentic, Universal City would become a thing of the past. Rumors of all descriptions were current throughout the film colony due to the closing of a few companies as they finished productions.

Officials at the film city, including Mr. Sistrom, who is acting general manager of the plant, stated that as far as known now, the Universal Company has reached the minimum respecting the size of its producing organization. Radical changes in the policy of the company have made it necessary to eliminate all companies making subjects other than for the Bluebird and Butterfly programs or serials. In other words, all producing units making comedies and one, two and three-reel dramas have been dismissed. The Universal Company, according to a statement issued from the publicity department, now have sufficient pictures made for their two programs to continue releases up to in April, in the event that all companies now working were dismissed.

Plans made by the Universal Company, including the building and equipping of large enclosed stage, indicate that it is the intention to continue production throughout the rainy season in California, with more companies working than in the same season of the past. During the week no additions have been made to the producing organization, and on the other hand it is reported four directors and players sufficient for four companies have been dismissed.

West coast Universal officials and all people of the producing staff took considerable interest in the second liberty loan campaign, and there is every reason to believe there will be a greater sale of bonds at the film city for this issue than for the first. The total at that time was $60,000.

New Universals Under Way

Several new photoplays were put in production this week at Universal City. One is titled "The Wolves of the North" which will star Louise Lovely, supported by a cast that includes Hart Hoxie, Betty Schade, Alfred Allen and Grace McLean. The direction of this is by E. J. LeSaint, and the story is furnished by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark. The screen version was prepared by Charles Kenyon.

Herbert Rawlinson is to be the featured player in "The Love Claim," now in the making by Director Elmer Clifton. This is an original story by Walter Woods, of the Universal Scenario Department, who also prepared the screen version. The cast will include Sally Star, Clarissa Selwyn, Neal Hart, Millard K. Wilson, Sam de Grasse and Paul Hurst.

Ida May Park has prepared an adaptation from a W. Carey Wonderly story which will be produced as "Broadway Love." Miss Park will be in charge of the direction of this and will have Dorothy Phillips as star of the subject, supported by a big company that includes Juanita Hansen, Lon Chaney, Harry Von Meter, Eve Southern, William Burress, Gladys Tennison and Lule Warrenton.

The filming of "Green Magic," an original photoplay by Waldemar Young, has taken a Universal company headed by Ella Hall and Emory Johnson to Seven Oaks, Cal., where many of the exterior scenes will be made. The cast includes such well known Universal players as Gretchen Lederer and Harry Holden.

Another new play put in production is "The Highest Card," which will co-star Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford. It is laid in the gold mine country in the early West, and is an original one by Elliot J. Clawson.

Col. Jasper E. Brady, head of the Universal City Manuscript Department, has departed East for a conference with the heads of the Universal Company concerning future productions.

In making the final scenes for "Anthony the Absolute" Monroe Salisbury, who is co-starred with Ruth Clifford, received a bad wound in the arm while taking part in a knife fight on the stairway of a set.

Three serial companies are at work. The making of "The Mystery Ship" is under the direction of Harry Harvey, who has Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber as his principals; James W. Horne is working on the second episode of "The Bull's Eye," written by Tom Gibson, with Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed as leads, and Jacques Jaccard is finishing the last episode of the "Red Ace," starring Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo.

All of Ince Forces Busy

Within the next three days all of the Thomas H. Ince producing units will be at work. William S. Hart and company of thirty are camping in the canyons, near Chatsworth Park, getting the exterior scenes for his third Artcraft release, "The Bloodhound." Vola Vale, who appeared in the leading role with Hart in "The Silent Man," has been retained for this production.

A company of fifty, headed by Dorothy Dalton, and under the direction of R. William Neill, have gone to the back woods country, in the vicinity of Santa Cruz, where they are securing scenes for Mr. Ince's next Paramount "Flare-Up Sal." The company will be absent from the studio fully ten days.

The scenario for this story was written by J. G. Hawks, who last week became affiliated with the Thomas H. Ince organization. It is the sixty-third photoplay Hawks has written for Mr. Ince. Eleven were of two reels each; three were for state rights, and the remaining forty-eight were each of five reels.

A new story has been prepared for Charles Ray, and work on this will be commenced during the coming week. Director Victor Schertzinger will continue in charge of this producing unit. Upon the completion of "The Hired Man," Ray's third Paramount, he left for Buena Vista in the vicinity of Bakersfield, California, where he is enjoying a vacation in duck hunting.

Viola Dana Starts a New One

The Metro Studios took on additional activities this week when the second company, headed by Viola Dana, and directed by John Collins, began work on "The Winding Trail." Miss Dana arrived on Wednesday, and everything was in readiness for work of filming her first western made picture. Besides Director Collins, she was accompanied to the west coast by Assistant Director Andrew Kelly and Cameraman John Arnold.

The Edith Storey company made a number of very interesting scenes this week showing the Russian woman's regiment which will appear in the photoplay titled "The Legion of Death." It required several days training before the action of the female regiment received an official O. K. from western representative B. A. Rolfe.

The Metro Company has leased a big plot of ground in the San Fernando valley where war scenes are being filmed. Trenches, duplicated from photographs, were built, and here will be staged scenes from the western front European battle fields.

Norma Nichols, who has been seen in a number of Triangle pictures, and Irene Aldwin, who has played in a number of photoplays, have been engaged by Manager B. A. Rolfe to appear in scenes for "The Legion of Death," supporting Edith Storey.

Paralta Studio Grows Fast

Rapid progress is being made on the construction of the new Paralta Studios by a big force of men under the supervision of Studio Manager Robert Brunton. Two of the large stages have already been completed, and are now in use, and the third is in the process of construction. Work on the fourth will be commenced shortly. In all there will be four stages, each one enclosed with glass that it may be used at any season of the year or under any weather conditions.

Raymond B. West, who aided in laying out the Triangle Studios at Culver City so that the maximum amount of light could be secured, is also responsible for the ground plan of the new Paralta Studios. Mr. West is now a director there in charge of the Bessie Barriscale company.

The first work by the Rhea Mitchell Company toward the first production was done this week. Wallace Worsley is the director, and Edward Coxen is playing the male lead.

Reginald Barker directed the activities of approximately 200 people at Catalina Island this week when the Paralta Company of which Clara Williams is star, went to the island for a number of scenes for the Klondike story written by Monte M. Katterjohn. When weather conditions make possible the filming of snow scenes in the Truckee district, about fifty people will go to that northern California point for additional scenes in this photoplay.

Henry Walthal is starting work in a new subject, the production of which will be directed by Rex Ingram. The scenario and continuity were prepared by Julian Lamothe from a story titled "Humdrum Brown." Mary Charleson will be the leading woman in this subject.

Add to Vita Western Forces

Additional preparations are being made at the Vitagraph Hollywood Studio for an increase in the production staff. General Manager W. S. Smith now has in construction another mammoth stage of the same proportion as recently built, which will give the plant a stage floor space of 30,000 square feet. There are four companies now engaged at this plant, and it is expected an additional one will shortly be sent from the Brooklyn studio.

The Vitagraph lot now has taken on the appearance of circus grounds, for scenes in "The Eighth Great Grand Parent" provide that a society girl who boasts of her ability as a rider shall take part in the circus performance. Nell Shipman is the principal who performs the circus riding stunts under the direction of William Wolbert.

The serial company directed by William Duncan, now making the sequel serial, "Vengeance and the Woman," is at work on the sixth episode. Many of the scenes for this are being made in the canyons north of Hollywood.

The Big V Comedy Company, directed by Henry Kernan, which has Charles Dill and Carolyn Rankin as principals, are now filming the one-reel subject titled "Quarantined," and David Smith is directing the filming of a two-reel O. Henry story adapted from "The Fourth at Salvador." Chet Ryan and W. L. Rogers are leads in this. A peculiar feature of this is there is not a woman character.

Signal-Mutual in Twelfth Episode

The Signal-Mutual Company have had a great collection of "props" this week for the staging of thrillers in an episode of "The Lost Express." The list includes a partial suspension bridge which was torn loose at one end and permitted to swing free, a burning railroad train, and a runaway engine. All of these were used in the twelfth episode which has now been completed by Director J. P. McGowan. The company has been detained in completing the production, owing to the illness of Leo Maloney, leading man, and S. A. Sues, photographer, who are both confined at the Sisters' Hospital in Los Angeles. Maloney is suffering with muscular rheumatism, and Sues from a general nervous breakdown due to overwork.

Director McGowan has secured permission to use the jacknife drawbridge at Los Angeles Harbor, San Pedro, to stage a scene with Helen Holmes. The actress, as soon as the company resumes work, will be called upon to ride the burning train onto the bridge and leap from the coach platform into the harbor when the drawbridge opens and stops the train from going on across.

The favorite poem of James Whitcomb Riley, "Little Orphan Annie," has been adapted into a multiple reel scenario, and is now being filmed at the Selig studio by Colin Campbell and a big cast. The screen adaptation was prepared by Gilson Willetts. Coleen Moore, who was discovered by D. W. Griffith and featured in a number of Fine Arts subjects, has been engaged to take the name role in this production, which will also have Tom Santchi, Mae Gaston, Lillian Hayward, Eugenie Besserer and a number of others. Many important parts will be taken by child players.

General Manager James McGee of the Selig studios, has just returned from a trip East. He accompanied the body of a relative who died in California to Indiana.

Canyon in Next Fairbanks

The next Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft subject will have a Grand Canyon atmosphere, the company having left the Hollywood studios Saturday, October 27, for Williams, Ariz. They will probably be in the vicinity of the canyon two weeks. The entire producing staff, including directors John Emerson and Allan Dwan, Anita Loos and players made up the party. No name has been selected for this film.

The next Lasky subject, starring Sessue Hayakawa, will have a Hawaiian atmosphere. This is being directed by George H. Melford. Eileen Sedgwick, leading woman of the Universal organization, has been borrowed by the Lasky company for appearance in this subject opposite Mr. Hayakawa.

Director Melford has almost completed the Lasky picture, "Nan of Music Mountain," all scenes except those of the snow country having been filmed. These will be made at Truckee as soon as weather conditions are right.

Chet Withey is to return to the West coast, and will serve as director for Morosco-Paramount companies, first directing Vivian Martin. Mr. Withey did his first directing work on the West coast for Fine Arts, and for the past eight months has been in the East serving as director for Vitagraph and Goldwyn.

William D. Taylor has completed the filming of a patriotic story, "The Spirit of '17," which has Jack Pickford as star. Plans are now being made for the filming of an adaptation from a well-known novel in which Jack Pickford will be co-starred with Louise Huff.

The George Beban company are still in the northern part of California filming the exteriors of "Jules of the Strongheart."

A change was made in the executive staff of the Lasky Studio this week when Wellington Wales, who has served as auditor was appointed comptroller. Wales has inaugurated the efficiency accounting system at the Lasky Studio, which has aided greatly to reduce costs of production. L. L. Baxter has been appointed auditor and Edmond Mitchell purchasing agent.

New Faces at Triangle Home

An increase in the stock company at the Culver City Triangle Studios has been found necessary to supply the needs of the twelve different companies, and this studio now has many new faces. Wheeler Oakman, who has served as leading man for a number of subjects made at Selig, Mabel Normand and Universal studios will play with Alma Ruebens in "The Passion Flower." This photoplay is now being directed by Walter Edwards. Others in this cast are Francis McDonald and Jack Dyer.

Dear Mr. Johnston:-

May I apply this far in advance for a copy of your Studio Directory, when it comes out? I have the last one you issued, and find it more than handy for answers to questions that pour in, as well as making up screen biographies to use in the column Sunday.

Let me know the directory cost, and I'll send you the money. Anything I can ever do at any time, --- just write.

Very sincerely,
Reudon Lara
Photoplay Editor.

Virginia Foltz, former musical comedy favorite, has been selected to play an important part in "The Gown of Destiny," which is now being filmed by Director Lynn Reynolds. Miss Foltz created the Spanish senorita role in "Madame Sherry," and was the original Boy Blue in "Babes of Toyland." Reynolds's present story is adapted from "Each According to His Gifts," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post under the by-line of Earl Derr Biggers, author of "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and others. Herra Tejjedda, a French actor, has been engaged to take the role of a French designer, and Alma Ruebens will wear the gown. Allen Sears takes the leading role opposite Miss Reubens.

Having completed "Fanatics," Director Raymond B. Wells is now busy with the making of "The Man Above the Law," from an original scenario by Lanier Bartlett, which has a Navajo atmosphere, and is laid on the painted desert.

E. Mason Hopper has begun the filming of "Without Honor," a Triangle which will have Marjorie Wilson in the sympathetic role. She marries a youth to save him from himself, and thereby brands herself a scarlet woman, to keep him from a prison cell on a charge of bigamy. After many privations gone through with a smile, a marriage license is secured and a name obtained for her child. Derral Foss, Walt Whitman and Laura Sears play in support of Miss Wilson.

One of the big Triangle stages was the scene of much social activity when an informal dance in a beautiful mansion was staged there by Director Jack Conway for "Because of the Woman," a Southern story, with Belle Bennett in the leading role with Jack Livingston playing the masculine lead. It was impossible to secure sufficient extra people who were sufficiently proficient in the terpischorean art and Conway pressed into service almost a half hundred members of the Triangle stock company, all in evening clothes, for these scenes.

Olive Thomas in her next picture will be seen as a poor girl who is suddenly thrown into position where she can have anything that wealth can buy. Jack Dillon is directing this subject, which is titled "Betsy Takes a Hand," which is one of the prize scenarios in the recent Photoplay Magazine contest. Charles Gunn is playing the lead opposite Miss Thomas and George Hernandez, Diana Carillo and Frederick Vromm take the principal parts.

"Until They Get Me," the story with Canadian northwest mounted police taking an important part, required Director Frank Borzage and company to spend all of this week at the big Hartville ranch. In the cast for this story are Jack Curtis, Pauline Start, Joe King and Curly Baldwin.

Final scenes were made for "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," by Director Cliff Smith at Hartville this week, when a cowboy town was built in short order. The place was actually completed overnight, and the population taken to the town by carry-all automobiles from Los Angeles. It occupied a prominent place in one of the valleys of Hartville. Roy Stewart is featured in this Western play which is virile in western atmosphere.

Nov. 17, 1917 NEWS MORE NEWS

Not so fair.

E. Mason Hopper was off duty this week.

Charley Murray has not been in a benefit for a week.

Harry Williams' next song will be "Moving of the Movies."

"Wait Till the Clouds Roll By" was a popular song this week.

Prosperity Note: Jack Conway, Triangle director, is flitting about in a new auto.

Arthur Shirley is enjoying all the comforts of being a father, including walking the floor all night.

Paddy Maguire has established the reputation of standing still in the movies and moving in the stills.

Marguerita Fischer and her director, Lloyd Ingraham, are anticipating a pleasant winter at Santa Barbara. They both have bought bungalows.

Edith Storey has a new dog, i. e., she had a white one when she left New York, but it didn't look like that when its trip across the desert was completed.

Not one of the Signal players knows what happened to "The Lost Express," or how it will return again, according to Jimmie Tynan, of J. P. McGowan's publicity department.

Blanche Payson, the 200-pound policewoman, followed Bill Beaudine's instructions of throwing her weight against a door when entering a set, and the whole durn thing collapsed.

And now we learn Anita King grub-staked a miner on that famous across-the-country dash by auto and has received the astonishing news that she is half owner of a copper mine.

Mabel Condon has deserted her mountain home in Rattlesnake Gulch and is enjoying a three weeks' trip to the fair Broadway of America, this being the first time back in twenty-seven months.

B. A. Rolfe is not used to punching the clock and consequently missed several appointments the other morning when the gateman told callers he was not in. Now B. A. is not so strong for the efficiency method.

Francelia Billington is now to burn up the road between our fair town and Santa Barbara with a new Oldsmobile Sedan. She claims to know all about every one of the many cylinders that make up its beautiful engine.

Mac-na-mara translated into good old Irish means "Son-of-the-Sea," all of which explains the actions and habits of one Walter Macnamara, who adds brightness to the titles and scenarios of Triangle Comedies.

A samovar was the cause of much trouble at the Metro studio, but the pesky thing is working now, for C. W. Thomas, studio manager, came to the rescue of the technical department and taught them how it is used in Russia.

Another cruel joke flitted into HOOKUM sanctum this week in the form of one of those endless chain letters—write to four of your friends—send twenty-five cents to the chairman of the committee—perpetrated by John B. Ritchey.

Tom Gibson and Karl Coolidge are the Universal serial hounds, and at present are engaged in writing "The Bull's Eye" and "The Mystery Ship." Gibson wrote comedies for thirty-two weeks, and has been turned loose on serials by way of diversion.

Just when we begin to learn to love Aaron Bernd Bill Fox's New York office wires him to come back to the wild and wicked bright way. Aaron left our midst on Saturday. Stuart Atcheson will manipulate the ivories of the Fox Underwood in a publicity way.

With the departure of Charles Chaplin and company from the studio leased by Metro in Hollywood it was necessary to remove Chaplin's mascot, a goat, to new quarters. Danny Hogan, a former pug, induced Billy to leave the lot, but Hogan kept about twenty feet in front of him all the time.

Appreciating the attractiveness of Motion Picture News, the Thomas H. Ince publicity department has adopted the Persian orange as the official color for envelopes containing news matter which is sent to newspapers and magazines throughout the world. We thank you, Bert Lennen, for the compliment.

Roscoe Arbuckle, in telling how he broke into the public's eye, now admits he first served as guard for players in the early "vodeville" days, his duty being to stop stale fruit that came toward the stage. He became so proficient that he is now the heavyweight champion custard pie stopper and heaver of the screen.

Charles Arthur Kenyon, the author, writing for the well known "Motion Picture News Studio Directory," advises that his height is dignified, his weight under control, complexion good, hair variable and eyes ravishing. Referring to his hobbies, he says he hates to pay debts, and is fond of all trains leaving Los Angeles and thinks they should be encouraged.

The Lasky zoo is now said to contain seven members. One plays a cornet, another a flute, and in the cage next door is the man who beats the drums. On the opposite tier, a violinist, 'cello player, accordion pumper and a saxaphone wheezer keep all players in an unhealthy mental condition. It's a great life for Louis Gottchalk, who is writing incidental music for Lasky productions.

C. R. Seelye says Los Angeles is about the slowest town in a business way, but for speed socially they was no beaten it. It has been said there are some steppers in the village.

Bill Hart has left the narrow trail, and is now roaming about the desert as a miner. You can't tell what Bill will do next, as was shown recently when he gave "Fritz" the Pinto pony a bill of sale to himself.

C. B. de Mille took an assignment from the Los Angeles Examiner to write up Billy Sunday, and termed the revivalist "the great director of the world's greatest drama." Some people just talk shop all the time.

A rawhide Idaho miner has proposed to a Keystone lassie because he saw her fight in a picture and knows she could use the rolling pin to aid him in his daily toils. The proposal is still under consideration, for the comedienne vows it's as hard work to swing pies as picks.

Guy Price, who hammers out the photoplay and dramatic sections of our esteemed contemporary, Los Angeles Evening Herald, after three years in the great Bear state, has found an outing necessary, and gone back to Indiana on the banks of the Wabash. Guy took Charley Pike's Salt Lake Special out of town, and so a safe and sane journey was predicted by his friends.

Up to the minute of going to press, Charley Fuir or Fuher, or whatever way he spells his name, has not filed criminal libel charges against the publisher of HOOKUM because this publication of wide circulation changed the spelling of his name, to conform with present day conditions, and to lose its Teutonic atmosphere.

A. Carlos is home from New York.

Welcome back, Frank Lloyd. Ditto, Billy Foster.

Five or six film companies are about to blossom forth.

Super Prosperity note: B. A. Rolfe is flitting about in a new auto.

Charlie Chaplin will add something to his walk when he gets back from Honolulu.

E. Mason Hopper is reported to be some nimrod until the time to start early in the morning arrives.

Prosperity Note: Roy Stewart and Director Cliff Smith have given up borse flesh for gasoline critters.

A traveling attraction of trained fleas visited J. "Pep" McGowan's Signal Studio this week and the four dogs of the lot broke up the show.

The foggy days of the past week have caused H. Raymaker, the three cornered director, to invent a new appliance—"The mid-night lens."

Roscoe Arbuckle finds it necessary to purchase two seats for the weekly manly art contest at Jack Doyle's w. k. establishment in Vernon.

Bill Hart is gettin' younger every day on and off the stage. He has cut out his cave-man ways of winning and is wooing in a Romeo style.

Metro Studio Manager C. W. Thomas has become accustomed to the word "unusual" and the phrase "the first time in twenty years," as used by California people with respect to the weather.

Raymond West has adopted a camouflage effect, for he is now wearing a mustache, which causes him much trouble as it insists upon curling upward at the ends.

William H. Clifford is the father of a boy. His celebration has not in any way interfered with the work of the "Shorty" Hamilton Western Comedy Drama Company which bears the father's name.

C. R. Seelye is in our midst. He has been here for seven or eight weeks now and still insists that Pathe is the greatest organization of the fillum world.

HOOKUM readers' attention is called to the need of truth in filling out biography blanks for the fourth edition of Motion Picture News Studio Directory. Be truthful about your age—remember the draft.

Jack Cunningham has moved to Palms from our fair Hollywood. He selected the house there because it had a place laid out for the pitching of horseshoes, the pegs being in place and a good supply of quoits on hand.

Tom Geraghty, since coming to California from Rushville, Indiana, has developed a Luther Burbank habit, for he now has created Idea plants, which grow luxuriantly in the garden in front of the Paralta scenario department.

Directors are warned that tickets for the annual dance at the Alex. Thanksgiving night, will be ten dollars. Joe de Grasse is chairman of the committee on arrangements and everyone is expecting something better than ever.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"When a Man Sees Red"

(Fox Standard Pictures—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ADAPTED from Larry Evans' story which ran in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "The Painted Lady," this Standard picture presenting William Farnum is, if memory does not betray, the strongest picture of the year. Mr. Farnum is supplied with a fighting role, "his greatest fighting role," says the press agent with a show of modesty that is surprising. He might well have said "the greatest fight role" and been on safe ground. For there never has been such a virile part calling upon the actor to put into it every ounce of fighting power he possesses. It is not all physical combat, although there is plenty of this element to satisfy, but the spectacle of a man struggling and fighting against tremendous odds and finally winning out in the cause of virtue.

Mr. Farnum appears as Luther Smith, a happy-go-lucky seaman who returns from a voyage to discover his sister dead from the ravages of a brutal sea captain. Shortly afterwards his mother passes away from the shock and Luther is left without a friend in the world. He vows vengeance and after long and weary wanderings, during which time he sees the world "through the blood red haze of the madman," he at length encounters the despoiler of his home and strangles him to death. The love story in which Luther and "The Painted Lady" figure, is brought in to furnish contrasting interest.

Frank Lloyd, who made the adaptation of Mr. Evans' story and who directed, has done his usual excellent work. The production is abundant in the atmosphere of the sea, the dramatic scenes are staged with fine taste, while the continuity runs smoothly from beginning to end.

There are some stirring fights staged and for an additional thrill there is the realistic wrecking of a yacht. The types are ideal. Mr. Farnum, leading the cast, does fine work. G. Raymond Nye as the brute-captain, fits the part wonderfully well, and Jewel Carmen as "The Painted Lady," makes a most appealing impression. Marc Robbins as the old sailor furnishes the comedy relief.

"When a Man Sees Red" is essentially a man's picture. It doesn't quibble with situations or attempt to present them in anything but their true light. Plain, straightforward, red blooded action, composed so that the utmost amount of drama has been derived from it—it is typical in every instance of the word "gripping"—a claim to which few pictures can even attempt to make.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Luther Smith (William Farnum), first mate on a sailing vessel, returns to his home port to find his sister (Lulu May Bower) dead from the ravages of Sutton (G. Raymond Nye), "the worst captain out of hell." His mother (Cora Drew) shortly dies from grief. With a silent vow to avenge their death, Luther ships as Sutton's mate, unaware of the fact that he is the guilty man. On sea Luther resents Sutton's various brutalities, and after soundly thrashing him leaves the ship when it puts into port. Here he encounters the yachting party of Lewis (A. Burt Wesner), the most prominent member of which is Violet North (Jewel Carmen), known as "The Painted Lady." Luther falls in love with her, but she, realizing she is unworthy of it, sails away with the party after acquainting him with her true character. Sutton's vessel has, in the meantime, put out to sea. Sutton has left Logan (Marc Robbins), a sailor, who knew too much about his affair with Luther's sister behind. Logan again meets Luther and tells him the story. With hate in his heart, Luther hunts for his enemy. The yachting party is wrecked in a storm and Sutton rescues Violet. When she proves a spitfire and stabs him when he attempts to force his attentions on her he takes her ashore and starts to auction her off to the natives. Then Luther appears. He fights with Sutton and finally strangles him. He becomes delirious afterwards and Violet nurses him back to health again. Later the two forgive and forget the past, starting life anew.

"France in Arms"

(Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

PATHE has released a number of interesting war pictures since the beginning of the world conflict, but "France in Arms" is better than any of them. It has all the suspense of a five-reel drama, as many thrills as one of Pathe's own serials and enough interest to spread over many additional thousand feet of film.

The feature opens with a close-up of Marshal Joffre conversing with General Pershing and the various scenes that follow are supposedly illustrations of their conversation. The first reel displays the rigid training undergone by the French recruits and subsequently the manufacture of all ammunitions from small arms to the biggest howitzers is depicted in brief yet immensely interesting flashes. Facts regarding the distance made by every type of gun, the weight of the shells, and the amount used during certain years are interspersed between the scenes, lending added interest.

The huge store houses containing the food supply of the entire French army come in for their share of exposition also. These scenes give a wonderful idea of the manner in which the commercial as well as the man resources are mobilized for the superlative effort made necessary by war.

The most wonderful thing in "France in Arms" shows the destruction of a German aeroplane. The camera man went up with a French aviator and was right on the job when the shot settled the enemy birdman. The doomed machine is seen to hesitate and then drop suddenly, turning clumsily over and over during its descent to the earth. It is a breath-taking episode, the like of which has never been seen before.

The manufacture of aeroplanes is also shown and the various types of machines now in use in the French army are compared with those in vogue at the outbreak of the war. The figures show the great change for more efficient types of machines that has taken place during the last few years.

The soldiers themselves are not neglected. Following the pictures of the training camp, they are shown building railroads, setting up wireless apparatus and telegraph poles, constructing bridges, reconstructing roads and the like. There are a thousand and one things which the soldier of the present must know and "France in Arms" gives a little bit of his every task.

There are a few scenes taken in the front line trenches, and one shot shows the French going over the top, shows them charging across No Man's Land to meet the enemy attack and shows them returning, some on foot and others on stretchers.

In fact there is no department of war that "France in Arms" neglects. It draws an ever varying picture of it—a true picture of it—and sets it right before you. It strikes home with a strike that is needed and welcome.

"The Woman God Forgot"

(Artcraft—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE latest spectacle in which Jesse Lasky presents the brilliant Geraldine Farrar is "The Woman God Forgot," a picture of old Mexico at the time of the Montezumas and the Spanish conquests, prepared by Jeanie Macpherson and produced under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille. Without fear of contradiction it may be termed one of the few crowning spectacular achievements of the screen. Its magnificent scenes representing the ancient city of the Aztecs, peopled with hundreds of barbarously and gorgeously clad men and women, alternate with the intimacies of the story in holding the spectator spellbound. Miss Farrar lends of her best to the role of Tecza, daughter of Montezuma, and her best is truly something superlative. She has risen to heights equal in her new art to those achieved in her original field of endeavor.

Miss Macpherson's scenario provided Mr. De Mille with wonderful opportunities to exercise his art in obtaining spectacular effects, and while these plainly dominate the picture, the personal interest has by no means been neglected. The love story of Tecza and Alvarado furnishes an appealing angle, while the fate of the proud and haughty Montezuma when the Spaniards take possession of his rich city and cast him in chains attracts much of the spectator's sympathy. The happy ending is perhaps the only dramatically weak point in the entire picture. It is somewhat illogical considering the facts and runs contradictory to the title and yet the producers know their public so well by this time that it must have been appended in answer to popular taste.

The settings of "The Woman God Forgot" are stupendous. One in particular, representing the exterior of the Aztec temple, is one of the biggest ever seen in a picture. On this in one of the final scenes the soldiers of Montezuma and the forces of Cortez do battle for possession of the city. There is thrill after thrill in this scene, particularly when some of the participants, struck down by adversaries fall the whole length of its slightly slanting walls.

Wallace Reid is again Miss Farrar's leading man and makes an engaging figure of Alvarado. Raymond Hatton, Hobart Bosworth, Walter Long and Theodore Kosloff appear to striking advantage in roles congenial to their ability. Alvin Wyckoff was in charge of the photography and lighting effects, which are magnificent, and Wilfred Buckland as art director, has done his usual careful and accurate work.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cortez (Hobart Bosworth), a Spanish adventurer, arrives on the coast of Mexico to conquer the native race. He dispatches one of his captains, Alvarado (Wallace Reid), to Montezuma (Raymond Hatton) with a message that he surrender his city to the Spaniards. Montezuma refuses and casts Alvarado in chains. He is rescued by Tecza (Geraldine Farrar), Montezuma's daughter, who falls in love with him. But Guatemoco (Theodore Kosloff), who desires Tecza for himself, discovers Alvarado in her chamber and he is captured again. He promises Montezuma he will marry Tecza anyway provided Alvarado be offered to the gods as a sacrifice. Tecza steals silently out of the city and acquaints Cortez with the facts. She promises to admit him and his armies within the gates, that they may rescue Alvarado, providing they retire as soon as this is accomplished.

In the huge temple Alvarado is about to be sacrificed by Taloc (Walter Long), the high priest, when Cortez and his men enter. They rescue Alvarado, but then, breaking their promise, take Montezuma captive and proceed to sack the city. The natives, under the leadership of Guatemoco, fight back, but are eventually defeated. Tecza is the sole survivor of the royal family, and with bitterness in her heart she departs with a single servant for a distant valley. There Alvarado finds her after the battles are over and their love rises above all prejudices.

"The Natural Law"

(France Films—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS a play "The Natural Law," based on a theme dealing with sex attraction, was presented by A. H. Woods. And Mr. Woods was never known to go half way in anything. The picture version adheres closely to the frankness, to say the least, of its spoken predecessor. As soon as the principals meet, the sex attraction starts in working with a vengeance and only halts for a brief respite when its inevitable mission has been accomplished without the formality of a marriage ceremony. Then enters considerable emotion on the part of the girl, the boy and the doctor who loves the girl very dearly. A little talk of abortion also enters—that is, a little suggestion of it—but a very significant suggestion. But the doctor throws this element out of the story and prepares to marry the girl and shield her with his name in the absence of the boy. The boy returns, however, to prove himself a man after all and the law of sex attraction again asserting itself, youth and youth unite and middle age steps gracefully aside.

"The Natural Law" deals openly with matters of sex and openly with matters related thereto.

Marguerite Courtot presents the heroine of the story in an appealing light. George Larkin is a good type for the hero and Howard Hall, author of the original play, who also furnished the continuity for the picture, makes a quietly sympathetic figure of the middle aged doctor. Charles H. France directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ruth Stanley (Marguerite Courtot), engaged to Dr. Webster (Howard Hall), meets Jack Bowling (George Larkin), an athlete, and the two are immediately attracted to one another. To such a great extent, in fact, that while Webster is absent from the city they are thrown in each other's company daily, and, the better judgment of each going down before the desire of the moment, the inevitable occurs. The doctor returns to find things in a bad mess with Ruth seeking his professional services to prevent the ruin of her name. The doctor refuses and attempts to arrange a marriage between Ruth and Jack on the eve of the latter's departure for Sweden to enter the international games. Ruth refuses to listen to him and Jack is finally kidnapped by his pals and taken captive aboard the ocean liner. On his return he makes to Ruth's home and again pleads with her. The doctor, to test his love, tells him that he has operated upon Ruth. Jack threatens to sue him for violating the oath of his profession. The doctor, satisfied, tells Jack the truth. Ruth, realizing that he really loves her, accepts him, while the older man stands aside.

Mr. France, Jack Ellis, Lila Blow, Gordon Gray and Leah Peck appear in support that generally takes the form of comedy relief.

"Bab's Burglar"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

EVEN more delightful than the first of the Mary Roberts Rinehart stories, "Bab's Burglar," is of the few motion picture productions that will make a nation laugh. And the most striking thing about all of these stories is the fact that there is never the slightest tinge of the improper, for they are pictures that will appeal to the cleverest and the cleanest.

"Bab" is a delightfully innocent, foolish little creature, one of the most lovable characters in recent fiction. She is running over with good humor, and even in her seriousness she is appealing. In Marguerite Clark there is just the right person to portray such roles, and Miss Clark has never done anything better. And even though the role is a light one, she merits the highest credit, for it is a role that could easily be overdone.

Famous Players has picked a splendid cast to support Miss Clark through this series of pictures and inasmuch as the same players appear in each production exhibitors have an excellent chance to popularize the members of the supporting cast as well as the star. Notable work is done in all of these pictures by Leone Morgan, Helen Greene, Frank Losee, William Hickley and Guy Coombs. The direction of J. Searle Dawley is of the highest order and the locations selected are most striking.

Many series pictures have proved losing propositions to the exhibitor, but these should be advertised frankly as "Another Bab picture" and the appeal will be found strong, for everyone who witnesses one of these will want to see the whole lot.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Money is the root of all evil," is Bab's sentiment in telling this story in her diary. Bab (Marguerite Clark) is just home from school and her father puts her on allowance, giving her $1,000, which is to pay for everything for a year. To Bab and her chum Jane (Leone Morgan) this is a fortune and they wonder how Bab is going to be able to spend it all in a year. Bab starts in on a lavish scale, but the real trouble starts when she buys an automobile and proceeds to wreck the country side and to keep busy filling out checks for the damage done. In the course of these adventures with the auto she enlists the aid of Tommy Gray (Richard Barthelnes) and he gives her his frat pin as a sign that they are "practically engaged." Tommy, on a call, smokes one of Bab's father's (Frank Losee) cigars and becomes deathly ill and because the father has told her jokingly that he will poison any suitors that come around she concludes that he has fulfilled the threat. Burglar's break into Tommy's house and Tommy, led by the reward pursues the burglar in Bab's car, only to wreck it. Bab has now used all her bank account and hits upon a plan of carrying people from the station for fifty cents a head to raise funds. It is while driving one passenger that she finds in his pocket the plans of her home, and she is convinced that her patron is the burglar. So she sets herself to watch that night and traps the burglar who proves to be Harry (Guy Coombes), a secret suitor with whom her sister Leila (Helen Green) was going to elope that evening. Poor Bab is heart-broken that she has prevented what she sought the most to accomplish—marrying off her sister—and retired to her room to cry, but father stands by her and the story ends the next day with Bab telling him, "No, she is not too old to be held in laps."

"The Lash of Power"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE LASH OF POWER" is another dream picture wherein the hero, after behaving like a villain in a horrible nightmare, wakes up to mend the vicious ways conjured up by his sleeping mind. The dream he dreams in which he sees himself as master of the financial world until he attempts the impossible task of bucking the combined resources of all the other business men of the street, is sensationally melodramatic to the extreme and possesses the majority of the elements that helped to make the ten, twenty, thirt', of years ago famous wherever performed.

The picture serves to present Carmel Myers as a Bluebird star for the first time. She gives a realistic interpretation of the ambitious society girl during the main portion of the film and in the introduction and conclusion is in striking contrast to this character. But to Kenneth Harlan falls the major burden of the acting. He makes a firm and vigorous figure of the millionaire made by the war, despite the sometimes foolhardy acts he is called upon to do.

J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton wrote "The Lash of Power," and while their story does not bear close inspection, it moves rapidly, is filled with sensational episodes and is well put together from the standpoint of continuity. There are some incidents that fail to register owing to their far-fetched character and yet it is probable that the audience that takes kindly to the melodrama of the old school will accept every turn of this picture in good faith. In this respect it is more of a "class" picture than anything Bluebird has turned out of recent date, but in this respect also it offers unusual possibilities to the exhibitor who caters to the melodramatic loving public.

Harry Solter has given it a satisfactory production, included in which are a brace of spectacular explosion scenes that are undeniably realistic.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Rand (Kenneth Harlan) entertains an ambition to duplicate Napoleon's career in the financial world of the United States. His opportunity arrives when Sherwood (Charles Hill Mailes), father of Marion (Carmel Myers), his sweetheart, inherits charge of a large trust company in the city and offers him a minor position in his employ. Shortly afterwards Rand asks Sherwood for the hand of his daughter, but is refused because of his comparative poverty. Rand's opportunity comes when an inventor leaves the formulae of a powerful explosive in his keeping. The next morning Rand reads of the inventor's death. Selling the formulae to a foreign government and, with the proceeds of the sale, buying up industrial stocks, he soon makes millions when the foreign government declares war on its neighbor. Marion has, in the meantime, married Rex Reynolds (T. D. Crittendon) in order to obtain social position. Rand, finding himself ostracized and having lost his love for all finer things in life, proceeds to break all those who have snubbed him through the market. His end comes when an anarchist blows him to atoms with a bomb for having caused the war.

"Persuasive Peggy"

(Mayfair—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

PEGGY HYLAND'S first picture under the Mayfair banner proves to be a light and human domestic comedy-drama told in a number of interesting episodes. It is based on a story by Maraverne Thompson, the point of which is that woman deserves at least an equal share of the responsibilities of the home And so his principal male character is a stolid, conventional farmer, and his principal female character, Peggy, a young lady who resolves to have quite a voice in the running of her household and who by persuasion, subtle and effective persuasion, finally manages to drive home her point.

This theme as developed unfolds a large amount of comedy, none of which, it is fair to the producers and the intelligence of picturegoers to state, will be wasted when it flitters across a public screen. Peggy finds her husband silently indifferent as to her proper place. He thinks it all wrong when she has the living-room repapered and refurnished, but the neighbors soon convince him that her good taste has improved the appearance of his house a hundred per cent. Likewise, does she bring him around to thinking her way as regards a separate bank account. And then later when the harvest is in danger of being ruined by rain she shows her diplomacy by placating the angry farm hands.

It can be easily divined from the above that "Persuasive Peggy" is divided distinctly into episodes, but each one is handled so well, with such a full appreciation of its humorous possibilities that the six reels never tire or let down in interest to any perceptible extent. Miss Hyland's bright and happy personality, her charming appearance and her ability to sense the value of the situations in the story put it fairly and squarely over. The picture should go specially well at matinee houses where women predominate in the audience and before family theatre patrons. There is an intimacy about it, a total lack of the offensive, a mildness that such patronages will appreciate thoroughly.

William Davidson is a very stolid farmer husband of the country gentleman type. Jules Cowls as the head farm hand gets in some excellent comedy whenever given the opportunity, and stands out in a good supporting cast. Charles Brabin made the adaptation and directed. Some of the exterior locations, showing views of Irish country estates, made ideal settings for the story, while the photographic work in every instance is of the best.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

After her marriage to Ed Trowbridge (William Davidson), gentleman farmer, Peggy (Peggy Hyland) sets out in diverse ways to assert herself in his home and before long the astonished Ed discovers himself giving way to her wishes at every turn. He acknowledges her correct in the majority of her moves. Finally he discovers that her many visits to the city have not been to the dentist's, as she has said, but to the studio of a portrait painter (Arthur Houseman). In a rage he denounces her and sadly she returns to the home of her parents (Gertrude Norman and Charles Sutton). Later Ed learns that Peggy was having her portrait painted at the studio as a surprise for him. He asks her forgiveness but it is not until Peggy learns that she is to become a mother that she returns under her husband's roof.

"The Fettered Woman"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE FETTERED WOMAN," adapted from Robert W. Chambers' "Anne's Bridge," and produced by Vitagraph under the direction of Tom Terris, is a light, romantic drama, typical of Chambers' style and presented with appreciation by a capable cast, with Alice Joyce interpreting the principal feminine role. Like most of Chambers' works, "Anne's Bridge," appearing on the screen under the title of "The Unfettered Woman," is more fiction than fact but this only adds to the entertaining possibilities which the author invariably makes possible.

Alice Joyce is placed in an appealing, pathetic role, which she interprets with all the grace and pathos that was meant to emanate from the soul of Angelina Allende. She is at no time called upon to present the stately, dignified woman of the drawing room, but breathes the air of the wide, open country, and her impersonation of the girl in gingham dresses who has been wronged by unscrupulous men from the city, is marked by true, artistic ability. In the early scenes, Miss Joyce is shown as the college girl but only a flash of this phase of Angelina's career is shown. For the greater part of the reelage she is the unsophisticated country girl and although it is undoubtedly the wish of Miss Joyce's admirers that she be seen in more unconventional roles, she will more than gratify their expectations, when seen in "The Unfettered Woman," because of the contrast, and her perfect understanding of the part she is presenting.

Tom Terris has given Chambers' story a good production. The name of the scenarioist is not given, but whoever did the adaptation is deserving a word of praise for the comedy situations which have been worked into the story to advantage, and which bring the desired relief at the right time. The locations have been chosen with an eye for the proper atmosphere and the rural scenes are typical of country life. The scenarioist could have prevented the false impression which is conveyed by reason of the fact that Angelina is alone in her home with one boarder, and could have made possible some good bits of comedy if he had created the character of an old maid or a colored housekeeper to relieve the embarrassing situation in which the audience finds Angelina. Webster Campbell gives a good performance in chief support. Donald McBride is good in the heavy role. Templar Saxe and Lionel Grey justify minor parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Angelina Allende (Alice Joyce) is at college when she receives word that her father, who at one time was the owner of prosperous chemical works in Anne's Bridge, a small country town, was dead. Depressed in mind because he had lost his fortune, he kills himself. Angelina is left only the old home and several hundred acres of land.

Jack Wolver (Donald McBride) and Adolph Bink (Templar Saxe), real estate brokers, induce Angelina to accompany them to the city where they inform her they can dispose of her property at a nice figure. Bink with a woman posing as his wife, arrange a dinner at which Angelina is present. He attacks her and Wolver who sees the outrage, shoots Bink. Angelina is accused of doing the shooting and sent to the House of Refuge for three years. When she is free she returns to the little town of Anne's Bridge where she is shunned by the neighbors. She advertises for boarders and James Deane (Webster Campbell) answers. During his stay he learns to love Angelina and asks her to marry him. She refuses and he learns that she had been accused of a disgraceful affair. He goes to New York, learns the truth and returns to marry Angelina.

"A Night in New Arabia"

(General—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

THIS lacks a great deal of being one of O. Henry's best stories, but there is a whimsical touch to the rather ordinary plot that will afford interesting entertainment. The story carries one along and retains the interest to the end. However, as the picture is produced there has been considerable padding, especially in the close-ups of J. Frank Glendon and the smiling that grows very tiresome.

Those who get the sarcastic vein of O. Henry will be delighted with this production, but those who take it as a mere story will say, "Huh, I knew the plot from the very first reel." But the touch of O. Henry is brought in well in the sub-titles and there shouldn't be any reason why any intelligent person should grasp the fact that it is, as we are told in the foreword, "The story of a man who is driven by a troubled conscience into the ranks of the Haroun al Raschids that infest Bagdad on the Subway." The picture has a whip snap at the end that ought to get a good laugh at the expense of the money kings.

With the exception noted, that the picture has been padded, the direction is good. There is too much of the auto pursuit stuff. There is an acceptable cast and many of the settings are very beautiful.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jacob Spraggins (M. Venton) is driven by a troubled conscience to donations to charities, but these fail to bring him happiness. Finally he decides that his uneasiness was caused by the fact that in his earlier days he swindled one McLeod out of property worth $10,000, and he hires detectives to learn the heirs. They learn that Tom McLeod (J. Frank Glendon) is driving a delivery wagon for a grocery store. But they fail to learn that before this Spraggins's daughter Celia (Patsy De Forest) has fallen in love with Tom and, pretending to be a maid in the household, has encouraged his courtship. But Spraggins is impressed by the youth and hints that the driver may marry his daughter, but Tom refuses the invitation to dine at the house, declaring that he is already engaged to a parlor maid. And then with the $10,000 all is ready for the elopement, but before this is begun Celia confesses her true identity. Annette McCorlle (Hazlan Delaro), a real maid, gives away the elopement plans and the father starts in pursuit, only for the purpose of adding his blessing. A year later Spraggins has a grandchild and determines that the little one shall not be in "want," so raises the price of vinegar three cents a gallon.

"Jerry's Lucky Day"

(Cub-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER.

THIS Cub single reeler is very much akin to all its predecessors in which George Ovey is featured and relies almost entirely upon slapstick to put it over, but, at the same time where Jerry is known, Jerry in this instance will in most likelihood prove acceptable.

The whole theme centres upon Jerry and a tramp, just becoming acquainted, and both being hungry hit upon a novel scheme to fill the inner man. Observing a detective remove a disguise and hide his regalia in a deserted spot in the park, they appropriate the same and decide that one shall visit a good restaurant and dine well, and at a given signal, the other disguised and with a police badge, shall arrest him, and so get away with the meal. Then the order was to be reversed.

Jerry dined first and the scheme worked well, but with the tramp, things did not pan out so well, for when the tramp, having eaten his fill, and given the signal for the arrest, Jerry was busy with his girl, so the tramp gets in bad. But from papers found in the uniform of the officer result in the arrest of a notorious crook and incidentally a reward of $1,000 falls to Jerry, so he saves the tramp anyhow. Release date, Thursday, November 1.

"The Adventures of Carol"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

LITTLE MADGE EVANS, who is perhaps the cleverest child player on the screen today, is the star of this comedy-drama by Julia Burnham. It is very aptly named inasmuch as the story does not possess the unity that might be suggested had the singular been used in the "adventures" of the main title. The episodes are somewhat detached but thanks to the pleasing personality and the marked naturalness of the star as well as her most peculiar support, the interest remains well sustained throughout the five reels. Madge has plenty of opportunities to display her ability and whether she attempts either pathos or comedy the results are equally effective.

The peculiar support referred to is Garibaldi, an organ grinder's monkey, who, above all things displays that dominating trait of the race of the prehensile tail—curiosity. And he too, is allowed full play. His investigation of the most commonplace fixtures of a home, his little tricks and his ease before the camera, will result in rounds and rounds of laughter and his rather tragic death earns him the sympathy that humans always extend to dumb animals in distress in portions perhaps even greater than they profess toward their own fellow men. Garibaldi is the second attraction in "The Adventures of Carol" and it is to Madge's credit that he is not the first.

Miss Burnham's story does not bear too close inspection. It is cut from a familiar cloth, although it must be confessed that its handling prevents the ending from jumping up and introducing itself right at the start. And while its main situation, wherefrom the adventures of Carol spring, is quite obviously artificial, few if any will look for technical defects in such light and pleasing entertainment as the picture offers through the medium of its featured player and her comical assistant.

Good performances are given by every member of the supporting cast while a comedy colored couple appear in a light that is much more pleasing than the ordinary effect produced by such players. Harley Knowles has given the picture a good production, which includes a number of New York scenes.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Carol Montgomery (Madge Evans), because of the constant admonitions of her father (George MacQuarrie) to refrain from telling strangers her name because of the fact that he is commander of one of the United States battleships, and fears of spies, refuses to disclose her identity when she strays from home and loses herself in the city. Beppo (Nicholas Long), an organ grinder, finds her and takes her to the South with him, where she dances to his music while Garibaldi, the monkey, proves an added attraction. Carol and Garibaldi lose Beppo one day and take refuge on the estate of Colonel Fairfax (Jack Drumier). His wife (Kate Lester) has never spoken a word for ten years, owing to the fact that he disowned his daughter, following her elopement with a man he did not favor. Carol soon patches up the aged feud and gains a place in the household. Later, when the Colonel's daughter (Rosina Henley) returns to her old home with her husband, the young couple prove to be Carol's parents, and all ends happily.

Frances Miller as the old colored mammy, and Carl Axzell as a spy complete the well-balanced cast.

"The Clever Mrs. Carfax"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THIS is a picture that will set people talking, for more reasons than one. It is marred at the very start by a "College Reunion" scene which represents college men as "loving" to assume feminine attire, introducing the star as the guest of honor. Dramatic license, however, has inured the public to strange presentations of "College Life."

If the public likes something entirely different, a most unusual combining of opportunity to show off Mr. Eltinge's unusual talents, with really well constructed dramatic climax, it is sure to like this play.

What we ourselves like most about it was that the plot gives Eltinge the man a real chance to do some excellent acting, and uses the feminine disguise more as a comedy lightening of really tense plot, than with any attempt to weave it seriously into the story. Only at the final climax, where "Mrs. Carfax" fells the villain with a well directed masculine fist, does the feminine character get in any heavy work. As the young lover, Mr. Eltinge makes many of our juvenile leading stars appear effeminate beside him, and this is as it should be. It seems to us a very strong point in favor of this play.

There is a very strong suspense when the two villains, and the hero's man-servant are all hiding in his bed-chamber, waiting the final untangling of one of the best worked up moments we have ever witnessed.

Rosina Marstini as the female accomplice, and Jennie Lee as Mrs. Keyes deserve special mention.

We predict that "The Clever Mrs. Carfax" will prove a splendid box-office attraction. Mr. Turnbull's story and Mr. Prisp's direction are very much above average. The star is given a man's part with a "stunt" addition that does not detract or draw attention from the real purpose of any play—to make the audience forget the person of the star in the character he assumes. Mrs. Carfax really does not seem an impossible or unnatural role. This is the great strength of the play.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Temple Trask (Julian Eltinge), a college graduate, meets another college friend after a reunion, in which Trask has revived his college accomplishment of impersonating female characters. Billy Wise, Trask's friend, takes a bet that he will not dare accompany Trask into a public place.

Trask, in disguise, recognizes a crook he knew in former reporting days, who is trying to steal a fortune from the girl whom he has fallen in love with. The lark develops into a serious business, and Trask follows the girl and the villain, winning the former's love in his true character, while trailing the latter in his character of "Mrs. Carfax," adviser to the lovelorn, which he represents in his profession.

The play ends with a powerful climax, in which Adrian Graw (Noah Beery), the villain, and his accomplice, Rena Varsy (Rosita Marstini), are turned over to the police while fighting over the bonds stolen from Helen's (Daisy Robinson) grandmother (Jennie Lee) in "Mrs. Carfax's" room.

"The Flaming Omen"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

WILLIAM WOLBERT, who directed "The Flaming Omen," the late feature from Vitagraph's western studios, was confronted with a difficult script to interpret when this story of Andras de Sagurola, was given to him to transfer to the screen. But this work was no less difficult than that assigned to the cast, for they are called upon to interpret the ways, habits and manner of living of the Incas, a tribe of idolatrous Indians, living in Peru. The burden of this work falls to the lot of Mary Anderson, and because Nature has given her large, blue eyes and a vivacious disposition, she fails to impress as Blanca, the daughter of a native woman who marries an Englishman.

"The Flaming Omen" is episodic in presentment and its plot is carried over a space of twenty or more years. The opening scenes show the natives of Peru, the tribe of Incas, or sun-worshippers. Five years elapse and then twenty more are numbered and a young English nobleman is introduced who is prompted to go to Peru, where he discovers that he has fallen in love with his half-sister.

In the latter reels there is strong, dramatic action registered and the scenes of outdoor life and the mountainous country representing that of Peru, are beauties and add a refreshing touch to a picture that should prove of highly entertaining value because of its unusual theme and its romantic, adventurous side.

The Vitagraph production has a meaning, attractive title, it has strength of plot and is punctuated by swiftly moving action and attractive exteriors—three elements which the exhibitor cannot overlook when he is arranging his bookings. The members of the cast are not always convincing, but considering the fact that they are called upon to enact "something different," it is only fair to assume that any shortcomings registered will be overlooked by the audience that seeks exciting, well-balanced moments rather than strict conformity to the rules of stage dramatics and a director's idea of good types.

Alfred Whitman, who will be recognized as Alfred Vosburgh in previous pictures, gives a good account of Dorian, "The Red Prince." S. Jennings, in the role of Natche, does his bit well. Clara King, is the one member of the cast who typifies the Incas woman. Otto Lederer in a character role, does well.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The story opens with scenes of the native Incas, of Peru, performing their religious rites. They attribute the eclipse of the sun to the presence of the Christian Incas and slay or drive from the settlement all such. Coya (Clara King) is found by Watkins, an English prospector, and is taken to his cabin. Five years later Lord Haviland (Otto Lederer) is visiting his estates in Peru with his daughter who is in ill health. While driving over the mountains they find Coya dead, and crying by her side a baby which Lord Haviland adopts. The child when grown to manhood succeeds to the title and estates of Lord Haviland. Watkins, who has gone to England, marries an English woman. They have a beautiful daughter whom young Lord Haviland loves. Blanca (Mary Anderson) is visiting at the Haviland estate. She is a descendant of the Incas. She loves young Lord Haviland. He sees in a vision, his native land of Peru and decides to return. Watkins and his daughter accompany them. Blanca follows. Natche, an Inca chieftain, loves Blanca and when he sees Lord Haviland in her company, he arouses his fellow Incas and they raid the place where the party is stopping. Watkins is shot, and dying reveals to Lord Haviland that he is his son and the half-brother of the girl he loves. Watkins's daughter is seriously injured by a shot and dies. Young Lord Haviland then directs his attentions to Blanca, a girl of his own kind.

"The Kill-Joy"

(Essanay-Perfection Pictures—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE KILL-JOY," an Essanay number written by Charles Mortimer Peck and featuring Little Mary McAllister may be set in the same class as her previous effort, so charmingly yet so simply and sometimes tiringly set forth in her previous release, "Young Mother Hubbard." Like it "The Kill-Joy" is essentially a matinee picture, for the kiddies and for the women and for those who desire a change from the customary actionful picture of the day. There is a certain amount of appeal and a certain amount of sure comedy throughout the five reels, but Mr. Peck's story never deserved a five-reel setting. It is clean and nice and pretty—and, in the popular words of the day—and everything, but even these qualities cannot bear the burden of superfluous footage.

Little Mary arrives at the Western town of Contentment, conspicuous only from other Western towns because no members of the feminine sex are allowed within its confines. The inhabitants are a hardened lot as witness their names: The Crab, Shoot 'em Up Bob, Rattlesnake Pete, Sure Shot Mike, the Denver Kid and Death Valley Joe, but Little Mary is undaunted and before the five reels have passed she has converted everyone from a pessimistic, drunkard, sentimental, woman hater, into everything opposite.

Moral effect: Excellent.

As a whole: Pleasing.

But rather slow moving and quite obvious in a good many places. The star does her usual highly sincere and pleasing work, while the elderly male support performs to good advantage.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Shoot 'em Up Bob (James Fulton), a stage driver, comes upon Billie (Little Mary McAlister) who has been journeying West with her father. He has gone for water and has not returned. Bob discovers that a fall has resulted in his death. He takes her back to the town of Contentment where no women are allowed to enter, and after trying to hide her is finally forced to admit that he has violated the rule of the place. The rest of the boys excuse him, on the grounds that Billie is not a woman yet and from the first day of her stay in the place she begins to make inroads to the heart of every rough in the settlement. And when the story closes they are all so fond of her that she is practically boss of the place.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Eighteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE pursuit of the violet diamond unfolds a number of new adventures for both parties in this episode, entitled "The Subterfuge." Pearl, escaping from her pursuers in the slums, enters a Chinese shop and when she hears Carslake approaching drops the damond in one of four bottles of perfume. The arrival of the police soon afterwards prevents her from regaining it again.

The rest of the two reels are taken up with the visits made by Pearl and Tom and Carslake and his henchmen to the homes of the purchasers of the four bottles of perfume. Carslake, reaching the fourth house first discovers it at last. Pearl enters and holds the villain up, but just as she is about to snatch the diamond from his hand, one of his men proceeds to hold her up.

"John Ermine of the Yellowstone"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FRANCIS FORD returns to the screen in this Indian picture adapted from a story by Frederic Remington and Louis Evan Shipman. With its Indian raids, its stockade and its blue-coated soldiers who served to pave the way for the civilization of the West a generation ago, it is oftentimes mindful of the broncho and bison pictures of the past. But this number of the present, does not, it must be confessed, possess the directness and the rapid fire action of its two-reel forerunners. There are certain standards in picture telling as well as story writing that must be observed in order that the completed whole will have the proper effect. The standards are disregarded in "John Ermine," with the result that one is left in a dissatisfied frame of mind.

John Ermine is a white man, who from childhood has been brought up among the Indians. He is finally told that his blood is not the redman's. Then he falls in love with the post commander's daughter who, along with the soldiers, believes he is a half-breed. So he can't have the girl, but proves his love by laying down his life for her. Here we are given the situation of two people loving one another with no barrier between them, but that reared by hearsay, and neither one makes any attempt to break it down. So John Ermine doesn't draw sympathy sufficient to make him a full-blooded hero. A better effect would have been obtained had the authors made him a half-breed in reality.

Maud Grange prepared the scenario, and Mr. Ford himself directed. The picture has a convincing atmosphere, and in other respects is interesting in its action, although the last fight in which John Ermine loses his life is somewhat weakened owing to the other skirmishes scattered through the previous reels. Mr. Ford is given good support, Mae Gaston, Marc Fenton and Duke Worne standing out in a cast full of Indians and soldiers.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Ermine (Francis Ford) has been brought up among the Crow Indians, believing that he is one of the tribe. He is, in reality, a white man. When he meets Katherine (Mae Gaston), daughter of the commander (Mark Fenton) of the army post, he immediately loves her, and one day tells her so. The girl believing him a half-breed, at first takes it as an insult as do her lover (Duke Worne) and her father. Later she comes to the realization that she loves him and begs his forgiveness, but Ermine goes back to his tribe. When the fort is attacked by hostile Indians, the Crows are sent for, and come to the rescue in the nick of time, but John Ermine falls in battle. Burwell Hamrick, William Carroll, Elsie Ford, Joe Flores and Darkcloud, the Indian, are others in the cast.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Tenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE tenth episode of this serial, featuring Mollie King and Creighton Hale is called "The Holdup." One of the seven pearls is in possession of Falenti, the dishonest president of an east side bank. Harry, learning of this and having a little inside information as to the bad condition of the bank's books, evolves a plan. At first, acting in the interests of Grady's gang, he commands Falenti to leave twenty thousand dollars in the safe for them to rob. Later he tells him to take all the money home with him. Harry gets Grady to break into the bank. When they discover no money, the boss ganster only believes Harry to have followed up a false clue.

Harry and Ilma then go to Falenti's home and demand a share of the money for keeping quiet. Falenti gives them a certain amount which they immediately offer him for the pearl. Falenti consents to this and Ilma takes the jewel. While Harry is at the telephone she mysteriously disappears.

"Mary's Merry Mix-Up"

(Strand-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

JAY BELASCO (Jack), as a life guard at the beach, and Billie Rhodes (Mary), as the irrepressible flirt, furnish the fun in this lively single reeler. Father objects to Jack, and on discovering Jack and Mary in a happy tete-a-tete on the beach, he whisks Mary home. But Jack follows, and gaining access to the house in the role of butler he commences to make things hum. The chief part of his butler make-up is a pair of short side whiskers, adorned with which he is engaged by pa. On meeting the son, Jack makes a moustache from the same article, and to greet mother he uses the same adornment for heavy eyebrows, and so start the complications, for never before has a hirsute appendage performed so many different duties.

But then, when matters are straightened out, and father learns that Mary had already married the life guard, they all decide to make the best of a bad job in the hope that it will tend to terminate Mary's promiscuous flirtations.

This is a comedy well worth while, and will prove a winner wherever shown. Release date Tuesday, November 6.

"The Enchanted Kiss"

(General Film—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

Here is a clever little story that ought to delight everyone, for it shows the gentle irony of O. Henry at the best. It is a splendid example of anti-climax, the sort of a picture that everyone will remember. It is an excellent film to show in connection with some powerful love story like "The Price Mark" where the heroine battles against terrific odds to win happiness in the end. It is the story of Sam Tansey (Chet Ryan) timid in love who adores Katie (Frances Parks), the daughter of his landlady, but who is intimidated by her father, Captain Pack (W. L. Rogers). Then the hero drinks a double absinthe for the first time in his life and under its influence he falls asleep and then he rises to great courage. Then follows a series of allegorical settings with Katie being sold for a million dollars to a man who has found the secret of remaining young by eating the flesh of a maiden every year. Sam rescues her and is rewarded by a kiss that brings him happiness. Coming out of his trance he goes home to make his dream in part real, but though Katie is willing, Sam loses his courage and clambers up to his hallroom leaving Katie in withering scorn. The picture is well directed and there is never a dull moment in it.

"A Daughter of Daring"

(Kalem—One Reel Each)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER.

THESE three episodes of "A Daughter of Daring," under the titles of "The Detective's Danger," "The Railroad Smugglers" and "The Deserted Engine," contain all the thrills that have made Helen Gibson so justly famous, yet there are one or two incongruities and improbabilities that will take much explaining away to the initiated.

These things may go on the movie stage, but never, never, never in real railroad life.

But still, taken all in all, they abound in stirring incident, Helen ever on the alert, and the mode of transportation—either by horse, motorcycle or other means—ever at her disposal, she performs some truly wonderful stunts.

"A Daughter of Daring" is a serial which will never fail to attract and hold its audiences spell bound throughout. The release dates for the three now under treatment are November 21, November 28 and December 5.

Following each episode runs a trailer calling attention to the issuance of Liberty Bonds, depicting a woman giving her sons to the army and navy and asking why the more fortunate should not lend their dollars.

"Indiscreet Corrine"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

OLIVE THOMAS with a good story to tell, appears in "Indiscreet Corrine." It is a typical Thomas story and told in a typical Thomas way. There is dancing, the cabaret scene, a romantic adventure, a happy ending, a bit of risque—all punctuated by the fascinating presence and smile and personality of Olive Thomas. If it were not for the fact that H. B. Daniels, the author, has contributed a good "live" script for the consideration of the Triangle scenario forces, Miss Thomas would have been the "whole show." Considering only the cast, she is the "whole show" for it cannot be said that any member of those in support give more than an average performance. And this is not due to the fact that they are not given an opportunity. George Chesebro, in chief support, tries to smile his way through the scenes and with very few exceptions "overdoes" every action.

George Elwood Jenks did the scenario. Jack Dillon directed. Both have done their duty faithfully with an "eye" toward efficiency and entertaining value. Thomas Buckingham directed the destinies of the camera and picked out the brightest spots to do his "shooting." The story has been "made-to-order" for Miss Thomas, and it fits her like a "Fifth avenue frock." The author, has in no instance, created situations that call for "heavy" dramatic work. He has seen to it that Miss Thomas is given opportunities to pose, smile, dance and give vent to her own captivating ways. Miss Thomas is not an actress in the strict sense of the term but she is a clever personality and possesses characteristics far more valuable to the screen drama than those possessed by some of the "stars." Miss Thomas is a star of the class of screen luminaries that numbers its member in a small total. She pleases in light drama, where some fail to register in the "high spots." Her work in this late production is done with appreciation for this element of lightness in the drama and it is safe to assume that her audiences will express all satisfaction and no regrets.

With the exception of George Chesebro, Josie Sedgwick, Joseph Bennett and Annette De Foe, the members of the supporting cast have minor roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Corrine Chilvere (Olive Thomas) is the daughter of wealthy parents. She is dissatisfied with the conventional home life and longs for a "past." She refuses to marry Rocky Van Sandt, her sweetheart, because he is not of a romantic nature. Corrine and her maid Florette (Annette De Foe) decide upon a plan to make a past. They answer an ad in the paper calling for two beautiful young girls with a "past." Corrine is accepted for the position and Pansy Hartley, a girl with a past, is also accepted. They are to meet and obtain a promise of marriage from Nicholas Fenwick, a millionaire. Both meet Fenwick, Corrine as a masked dancer in cabaret and Pansy as a "Countess." Corrine is supposed to be visiting her aunt. Pansy falls in love with Rocky, who in turn loves her. Corrine is captivated by the millionaire and Rocky is only too glad to be released from his engagement to Corrine. He asks Pansy to marry him. Corrine's parents drive her from the house but she is content to go with Fenwick and the two are afterwards forgiven by all concerned.

"Fighting Back"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"FIGHTING BACK," from the Triangle Studios, with William Desmond featured, is an adaptation from Harry Shumate's story by Alvin H. Nietz and produced under the direction of Raymond Wells. William Desmond has been given better starring vehicles than this late one. It is typically Western with moments of strong, convincing action, but the author has kept for his climax information which according to all known laws of logical reasoning, should have been made known in the initial reels. But if he had given this information there would have been a one-reel instead of a five-reel drama, for after knowing that the "Weakling" was once an officer in the army, there is nothing more to tell. The author presumes on the weaknesses in human nature. If an audience can overlook the inconsistencies in the plot, and if they go to the theatre to see William Desmond and not a good, reasonable true-to-life story enacted on the screen, this late feature from the Triangle Studios will please. There is some good Western "stuff" contained, particularly the scenes at the rodeo or cowboys' field day. Stunts with the lariat, bucking bronchos and trick riding are very much in evidence. If your patrons like Western "stuff" for its appeal regardless of story, they will like "Fighting Back."

William Desmond has a difficult character role to interpret but he meets every demand. He is, however, handicapped by a poorly written story and one that has very little foundation after the run of the first reel. Claire McDowell, known to the lovers of the screen drama when the one-reelers were in vogue, is seen in the leading feminine role. She is not the type some of us would expect to be casted for such a role as she interprets here. Jack Richardson has his usual "heavy" part to present and he rgisters with "punch" and "villainy." Josie Sedgwick, in a minor role, gives a good performance. Others in a good supporting cast are Curley Baldwin, Pete Morrison, William Ellingford, Thomas H. Guise and Thornton Edwards.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"The Weakling" (William Desmond) is found on the plains, exhausted, by a band of cowboys. He is taken to the ranch and given work. He refuses to mix with the others and refuses to give information concerning his past. On pay day the boys go to the nearest town for a good time. "The Weakling" is induced to go along. At the dance hall "The Weakling" meets "The Fury" (Claire McDowell) and a mutual liking takes root in both souls. Later at the rodeo meet, "The Weakling" and "The Fury" meet again. "The Fury" is accompanied by China Mex, the boss of the dance hall. China Mex decides to take a chance at riding a broncho which had defied the prowess of the cowboys. He is thrown and ridiculed. "The Weakling" by this time had shaken off the mask of cowardice and asks permission to try the steed. He succeeds in riding the broncho and China Mex infuriated because "The Weakling" has "shown" him "up" in the presence of his sweetheart, strikes "The Weakling." Later when the crowd returns to the dance hall, "The Weakling" gets his revenge, "cleans" out the place and takes "The Fury" away with him. They cross the border and "The Weakling" confesses that he is in disgrace, having been accused of stealing certain papers while an officer in the army. He resolves to return to the post and is surprised when he learns that he has been cleared of all wrong, that the papers had been recovered.

"Peggy Leads the Way"

(Mutual—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

Mary Miles Minter, little enchantress of the screen, in "Peggy Leads the Way," plays the role of a girl just back from finishing school who takes hold of her dad's rundown grocery store in a backwoods town and puts it on a paying basis and incidentally teaches some idle rich a necessary lesson in manners.

Mary's bright smile and curls are usually enough in themselves to make a bad picture good, and while the story and acting in "Peggy Leads the Way" is good to start with, she enhances its charm with her excellent work and fascinating personality.

The scene in which she gets the upper hand in her fight with Roland Gardiner, the wealthy landgrabber, who is oppressing the people, and forces him to pay a thousand dollars for a ham, fifty dollars for half a pound of cheese, and a dollar a piece for crackers will make audiences chuckle. Andrew Arbuckle, who plays the part of her father, the unsuccessful storekeeper, does very excellent work and holds one's sympathy from the start.

The mountain setting furnishes an excellent background for the picture, and photography and direction are all that could be asked. It's a picture, in fact, that any audience with an appreciation of good, clean comedy will like, and over which the particular Mary Miles fans will clap their hands lustily.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

H. E. Manners (Andrew Arbuckle) is the proprietor of a store in a little mountain hamlet in California. He is a failure in business, but beloved by all who know him. Peggy, his daughter (Mary Miles Minter), after finishing her education at a fashionable seminary in the East returns to find her father, whom she thinks is doing a profitable business, struggling with a grocery store that refuses to show a profit. She throws herself into the balance, and soon has the store on a paying basis.

Roland Gardiner and two guests, a mother and her daughter, for whom the scheming mamma hopes to ensnare a wealthy husband and preferably Gardiner's son, are camping on an estate nearby which Gardiner has recently purchased. The son falls in love with Peggy, but the father disapproves of the match. After a big storm the supplies at the camp are wiped out, and Peggy turns the table on her aristocratic enemy when, in desperation, he tries to buy some groceries. She charges him outrageous prices, and wins him with the spirit and spunk she displays, and he finally withdraws his objections to the marriage.

"Betty and the Buccaneers"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

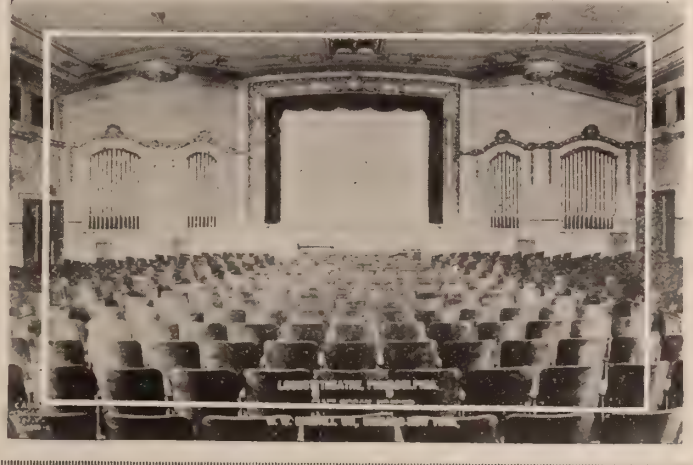
Outside of the admirable acting of Juliette Day in this story of the romantic and adventure craving "Betty" the work of an old seafaring parrot and the touch of pirate atmosphere and treasure hunting his presence inspires, is perhaps most noteworthy. The old polly is a pretty good actor and the nautical phraseology with which his lines bristle keep the audience laughing.

Juliette proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that she is capable of mighty clever acting, and as the little girl whose imagination runs away with her and carries her up to the clouds, she plays her part for all there is in it. The photography of this picture, the beautiful scenic effects, and a number of clever vision scenes are all up to the highest standard attained by the American Film Company, and when you have said that what more is there to say.

Rollin S. Storgeon, who directed the production, did some excellent work in casting the players for this story. Charles Marriott as the studious old professor, Tote de Crow, as Captain Tobias Crook, the old pirate sea captain, and William Kyle, Gordon Russell and Harold Wilson as his three rum-loving tars are all admirably fitted for their parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Betty" (Juliette Day) is the daughter of a retired profeessor, who has a hobby for collecting old coins. She has always lived a prosaic existence until Captain Tobias Crook (Tote de Crow), a piratical mariner, induces her father to accompany and finance a lost treasure hunting voyage. The professor is taken to a desert island slugged by the buccaneers and left for dead. In the meantime Betty, who has been left behind, meets Dick Winthrop, and tells him of the expedition on which her father has embarked. Winthrop (Joe King) has heard that Tobias is in the business of promoting expeditions, in which he maroons his financial backers on desolate islands and starts out to save Betty's father.



The captain returns to the professor's home, informs Betty that her father is dead, and installs himself and the members of his crew in her home. In a drunken brawl that follows Captain Crook and one of his crew are killed by the other two, who then start after Betty. Frightened, she rushes to her room, and locks herself in. The door is broken in and Betty faints. When she awakes instead of finding herself in the hands of the marauders, she is looking up into the smiling faces of Winthrop and her father, who returned just in time to save her.

Newman Outfits Two Dayton Theatres

NEWMAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, with factories located at Cincinnati, Ohio, and 68 West Washington street, Chicago, manufacturers of brass posters and photo frames, easels, railings, grilles and ornamental work, is equipping the Apollo and Columbia theatres of Dayton, Ohio, with the latest style of special hinged posters and photo frames to fit the front corners of the lobby.

The Newman Company were selected to do this work by Mr. Gross of the Columbia theatre and Mr. Chifos of the Apollo because of the fact that they enjoy the reputation of turning out only high grade work.

The New Adams theatre in Detroit is also being equipped by this concern, with special brass photo and poster frames and brass railing work.

The Latest Achievement in Motion Picture Projection

EDISON MAZDA C MOTION PICTURE LAMPS

THEY cut down operating expenses by saving current, and give a light of even intensity which greatly improves the quality of the pictures. Better than the old arc light in every way—offers greater accessibility, less heat, no dust, no carbon ash, no fumes.

Every performance means a money loss to you as long as you continue the old method of projection. Get in touch with our nearest distributor or write for Bulletin, telling about this new Edison MAZDA development.

The War Tax vs. Film and Equipment

THIS is the question which is being asked from one end of the country to the other by theatre owners and managers. It is a question which is naturally of the most vital importance and one which cannot be ignored, though its importance is not as great at the present time as it may be in the future, when these taxes are still further increased.

It is for this future contingency which we must prepare at the present time.

Many of the theatres are raising their admission prices, which should not only take care of the tax but should materially increase the theatre profits.

There is no form of amusement today where so much is given and so little received in return.

Where can a man or woman go and enjoy themselves from an hour to two hours with the small outlay that they can when they attend motion pictures? There is therefore not only justice but right in this increase in admission price.

There are, however, other angles to be carefully considered. The first is that the public has been educated to the present prices and therefore in increasing them the theatre men must be able to offer inducements for patronage which are superior to those offered at the present time.

* * * *

THE STORY ON THE SCREEN is what every man is selling. Therefore, the choice of subjects to be shown can be picked out by each individual theatre owner for his own particular clientele. This is entirely up to him, as there is very little difficulty in fitting the picture to the audience.

The chief trouble to-day is therefore not the subject of the film, but the physical conditions of that film, combined with the mechanical projection of it on the screen. This makes the picture projected a salable commodity which will attract patrons or one which automatically poisons the mind of patrons against pictures as a whole.

* * * *

THERE is absolutely uo use in advocating that the theatre man raise his price, or trying to show him the wisdom in so doing unless he sees to it and absolutely insists that he receive film which is worthy of being shown at this advance in price. To do this, however, he must go up in his rentals and pay the exchanges enough to warrant their improving their inspection service.

In addition to this the theatre man must absolutely insist upon their operators lending their co-operation to the exchanges and examining every film minutely before it is shown on the screen. This is being done at the present time with the greatest success by the members of the Anti-Misframe League, who started this co-operative practice some time ago.

We have on the market today projectors capable to doing 100 per cent efficiency work. These projectors, however, cannot be expected to stand up for an unlimited length of time without proper attention.

* * * *

BY going through the theatres across the country we find that some projection machines have been used as long as six and seven years. We find sprockets on these machines from which the teeth have been in some instances absolutely sheared off. In others we find that this process is only starting, and that the teeth have reached the stage where they are undercut, this being caused by the continual wear of the film against the teeth. This condition tears the film and makes the film absolutely unsatisfactory for use in the next house which may have a machine in perfect condition. This means so many feet of film absolutely ruined for which there is no excuse, with sprockets selling at from $2 to $3 each.

This lack of upkeep in the machines themselves is absolutely due to nothing but gross carelessness on the part of the theatre owner, or of his operator, who often neglects or overlooks calling the attention of the manager to the defects in the machine which is projecting the picture, and which is the only thing sold to the patron. This question of replacement of parts is something which is given altogether too little attention by theatre owners. It is a detail which actually spells success or failure. It is not merely the parts which need replacing, but in many places the entire projector should be junked.

THE projection machine is not the only part of the equipment which is being overlooked or maltreated We find the source of light is another problem which must not be overlooked. Alternating current as against direct current must be considered. The angle at which the picture is being thrown on the screen is another factor which enters into its perfection and the right which a manager has to increase his admission fees.

All of these things are of the utmost importance, and are not realized by the theatre managers who for the past few years have gone along without giving any thought to anything other than that their patrons were getting their money's worth.

This is absolutely true. They were getting their money's worth, but now is the time when you've got to give them more perfect pictures and get more money in return. Therefore, there is no use in fooling ourselves, we have got to get better pictures in better condition and project them with better machinery or we are going to lose the patronage which we enjoy at the present time.

Of course, these things do not apply to a great many of the houses throughout the country, yet the affect enough of them to cause a great falling off in motion picture patronage in general unless they are attended to.

Motion pictures today are popular, and they will continue to be so, even at an advance in admission prices if we can prove to the public that we are giving them a better product on the screen for the advance in the admission's rate.

E. K. GILLETT.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Important Data on Illumination

Which Should Be Preserved for Future Reference

THE subject of illumination, or screen brilliancy, is an important one in motion picture projection, and the experimental work of the last few years has resulted in considerable literature of a valuable nature upon the efficiency of the light sources and screen surfaces used with optical projection apparatus. In all of the more important articles on illumination, the various characteristics of light sources, light distribution, etc. are expressed in standard terms, which, while well understood by illuminating engineers are frequently the cause of much confusion on the part of the lay reader. As it is our intention to publish in the forthcoming issues of the Projection Department some valuable and timely articles on screen illumination, the efficiency of various light-sources, and the optical system of the projector, it is therefore thought advisable to first present a list of definitions of the standard units by which light sources and illumination are measured and expressed in the literature on these subjects. The definitions which follow are the standard definitions of the Illuminating Engineering Society, and we recommend that these be carefully saved by all readers of the Projection Department, as it will greatly facilitate the exact understanding of some subsequent articles if these definitions are available for reference.

The definitions are as follows:

1. LUMINOUS FLUX, F, is radiant power evaluated according to its visibility, i. e., its capacity to produce the sensation of light.

2. The VISIBILITY, $K\lambda$, of radiation, of a particular wave-length, is the ratio of the luminous flux to the radiant power producing it. (The Greek letter λ represents the wave-length, or color, or dominant-hue of the light considered.)

3. The MEAN VALUE OF THE VISIBILITY, K_m, over any range of wave-lengths, or for the whole visible spectrum of any source, is the ratio of the total luminous flux (in lumens) to the total radiant power (in ergs per second, but more commonly in watts).

4. The LUMINOUS INTENSITY, I, of a point source of light is the solid angular density of the luminous flux emitted by the source in the direction considered; or it is the flux per unit solid angle from that source. It is defined by the equation:

$$I = \frac{dF}{d\omega}$$ or, if the intensity is uniform,

$$I = \frac{F}{\omega}$$

where ω is the solid angle.

5. Strictly speaking no point source exists, but any source of dimensions which are negligibly small by comparison with the distance at which it is observed may be treated as a point source.

6. ILLUMINATION, E, on a surface, is the luminous flux-density on that surface or the flux per unit of the intercepting area. It is defined by the equation:

$$E = \frac{dF}{dS}$$

or, when uniform,

$$E = \frac{F}{S}$$

where S is the area of the intercepting surface.

7. CANDLE—the unit of luminous intensity maintained by the national laboratories of France, Great Britain, and the United States. (This unit, which is used also by many other countries, is frequently referred to as the international candle).

8. CANDLEPOWER—luminous intensity expressed in candles.

9. LUMEN—the unit of luminous flux, equal to the flux emitted in a unit solid angle (steradian) by a point source of unit candlepower. (A uniform source of one candle emits 4π lumens; 4π representing the area of the surface of a sphere at the center of which the light source is located).

10. LUX—a unit of illumination equal to one lumen per square meter. The C. G. S. (metric) unit of illumination is one lumen per square centimeter. For this unit Blondel has proposed the name "Phot." One millilumen per square centimeter (milliphot) is a practical derivative of the C. G. S. system. One foot-candle is one lumen per square foot and is equal to 1.0764 milliphots. (The milliphot is recommended for scientific records).

11. EXPOSURE—the product of an illumination by the time. Blondel has proposed the name "phot-second" for the unit of exposure in the C. G. S. system. The microphot second (0.000001 phot-second) is a convenient unit for photographic plate exposure.

12. SPECIFIC LUMINOUS RADIATION, E′, is the luminous flux-density emitted by a surface, or the flux emitted per unit of emissive area. It is expressed in lumens per square centimeter. It is defined by the equation:

$$E' = \pi b_o$$

in the case of the surfaces obeying Lamberts' Cosine Law of emission. (The Lambert cosine law will be explained and demonstrated in a subsequent installment—Ed.)

13. The BRIGHTNESS, b, of an element of a luminous surface from a given position, may be expressed in terms of the luminous intensity per unit area of the surface projected on a plane perpendicular to the line of sight, and including only a surface of dimensions negligibly small in comparison with the distance at which it is observed. It is measured in candles per square centimeter of the projected area, and defined by the equation:

$$b = \frac{dI}{dS\cos\theta}$$

where θ is the angle between the normal to the surface and the line of sight.

14. The NORMAL BRIGHTNESS, b_o, of an element of a surface (sometimes called the specific luminous intensity) is the brightness taken in a direction normal to the surface. (in practice, the brightness b of a luminous surface or element thereof is observed, and not the normal brightness b_o. For surfaces for which the cosine law of emission holds, the quantities b and b_o are equal).

15. BRIGHTNESS may also be expressed in terms of the specific luminous radiation of an ideal surface of perfect diffusing qualities, i. e., one obeying Lambert's cosine law.

6. LAMBERT—the C. G. S. (metric) unit of brightness is the brightness of a perfectly diffusing surface radiating or reflecting one lumen per square centimeter. This is equivalent to the brightness of a perfectly diffusing surface having a coefficient of reflection equal to unity and an illumination of one phot. For most purposes, the millilambert (0.001 lambert) is the preferable practical unit.

A perfectly diffusing surface emitting one lumen per square foot will have a brightness of 1.076 millilamberts.

Brightness expressed in candles per square centimeter may be reduced to LAMBERTS by multiplying by $\pi = 3.14$. (The Greek letter π represents the ratio of the circumference of a circle to the diameter and its numerical value is 3.1416. It is much used in photometric calculations, and its meaning and numerical value should be borne in mind.—Ed.)

Brightness expressed in candles per square inch may be reduced to foot-candle brightness by multiplying by the factor 144π ($144 \times 3.1416 = 452$.

Brightness expressed in candles per square inch may be reduced to LAMBERTS by multiplying by $\pi/6.45 = 0.4868$.

In practice, no surface obeys exactly Lambert's cosine law of emission; hence the brightness of a surface in LAMBERTS is, in general, not numerically equal to its specific luminous radiation in LUMENS per square centimeter, but in this case is defined by the equation:

$$L = \frac{dF}{dS}$$

or, when uniform,

$$L = \frac{F}{S}$$

17. COEFFICIENT OF REFLECTION—the ratio of the total luminous flux reflected by a surface to the total luminous flux incident upon it. It is a simple numeric. The reflection from a surface may be regular (specular), diffuse or mixed. In perfect regular reflection, all of the flux is reflected from the surface at an angle of reflection equal to the angle of incidence. In perfect diffuse reflection the flux is reflected from the surface in all directions in accordance with Lambert's cosine law. In most practical cases there is a superposition of regular and diffuse reflection.

18. The COEFFICIENT OF REGULAR REFLECTION is the ratio of the luminous flux reflected regularly to the total incident flux.

19. The COEFFICIENT OF DIFFUSE REFLECTION is the ratio of the luminous flux reflected diffusely to the total incident flux, and, letting m be the coefficient of reflection (either regular or diffuse), is defined, for any given portion of a surface, by:

$$m = \frac{E'}{E}$$

(To be continued next week.)

Has Cure for Noisy Rectifier

INDIANA (name and town suppressed by request) writes as follows:

"Am sending a description of how to stop a rectifier from humming. It is simple, but it does the work. We have one of the late models (G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier) and I don't know just how to connect up the old models as I haven't worked on one for quite a while and I have almost forgotten the different hook-up on the back of the panel. The one that I am using now has a lever to regulate the amperage; also a double-throw three-pole switch, which is thrown up for direct current and down for alternating. It has been in use for almost two years and has been making quite a good deal of noise, so I fixed it up, although I don't know if it will meet with your approval.

"Here's how I did it. First I rounded up an old rheostat, one that can be regulated; be sure it is not shorted. Then I connected it up as the diagram shows. It works all right and hasn't given me any trouble since. If you can pass it favorably, pass it on to the fellow that has a noisy rectifier."

COMMENT: Provided the rheostat which you have shown in your drawing is properly designed, there is no reason why it would not work in place of the reactance on the G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier. It is quite true that a rheostat can be made less noisy than a reactance. A reactance, however, as is well known, is designed to be an efficient current reducer, whereas, in a rheostat all the current reduced is in the form of heat dissipated in the rheostat. The makers of the Mercury Arc Rectifier, no doubt, use the reactance because it is more efficient, while, in most cases, it will also be found quite noiseless.

In some cases rectifiers become noisy due to rough handling in shipment, causing loose laminations, etc., and it also occurs sometimes that rectifiers became noisy after several years' use, as in the case of the present correspondent. This noise may be eliminated by cutting in a rheostat, as shown in the diagram, but this procedure is by no means to be recommended in preference to the use of the reactance supplied with the rectifier.

Iris Dissolver for Changing Over

"R. F. RANDEGGER, Chicago, Ill., writes:

"I see by the current issue of the NEWS that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers have adopted the suggestion that I offered some time ago in regard to the use of titles to change over on, and I am sure if it is used by the manufacturers it will prove satisfactory in most cases.

"Here is a method of dissolving (changing over is the correct term.—Ed.) that I have been using, which, although a little expensive, gives excellent results, and I am sure that wide-awake exhibitors would not mind the expense.

"I have been using the pair of iris dissolvers taken from a Powers Double Dissolving Stereopticon, and have them fitted to the projecting lenses of my Simplexes, replacing, of course, the short connecting rod between the two irises with a longer one. This pair of iris dissolvers cost $15, but I am sure that they could be made in quantities and sold for considerably less than that."

COMMENT: The method of changing over referred to by the correspondent was mentioned in our account of the New York meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers (NEWS of October 27, page 2965) and consists, briefly, of ending each part of a multiple reel film with a sub-title, and commencing the succeeding reel with the same sub-title. When changing over from one machine to the other these two identical sub-titles are on the screen simultaneously, and provided the titles are accurately framed, when the projectors are threaded, the effect is as near perfect as any method of changing over could ever be.

This is by no means a new scheme as it has been practised by various concerns, and in various isolated theatres for some years past, but since it has been approved as good practice and recommended by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, it is likely that the use of this method will spread considerably, and that representative film producers will shortly prepare their positive prints in a manner which will facilitate the carrying out of this system of changing over.

The correspondent's method of dissolving the pictures with iris diaphragms when changing over from one machine to another will doubtless prove of interest to all readers. The type of iris diaphragms which he uses are well known in the trade, being made by Bausch and Lomb and supplied with the various makes of double dissolving stereopticons.

With regard to their use on motion picture projectors we have the following comments to make: The correspondent states that he has them attached to the lenses (presumably by the three thumb screws with which they are provided) of his projectors. The focusing of a projector lens is a delicate operation, and it does not take much movement of a correctly focused motion picture projecting lens to completely destroy the accuracy of the definition on the screen. It appears, therefore, that the operation of these dissolvers would alter the focus of the projecting lens each time a change-over was made, if they are attached to the lenses as stated by the correspondent.

There is no doubt, however, that the effect produced by a good pair of iris dissolvers is a very pleasing one, and if it is found that they alter the focal adjustment of the projector lenses, they might be mounted at some other place in the optical system of the projector. We have, for instance, seen a pair of iris diaphragms mounted to the lamp-house cones of two projectors and connected by an overhead system of levers which were readily accessible but out of the operator's way. We trust that Mr. Randegger will communicate further information on this subject, and, if possible, supply a sketch of his method of attaching the iris diaphragms to the lenses of his machines.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Nicholas Power Company Notes

The United States Government and the National Y. M. C. A., in their general programme for the entertainment of the new national army have undoubtedly considered motion pictures as the most important and most popular form of amusement, and considering the large number of motion picture projection machines recently installed at the various army cantonments, it would appear that motion pictures have become as much a part of army life as any other form of instruction given to the enlisted men. The Nicholas Power Company have furnished a large number of the projection machines to these camps, and during the past week they report the following new installations of the Cameragraph: Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Fort Caswell, Wilmington, N. C.; Army Y. M. C. A., Fort Myer, Va.; Army Y. M. C. A., Norfolk, Va.; Navy Y. M. C. A., Cape Charles, Va.; Navy Y. M. C. A., Norfolk, Va.; Army Y. M. C. A., Fortress Monroe, Va., and at the Y. M. C. A., Harvard Radio School, Cambridge, Mass.

A Bulk of Powers' Projectors Recently Made Their Way Into Omaha, Neb.

Bird, of Power Forces, a Benedict

Fred J. Bird, of the sales department of the Nicholas Power Company, on Thursday, November 1, was married to Marion Evelyn Cox, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Chas. N. Cox, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Bird has been connected with the Nicholas Power Company for about five years and is very popular with the motion picture exhibitors and accessory men. Miss Cox, who has a rich contralto voice, has been prominent in Brooklyn amateur theatricals. Mr. and Mrs. Bird have left for the South on a two weeks' honeymoon.

A. L. Raven, of the sales forces of the Nicholas Power Company, was an active and enthusiastic volunteer in the Liberty Bond sales army and his efforts resulted in the sales of many thousand dollars of bonds among motion picture people.

Lucas Busy with Simplex

The Lucas Theatre Supply Co., Atlanta, Ga., have been very active lately in the educational field, and as a result of their efforts in this direction have installed Simplex projectors in the following institutions: Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala.; the Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga.; Clemson College, Clemson, S. C.; State Normal School for Girls, Harrisonburg, Va.; Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, La., and the United States Penitentiary.

Some other Simplex installations reported during the week include the new large theatre of J. Fred Zimmerman, The Edgemont, at Chester, Pa.; Harry Crandall's New Knickerbocker Theatre, Washington, D. C., and the 1,200-seat Knickerbocker Theatre at Columbus, Ohio.

Power Forces Active in Omaha

W. W. Lewis, Nicholas Power's representative, is spending a few days at the Omaha, Neb., branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation. "I have been over the territory and I find the middle Western exhibitors are good students of equipment and projection," he said. "More than that, they are all good business men and they realize the value of giviug the public its money's worth. Business is splendid throughout Nebraska, and one of the best winters of the state's history is looked for, the exhibitors tell me."

F. A. Van Husan, manager of the U. T. E. branch in Omaha, says Mr. Lewis made a flying trip through northern Nebraska and sold a number of machines.

E. J. Dean, of York, Neb., has opened a brand new theatre, buying a Minusa screen and two Power machines. The Orpheum, a Martin-Beck house in Lincoln, Neb., has bought a Power 6-Z machine. The Orpheum, a motion picture theatre in South Omaha, Neb., has also installed a new Power 6-B machine.

The Columbia theatre, Omaha, Neb., has installed a Power 6-A machine. The Holdrege, Neb., Auditorium Association has installed a booth and Power machine in the auditorium of that city. The house seats 3,500.

SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS

That Were Never Before Deemed Possible

Perfect Projection — Immovable Arc
Noiseless Operation — Brilliant Illumination

A bright, flickerless, eye-resting light
No changes required in booth equipment

By the adoption of special materials, both in the body of the carbon and the core, the Speer Carbon Company is able to offer to the exhibitor and operator a carbon with intensely bright, white light producing qualities. The illuminating qualities of the SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS bring out the minute details of the film and yet have a most pleasing effect on the eye.

The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days. This entire condition has been changed by the introduction of the SPEER "ALTERNO" NOISELESS CARBONS for alternating current.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elaborate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct.

National MAZDA C Projector Lamp
20 Amperes—28-30 Volts
600 Watts

Bring Your Projection Up to Date

Operators and exhibitors are thoroughly tired of the troubles that come from o l d - f a s h i o n e d projection methods. The welcome accorded the new NATIONAL MAZDA C Projector Lamp has been so prompt that already hundreds of theaters are being equipped with it.

This lamp does away with flickering light. It steadies and brightens the picture. It gives to the screen a brilliant illumination that's absolutely uniform from corner to corner.

This MAZDA lamp is never refocussed. Once adjusted, it requires no further attention. When it finally burns out, a new lamp swings into place without the loss of a moment.

It reduces the hazard of fire. It does not overheat the booth.

The patron likes it because of the better pictures. The operator likes it because the strain of attention is gone—he has " nothing to watch but the film." The exhibitor likes it because it pays for itself in economy of current and afterwards adds to the dividends.

For full information about this new lamp and how your projector may be rebuilt to accommodate it, write your supply house or Nela Specialties Division, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., 106 Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio.

Color Sensitometry

As we have seen in the preceding issues how the speed or sensitiveness of ordinary photographic plates is determined, it will prove interesting to consider the methods by which the color-sensitiveness of ortho- and panchromatic emulsions is investigated, which is a question of interest in view of the extensive experimental work that is constantly being prosecuted in the realm of color photography.

There are, in general, two methods of color sensitometry, e. g., quantitative and qualitative methods, and since we have just concluded, in the previous issue, the description of quantitative sensitometric methods, we will logically follow this up by considering first the quantitative methods of color sensitometry, whereby more or less exact numerical data concerning the spectral sensitiveness of color-sensitive plates and films is secured.

It will immediately appear to all practical readers that if we desire to ascertain the color-sensitiveness of a given film or plate we could secure some information along this line by exposing the plate to the spectrum, for instance the solar spectrum, and plotting the densities of the developed plate against wave-lengths throughout the extent of the spectrum which is recorded by the plate. Before considering this matter any further it should be emphasized, however, that the prismatic spectrum cannot well be employed in such procedure, because, as is well known, the dispersion of the prismatic spectrum is not proportional to the wave-length.

The red of the prismatic spectrum is unduly contracted in area, while the blue is unduly extended. The red of the prismatic spectrum is therefore of greater intensity than would be the case for normal dispersion and the red region of a spectrum exposure with prismatic apparatus will show an apparently exalted degree of red-sensitiveness which the plate in reality does not possess. For this reason it is necessary, in making sensitometric test exposures to the spectrum, to use a normal spectrum, such for instance as the spectrum produced with a diffraction grating.

Sir Wm. Abney was an early worker in the field of color sensitometry. As long ago as 1888 he practised the method of exposing a photographic plate to the spectrum, and also impressing upon the plate a series of varying exposures to white light. The measured opacities at various parts of the spectrum exposure were interpolated between the values of the measured opacities of the white light exposures and the curve thus plotted was representative of equivalent intensities incident. While the results thus secured are in general independent of exposure or time of development they are far from being an accurate representation of chromatic sensitiveness, because no account is taken of the fact that the steepness of gradation of a photographic emulsion varies with differing wave-length of the exposing light. This latter point was briefly touched upon in our previous articles on "Photographic Resolving Power," and various investigators have shown that photographic gradation varies with changing wave-length of the exposing light.

The process of color sensitometry which consists of making exposures to the spectrum and plotting curves of density against wave-length has been brought to a high stage of accuracy, however, by R. James Wallace,[1] whose methods can be briefly summed up as follows: The plates to be tested (for chromatic sensitiveness) are exposed to daylight in a spectrograph specially designed by Mr. Wallace. This instrument is known as the Wallace Diffraction Spectograph and is shown diagramatically in Fig. 1. From Fig. 1, which is a side elevation, it is seen that the collimator section of the instrument is mounted on a hinge and may therefore be inclined to the body of the instrument. In addition to thus permitting the grating spectrum to be centered on the photographic plate, the slit of the spectrograph can be pointed to the Northern sky, which is the illumination Wallace uses in making test exposures. In Fig. 1, A is a spectroscopic slit whose width is adjusted by the graduated drum B. The slit is focussed with respect to the collimator lens D by the focusing pinion C. Having traversed the collimator tube and lens D, the light from slit A falls upon the diffraction grating W and is dispersed into a spectrum which is transmitted by the lens E to the photographic plate at the focal plane M. The plate-holder is mounted between the guides N and N_1 and may be moved past the exposure aperture β, Fig. 1a, by a rack and pinion actuated by the Knob O. A series of spectra can therefore be photographed on one plate.

As the intensity of the daylight used in making the test exposures is found to vary, Wallace makes preliminary exposures on a standard plate of known speed (the same brand being always used), which is his method of determining the intensity of the light on the various occasions when tests of color-sensitiveness are made. When the test-plates are developed their densities are measured with a Brace-Wallace spectrophotometer, and from these measurements the curves of spectral sensitiveness are plotted for the various plates. In the practice of color sensitometry by making exposures to the spectrum and plotting their measured densities against wave-length it is important that the developed densities of various plates should be proportional to their sensitiveness which cannot be guaranteed by merely developing the plates for the same length of time. Instead of developing the various test plates for the same time they must be developed to the same γ (see last week's article), if accurate comparisons are to be secured, and Mr. Wallace develops all his test plates to γ 1.

Color sensitometry is still a very unsettled branch of photographic research, and no particular method of determining the chromatic sensitiveness of plates and films has yet found universal acceptance; but Mr. Wallace's system, as described in the paper cited, is as carefully worked out and as accurate as any method that has been proposed to date.

A simple and practical method of estimating quantitatively the color sensitiveness of an ortho- or panchromatic emulsion is that proposed by Dr. J. M. Eder. In Eder's method two sections of the plate to be tested are exposed to a standard light through a yellow filter and a blue filter respectively, the exposures being made with the graduated sector-wheel used in the Scheiner system of sensitometry. This method is based on the assumption that with normal exposures any sensitiveness to light of longer wave length than 500, in the case of a color-sensitive plate, can be considered as being produced by the action of the dye with which the plate was sensitized. Accordingly the spectrum is divided into two at W. L. 500 by the pair of filters used, because, as is well known, the spectral sensitiveness of an ordinary emulsion terminates at about 500 in the blue-green.

Eder's yellow filter consists of a 4 per cent solution of Potassium Chromate used in a cell of 1 cm. internal thickness, while his blue filter consists of a 2 per cent solution of Copper Sulphate saturated with ammonia, likewise used in a cell of 1 cm. internal section.

The color-sensitiveness of a plate or film is represented in Eder's method by the ratio.

$$\frac{\text{blue sensitiveness}}{\text{yellow sensitiveness}}$$

which, in the case of an ordinary, non-color-sensitive, plate will be numerically stated as about $\frac{110.}{1}$

As Eder makes his tests by the Scheiner method of sensitometry his sensitiveness determinations are, of course, based upon the observation of the "Schwellenwerth" or least deposit visible in the developed test-plates, but the principles of his method of color sensitometry, using yellow and blue filters, may be applied to H. and D. procedure, in which case the inertiæ of the sections of a plate exposed behind the yellow and blue filters would be calculated, instead of observing the threshold exposure. If, therefore, we expose sections of a color-sensitive plate to a standard light behind the H. and D. sector wheel, with yellow and blue screens (as used by Eder) interposed, and determine the inertiæ of the two sections of the developed test-plate, the chromatic sensitiveness of the plate may be expressed by the ratio—which is designated in sensitometric literature by the Greek letter χ.

Mees and Sheppard have experimented with this method of color sensitometry and have given numerical data obtained in this manner for various types of plates ("Investigations on the Theory of the Photographic Process"—pp. 318-322). We recommend the study of their results by those interested in the subjects of orthochromatic and color photography.

This two-color (or two-filter) method of color sensitometry, if one may use the term, is only of value, however, in determining the spectral sensitiveness of so-called orthochromatic or green-and-yellow sensitive plates, because in the case of a red-sensitive or panchromatic emulsion the red-sensitiveness, as determined under the yellow filter, would have far too high a value for obvious reasons. If it is desired to determine the color-sensitiveness of a panchromatic emulsion by Eder's method, it is therefore necessary to use three filters (a red, a green and a blue) through which to make the test-exposures. A little consideration will make it clear that filters having overlaps in their spectral transmissions, such as are commonly used in tricolor photography, would not serve for use in color sensitometry, for in the case of red and green filters with overlapping transmissions the orange and yellow of the spectrum is transmitted by both filters, and the developed results would make it appear that the plate possessed a higher red-sensitiveness than was actually the case.

Obviously, therefore, in the practice of the sensitometry of panchromatic plates by this method, the three filters used must show no overlapping of the red, green and blue spectral regions. The transmissions for these filters may be, according to Mees and Sheppard (loc. cit.); red filter W. L. 700 to W. L. 590; green filter W. L. 590 to W. L. 500; blue filter W. L. 500 to W. L. 400. These workers used for the blue, Eder's blue filter (previously described); for the green, Eder's yellow filter, to absorb blue, combined with a saturated solution of copper acetate, to absorb the red; and for the red a special filter composed of Rose Bengal and Tartrazine. The spectrum transmissions of this last filter are given (loc. cit., p. 324) and the study of this data will enable interested experimenters to construct a similar filter.

There is a very evident source of inaccuracy in the determination of the color-sensitiveness of red sensitive plates by this method of exposing through a set of three filters. Suppose, for instance, a plate is tested which has no red-sensitiveness but a very high color-sensitiveness to the orange of the spectrum. The red filter (transmission to W. L. 590) transmits the orange strongly, and therefore, the developed test-plate would have the deceptive appearance of great red-sensitiveness.

(To be continued next week)

Practical Advice for Cameramen Bound for the Front

PELL MITCHELL, editor of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, has just received an interesting letter from one of his former staff, who writes that he is now "somewhere in France, turning the crank on real warfare."

There is so much practical advice in the letter, which will be of value to motion picture photographers who have volunteered their services, that we take the liberty of copying it.

Mr. Mitchell's correspondent says:

"Thinking it may be of interest to some of my brother crank turners, I am taking the liberty of describing my outfit in detail; also, some of my observations relative to photographic conditions over here in France. To begin with, one's outfit should be complete in every detail before leaving the states, as it is very difficult to secure things you need on short notice. Carry as little baggage as possible, yet include everything you actually need, for one is often obliged to carry his own outfit on ten-mile hikes; therefore, weight and bulk are to be seriously considered.

"My present outfit is fitted with Goerz micrometer mount adjusted to take a 2 inch, 3 inch and 6 inch lens for long distance work, extra magazines for 2,000 feet of film, as one is never sure of proper conditions in which to change film. This is more than enough for a day's work under most conditions. The Gaumont, Pathe, Debrie, Moy and Universal are all good cameras for this work. The tripod should be as light as possible and yet rigid, with panoram and tilting top. All carrying cases should be especially strong with brass bound corners as they receive much hard usage in transit. Film can be ordered direct from the Eastman Kodak Company, in Paris, but a good supply should be taken along, and if properly cared for and kept from dampness, will last for some time. All film should be ordered in separate cans and opened only as needed. Development should follow the exposure at the earliest opportunity to obtain the best results. Light conditions here in France are about the same as in the states at this time of the year, and therefore require the same exposures. Duplicates of such parts as are likely to wear out with constant use should be taken along, not forgetting extra handles for both camera and tripod. A complete set of small tools is very necessary. Also, a small electric dark room lamp, several rolls of tape, a level, 3-in-1 oil, camel's hair brush, focusing magnifier, and whatever other tools one requires in his daily work with the camera.

"So far I have had no trouble with static, but should this bugbear appear, a small piece of cotton soaked with a weak solution of ammonia or glycerine, and placed in the corner of the retort will do the trick. A metal crank, I believe, has been suggested and used with good results for this same purpose. Loading retorts under blankets is only one of the many difficulties encountered in the long list of inconveniences that the war photographer has to overcome. He soon gets used to it, and if he is an old timer, always finds a way out of what at the time seems an unsurmountable difficulty. Owing to the complicated apparatus necessary for the proper developing of cine film it should never be attempted while in the field; but the negative should at once be returned to Paris or the States to be properly finished.

"Still pictures offer much less difficulty, and with a 3 A Kodak Special, fitted with an F 6.3 Zeiss lens in Optimo or Compound shutter, good results may be secured. For the best results, however, I recommend a 5 x 7 Graflex, fitted with the F 4.5 Zeiss, or an equally good and fast lens; also film pack adapter, as this form of carrying twelve exposures is the best I know of. Developing still pictures offers very little difficulty, and with the aid of the tank, a pail of water, pyro developing powders, and acid fixing salts, good negatives can be had even in the field. Should one find it necessary to develop at the end of a day's work with nothing but muddy river water at hand, the following method can be used to advantage. Put one ounce of alum in a barrel of water and allow it to set over night. After draining off, very clear water suitable for mixing developer and hypo is obtained. Film clips, cotton, and metal trays complete one's outfit except the few things necessary to make prints. It might be well to have a tripod and a small amount of flash powder, as one never knows when he might otherwise miss getting a really worth while picture.

"Good aerial pictures can be secured only with the proper outfit, and this I have found in the Eastman aeroplane camera. Owing to the extreme vibration and high speed of the modern war plane it is necessary to use a much faster exposure than you otherwise would as there are two forces to overcome. Taking movies from the aeroplane is in no way as easy as it would seem, as the vibration of the motor produces a decided dizziness in the projected picture. This can be overcome by stopping the engine and volplaning during the time the picture is being made. The shutter speed should be greatly increased, however, and a long focus lens used owing to the great height.

"Regardless of what branch of photography is being attempted one is constantly up against all kinds of difficulties which can be overcome only by good judgment and past experience.

"Nearly all countries now at war have their photographic departments composed of enlisted men, whose duty it is to photograph every phase of actual warfare. All of which proves that photography plays a very important part in this, the greatest war the world has ever known. Over 20 per cent. are killed while at their perilous task, still, the click of the shutter goes on, and the pictorial record of events grows day by day."

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Gilbert and Friedland Going into Business

L. WOLFE GILBERT and Anatol Friedland have resigned from Jos. W. Stern & Co., to go in the music publishing business. Ever since they joined Stern's forces they have turned out hit after hit, and they feel that it is about time that they esablished their own business. With the big personal following they enjoy, as well as their song writing ability, there is no reason why they should not be a success from the outset. At present they are being featured as headliners in all the big time vaudeville houses, where they are top notch favorites.

Pace and Handy "Blues" Specialist

IN the past few people thought that it was possible to open a music publishing house down South and make a success of it. But Pace and Handy, who seem to have a corner on the "Blues" songs have done so. Their "Beale Street Blues" is one of the big hits of the season. It does not seem to make much difference these days where you hang out your shingle if you have the goods. And if you have the goods in any line and keep on the job you will not have to worry about the rent man. The commercial salesman who keeps well supplied with the latest stuff in his line is the man who puts over the big contracts, and the musician who keeps up to date with the latest music receives first call and the high salary when anything worth while is to be given out.

Sherwood Makes Good for McKinley

IT took Mr. Sherwood, professional manager for the McKinley Music Co., a long time to convince his firm that it would be a wise move to establish a professional headquarters in New York. And once he obtained his firm's consent to do so he kept on the job night and day until he built up a following that is bringing the house splendid results. His office is located in the Exchange building, in West Forty-fifth street, and although it is large, it is not any too large to handle the crowd of performers, big and little, who find the McKinley numbers to be great applause getters.

Patriotic Songs Get a Big Boom

THE public does not seem to be able to get enough patriotic songs at the present time, and the publishers who are keen enough to feel the public pulse are reaping a rich harvest. The sentimental and eulogistic numbers pertaining to the flag are not much in evidence, but novelty, humorous, and gang songs are sweeping the country. Fred Vandersloot is fortunate in having a ballad that will hit soldiers, for every soldier, once he leaves home, will be wondering how the old folks are at home, and Vandersloot, knowing of the "punch" "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are at Home" carries for the fighters, has had a patriotic version written for the number, which has been responsible for many additional orders from the syndicates.

Jeff Branen Not Worrying About War Songs

JEFF does not have to worry, not with the way his "Valley Rose" is selling. His daily orders for this number make it look as if it will outstrip "In the Valley of the Moon." Nevertheless, Jeff has not been sleeping relative to patriotism, and has a big seller in "We're Going After You."

Lee Orean Smith Issues Date Book

FOR the benefit of musicians, Lee Orean Smith, Feist's expert arranger, has brought out an excellent date book, which also carries the Feist edition of band and orchestra publications. In the beginning few had faith in it, but the fact that the first edition has already been sold is excellent proof that it is popular with the profession. On several pages is printed the following: "You take no chances when ordering 'Feist' music. If you're not satisfied, back goes your money. That's the 'Feist' way; that's the right way." And the slogan is fast gaining ground.

The little book is not only handy to keep track of engagements, but is valuable as a reference book for old and new music. With every order for two dollars worth of music a book is presented free.

Forster Has New Novelty Number

"OVER THE PHONE" is the latest addition to Forster's catalog, which he feels positive will be as big a hit as "Oh Johnny!" was. However, Forster has not let up on "Missouri Waltz," as this number is selling better than ever. Fred is hoping that Harry McClaskey, the well-known phonograph singer will be able to use it; he hoping, for as yet, McClaskey has not heard it.

A peculiar feature about "Missouri Waltz" is that none of the song experts can tell just why the number is selling the way it is, and what ever led Forster to think that he could turn it into a million-copy hit at thirty cents a copy.

E. M. WICKES.

Feist Has Another War Novelty

IT is about as easy to induce E. E. Bitner, general manager for Leo Feist, to say that any particular new number will be a hit as it is to persuade a woman about thirty to tell you her correct age. So when Mr. Bitner says that "We'll Knock the Heligo-Into Heligo-out of Heligoland" is the nearest thing to a sure-fire hit that he has seen in many moons, you can rest assured that it is far from being an ordinary number. It is the first real number that has been written about the sailors, and another feature about it is that the lyric is by a real jack tar from the navy.

Thousands of songs have been composed about the soldiers, but no one appeared to give any thought to the sailors, until John O'Brien, a newcomer loomed up on the horizon with his nautical lyric. Some time ago a friend of Teddy Morse's sent O'Brien to Morse with some lyrics, which were conventional and did not appeal to Morse.

"Forget about the obvious stuff," Morse said, "and see if you can't dig up a novelty."

When the sailor returned a few weeks later with his new lyric he was welcomed with open arms. This is another proof that when you can deliver the goods you will not have any trouble in finding a good melody writer and a first-class publisher.

The "Heligoland" number has a wonderful swing to it, and is easy to learn. The lyric has plenty of "pep," and makes a great crowd song. It is a wonderful number for comedy photoplays.

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—"It's a Long Way to Berlin." One-Step by Leon Flatow. A popular novelty and song hit which has taken the whole country by storm. "It's a Long Way to Berlin" almost overnight leaped into the very front ranks of popular favorites for National Military Parades, showing every day in the week on every screen in the United States and Canada, this song hit is the most proper accompaniment. Published by Leo Feist, 232 W. 40th street, New York City.

2—"Over There." George M. Cohan's historic war song. President Wilson, Teddy Roosevelt, everybody has spoken of it. Every camp regiment, company, officer and private is singing it and as a dance hit it's the biggest riot. When New York regiments left for France and training camps you heard nothing but "Over There." Be up to date and play this favorite for scenes of military character. Published by Wm. Jerome, Strand theatre building, New York City.

3—"We're Going Over" (somewhere in France. By C. Arthur Tfeiffer. A fine stirring melody, the catchiest chorus you have ever heard and enormously popular, owing to its catchy melody in general. Published by C. Arthur Tfeiffer, Quincy, Ill.

4—"I Wonder How the Old Folks Are at Home?" By F. W. Vandersloot. A genuine musical gem and a treat for both musicians and listeners. For orchestra this song hit is obtainable as a cornet or trombone solo, and also in a waltz arrangement. As a waltz it presents the most successful and best liked number for "dance purposes." As a song it is charming melody which will sound in your ears forever—you can't forget it. Published by Vandersloot Music Publishing Company, Williamport, Pa.

5—"Souvenir Waltz." By Choquette. One of the most charming and beautiful waltzes written by this wonderfully gifted writer.

6—"My Soldier Boy." Smashing patriotic song hit featured in the Rolfe and Maddock production "America First." The song which by virtue of its catchy melody, military swing and snappy "All America" sentiment, stands out clear and strong in the horizon of new patriotic song hits. Carl Fischer edition.

7—"I don't Want to Get Well." By Harry Jentes. A really exquisite number which every music lover and every audience will appreciate. It is an allegro moderato movement with a very melodious chorus, and is very appropriate for love themes and scenes. Published by Leo Feist, Feist building, New York City.

8—"Valley Rose Ballad." By Evans Lloyd. A beautiful andante con espressivo movement considered to be the greatest ballad ever written by an American writer. It is a composition of artistic value from a musical standpoint and still so wonderfully constructed that the listener or player after hearing it once is bound to remember it forever. For pathetic scenes and the like, this composition is unreplaceable. Published by Jeff Branen, 145 W. 45th street, New York City.

9—"Missouri Waltz." By John Valentine Eppel. About this waltz we have nothing to say. Get it for your picture work, it will speak for itself. Published by J. A. Forster, Chicago, Ill.

10—"Homeward Bound." By Geo. Meyer. A typical composition of popular appeal introducing a new surprise in every bar. A fine snappy number with unusual attractive chorus and arrangement which leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. Published by Leo Feist, Feist building, New York City.

11—"Just as Your Mother Was." A beautiful and melodious waltz movement. Published by Harry von Tilzer.

12—"We Can Muster Uncle Sammy Ten Million Men or More." A patriotic and most inspiring melody for patriotic scenes, etc. Published by Frederick H. Green, Muscatine, Iowa.

13—"Slippery Hank." By Losey. A characteristic one-step of exceptional merit which should be in every musician's library. Vandersloot edition.

14—"Love's Melody" (Reverie). By Shannon. A charming slow movement with a most delightful melody—most appropriate for love scenes. Vandesloot edition.

15—"Astralita Serenade." By Mabel A. Whaley. Considered by many competent judges to be a very fine composition which deserves to be owned by any orchestra leader or piano player. Published by the "Red Star Music Company," Red Star, Ark.

16—"All That I Want Is in Ireland." By Lloyd. An exceptional fine "andante con espressivo movement," typical and original in every bar. It is a composition of standard quality. Published by Jeff Branen, 145 W. 45th street, New York City.

17—"The Vampire" (a dramatic theme). By Sol. P. Levy. An original composition most appropriate for the purpose as described in the title. Published by the Cinema Music Company, Columbia theatre building, 47th street and Broadway, New York City.

18—"Elks March." A brand new novelty march. By M. L. Lake. Carl Fischer edition.

19—"The Leo Feist Music House" announces that they have secured from Mr. Andrew Mack, the celebrated Irish tenor, several new and interesting songs of his own composition. Two of these Mr. Mack is singing himself in his new production of "Molly Dear." These are entitled: "It's You, Only You, That I Love," and "It's a Long, Long Way to My Old Home Town." A third song, entitled "America Made a Man," is specially featured by Clifton Crawford in the production of "Her Soldier Boy." All three of these songs will be in constant demand by dancers this season. Orchestrations of the two first-mentioned songs are ready.

20—"Chasing the Chickens." A fox-trot and jazz number, has recently been published by the "Forster Music Company, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill."

21—A selection and several of the most popular extracts from "Maytime" have been published by G. Schirmer, and are now offered to the trade at special reduced prices.

THEATRES WORTH WHILE

Exterior and Interior Views of the New Harlem Strand Theatre, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, between Park and Third Avenues.

New Theatre Opens in Harlem

NEW YORK CITY'S newest theatre to open is the Harlem Strand, on 125th street, between Park and Third avenues. It occupies a plot 78 by 150 feet and has been leased by J. Hirsch, who opened the house two weeks ago.

The new theatre seats 1,500, the chairs being especially designed by the American Seating Company. The floor is so graded as to take care of the line of projection. In the rear part of the house these are given a slight tilt with the back the lower, this throwing the eyes on the screen without any strain to see from any part of the house. The graded floor then passes to the level and then slightly up again, making it possible to see clearly from any part of the house.

Indirect lighting is used and the ventilating and cooling system was especially designed for the house by J. F. Dailey, ventilating engineer for the Typhoon Fan Company. The equipment consists of two giant reversible type multiple blade blowers.

Two motor driven Simplex machines throw the pictures to a Radium Gold Fibre screen.

New $100,000 Theatre in Waterbury

ON Saturday, November 24, the new $100,000 Rialto theatre will open in Waterbury, Conn., and that it is going to be one of the live wire houses of the state is evidenced by the fact that J. Harry Nicholls, the lessee, has already begun to advertise it.

Bearing the design reproduced here, which will be used in all the advertising, the first issue of the Rialto program has already made its appearance. This announces the opening date and gives a detailed description of the house. The opening bill will be the William Fox Standard picture, "The Honor System."

The Rialto is located on East Main street, in the heart of the theatrical district, and occupies a space 204 feet long by 57 wide. Plans for the building, which is being constructed by the Rialto Theatre Company, were drawn by Brown and Von Berin, of New Haven. The front of the theatre is three stories and all of the fourteen hundred seats are on one floor, every one placed in a direct line so that one may sit in any part of the house and get a direct view of the screen. The seats were manufactured by E. H. Powers.

The building is built of gray brick with black mortar and a stucco center, and marquise 45 feet long. The lobby is 20 by 35 feet and the foyer 18 by 45 feet. In the lobby there are brass frames for photos only, the policy of the management being to have everything in keeping with the artistic character of the house.

The interior of the house is decorated in gold and blue with oil finish, plush tapestries and blue carpets.

Two operators will be employed at Powers projecting machines, which have a throw of 45 feet to a Mirroroid screen.

The lighting system is Indirect-D. C. and the ventilating system is Typhoon, with twenty ventilators in the roof. In its advance announcements, the management calls special attention to the fact that there will be an entire change of air every three minutes.

Music will be supplied by a massive Hope-Jones organ and especial attention will be paid to the program with each production.

Two girls will be employed in the booth where National Cash Register ticket machines will be used.

Much attention is given in the advance program announcement concerning the class of pictures to be used. There will be three changes a week. The show that opens on Sunday remaining for Monday and Tuesday. The management calls attention to the fact that there will be no "special Sunday shows," but the same bill will be given for the three days. Sundays, Mondays and Tuesday Goldwyn and Artcraft and Fox Standard pictures will be used; on Wednesdays and Thursdays there will be a double bill, including World and Paramount pictures and on Fridays and Saturdays Fox Special pictures will be shown. At matinees there will be 1,150 seats at ten cents and 250 reserved at fifteen. The evening prices will be fifteen and twenty-five cents. Advertising will be practically confined to the newspapers and the house organ.

The theatre will be under the personal direction of J. Harry Nicholls, who promises to make the house one of which all Connecticut will be proud.

Newburyport Theatre Soon to Open

THE new Strand theatre on Green street, Newburyport, Mass., is substantially completed and the date for the dedication and formal opening will soon be announced. The only delay is the failure of 1,000 seats to arrive, they being held up by railroad embargoes.

The theatre is owned by a stock company of enterprising Newburyport people. Lynn capital is largely interested, and the manager, Victor P. Hoyt, has invested liberally The architect is Peron Varney, of Lynn.

The exterior gives a fine impression of what may be expected on entering. Everything has been done to provide comfort to the playgoer and at the same time beauty to the surroundings.

The building is built of brick, with tapestry effect at the front and water struck face brick on the exterior courses elsewhere, making the construction as thoroughly fireproof as possible. The building is 56 by 90 feet, and has an interior height in the clear of 31 feet. The main floor is of concrete, with foundations of concrete strong enough to support a much heavier superstructure. The roof has parapet finish, and the rain water is taken care of by means of a pipe leading to a culvert on Green street.

The front of the theatre is imposing, with the name "Strand" prominently displayed, and with ornamental roof extension and other breaks in the main formation. An ornate marquee with glass top forms an important feature at the main entrance, where there are four double doors opening into a spacious, roomy lobby.

Mahogany paneling with glass poster frames attract the eye on entering. The floor of the lobby is of red tile, laid in black cement, with marble baseboard. A large ticket office with glass top sets in the centre of the lobby. An automatic ticket selling machine is used.

There are 566 chairs on the main floor. At the rear is the foyer rail with wood base and brass top from which is suspended drapery of such a height that air from the main entrance will be broken and not felt disagreeably by those in the rear chairs. Cork linoleum runners have a place on each aisle.

The proscenium arch is 26 feet wide and 18 feet high, and the stage is shut off from the auditorium by an asbestos curtain. This is in old rose color, with drapery effect in gray and gold bearing the initial "S," in the centre. The stage is equipped with necessary curtain for pictures and also beautiful scenery for productions or vaudeville.

In front of the stage is a pit built for the mammoth Loto player organ.

The balcony extends from the Green street side of the auditorium and runs along the east and west sides, forming a sort of a horseshoe. It has a seating capacity of 401 chairs. The incline in the balcony is marked, bringing every seat in full view of the stage.

Stairways to the balcony lead from either side of the lobby, and have a width of five feet. In space over the lobby there has been arranged modern retiring rooms.

Away at the top of the balcony, having a position against the Green street wall of the building, is the asbestos protected booth. There are two motor driven Simplex machines.

The interior of the theatre has been decorated in a soft gray with dainty old rose stenciling that gives a charming effect.

Special attention has been given to ventilation. A large amount of air from the outside is taken in over steam pipes and heated before put into circulation. Great ducts are arranged at either side of the stage and at various parts of the building and mushroom ventilators along the floor are added. The theatre is heated by steam.

The lighting arrangements have been especially arranged. There is a big chandelier with 28 lights suspended from the centre of the auditorium, with clusters further back over and under the balcony and numerous wall lights. Three 200 candle flood lights have a place at the main entrance and a row of five incandescents are arranged under the marquee.

Central Park Theatre Opens in Chicago

SATURDAY evening, October 27, Chicago's picture loving public turned out by the hundreds to attend the opening of the beautiful new Balaban & Katz Central Park theatre on West Twelfth street and Central Park avenue. Never at any time in the motion picture history of Chicago did a house get the ovations from an opening night audience that was accorded this synthesis of all progressiveness in theatre construction.

Barney and Abe Balaban and Sam and Maurice Katz, the quartet who scoured the earth to bring together the equipment and devices that are found under the roof of this playhouse, were swept off their feet by the congratulatory wave that broke over them. Motion picture producers, exchange men, exhibitors and theatre supply representatives from all parts of the country were present to get ideas on house construction from this West Twelfth street model.

From the symphony in lighting effects, which are operated at a switchboard so as to throw diffused green, blue, red or amber light over any part of the house, to the dictaphone system that covers the building, the Central Park is a masterpiece. From operator's booth to orchestra pit the house is said to be unsurpassed by any in the country, not even excepting the Rialto in New York. Every floor has a promenade foyer beautifully furnished, off of which open smoking rooms for the men and parlors for the women. The orchestra of fourteen pieces is made up of the best artists that the management could find and a huge Bartola organ adds its accompaniment to the musical output of the pit.

Beautiful mural paintings, rich decorations, fountains, French windows with mirrors for panes, a wonderful lighting system, a wealth of velvet draperies, perfect picture projection and a policy that calls for the very best pictures available all conspire to make patrons feel that they have in truth paid a visit to a picture temple when they go to the Central Park.

Particular attention has been given the lighting arrangements by the management and the electrical installation and fixtures, furnished by the Amusement Supply Company of Chicago, came in for a large share of praise from the pleased people of the West Twelfth street district.

The Central Park with its seating capacity of 2,600, and built at an estimated cost of $400.000, represents the acme of Chicago's achievement in theatre construction. Nothing has been overlooked, nothing has been sidestepped because of cost, that could be calculated to increase the enjoyment of patrons in watching the screen.

Pictures of the Central Park will appear in next week's issue.

Two Marx and Goodman Houses Ready

NEXT month will see the opening in Chicago of two big Marx and Goodman houses. The Broadway Strand at Paulina and Twelfth street will open within the next week or two. It has a seating capacity of 1,600. The Marshall Square, a still larger house seating 1,800, will open a couple weeks later on the corner of Twenty-second and Marshall boulevard.

Ed Kanouvsky is going to open a house on West Twenty-second street the middle of November which will accommodate 800 people

At the same time the Central Park, the magnificent new Balaban & Katz house, threw open its doors to the general public on the evening of October 27. Ascher Brothers christened a fine house they have just added to their string. It is called the Peerless and is located on the corner of Grand and Oakwood boulevards Ascher Brothers have another large house in course of construction to be known as the Adelphi. It will not be ready, however for some time to come.

To the north of the city still another big prospect is well under way by Lubliner & Trinz, which when completed, will travel under the entitlement of the Devon.

The string of theatres owned and controlled by Herman Schoenstadt & Sons will soon be led by the Atlantic, a new 2,000 seater located at 3934-48 West Twenty-sixth street. The building will cost $215,000 and it is expected it will be ready by Christmas.

Schaefer Brothers expect to open the Crystal theatre, 2701 West North avenue, on November 8. There are 1,900 main floor seats and a symphony orchestra will be a feature.

The Woodland Theatre Company is erecting the Woodland theatre on Sixty-third street and Maryland avenue, under the direction of Mr. Karzas, at an approximate cost of $250,000.

seven reels are presented at an admission price of five and ten cents. Fox, Metro, Pathe and Triangle services are used.

Colonial Theatre, Egg Harbor, N. J.

The theatre is located on the main street of Egg Harbor and only heralds and paper are used for advertising.

Broadway to Get Big Summer Theatre

NEW YORK is to have a new motion picture house during the Summer months in a new building which will be erected by Thomas Healy at Broadway and Ninety-fifth street.

While the building will be used chiefly as a restaurant, there will be a skating rink on the lower floor in Winter and in the Summer it will be used for motion pictures, affording a seating capacity of 4,500. Construction of the building, which will occupy a ground space of 170 by 150 feet, a half block, is about to start.

Designs, Builds and Manages House

COLONIAL THEATRE, Egg Harbor, N. J., has the distinction of having been designed, owned and managed by the same man, Emile Weiler.

It occupies a space 36 by 110 feet and seats 400 people. It is cooled in Summer by fans and exhaust fans and has a steam heating plant which manufactures its own direct current for lighting the house and giving power to the Simplex projection machines.

The theatre is built of stone and stucco. There is a metal ceiling and the interior walls are appropriately decorated. Two small stores occupy the front of the house with the lobby between, with a measurement of 10 by 34 feet.

There is but one show a day, in the evening, and at that time

NEW YORK

The Wardwin Company, owner of the Webster theatre, at 400 East 1 street, Bronx, New York, has purchased through G. A. Pfortner five adioining the theatre on the west side of Webster avenue, 150 feet sout 167th street, and extending through to Brook avenue, as a site for addition to the present playhouse. The seating capacity of the the will be increased to 2,000 by the proposed addition.

New Rochelle is at last to have its much needed new theatre. Edwar Rush, well known New York theatrical man, has purchased the South corner of Huguenot and Division streets, opposite Trinity church, which he intends erecting a theatre building costing from $90.00($100.000. Mr. Rush purchased the property from the Millbrook Com The plot has a frontage of 100 feet in Division street, and 150 fee Huguenot street. His plans call for the theatre entrance on the co with stories facing on both streets. Besides the theatre there will l large auditorium.

OHIO

The New Majestic theatre, formerly The Eagle, at Middletown, ha been thoroughly overhauled and put in first class shape, opened a week

Saturday. One great feature is the glass mirror screen—the only one in the city—upon which pictures are thrown brighter and clearer than ever before.

UTAH

Plans for a new Pantages theatre in Salt Lake probably will be adopted within the next few days, following a conference between Manager Frank R. Newman of the local Pantages theatre and the architect for the Pantages chain of theatres.

Manager Newman declined recently to state what locations for the new theatre are being considered, but it will be a central one and the theatre to be erected thereon one of the handsomest in the West.

The lease on the present theatre property has two years to run. Work on the new structure is to start January 1.

TEXAS

L. M. Moss and A. Levy are putting in a new 450-seat motion picture theatre at Waco.

WASHINGTON

W. T. Moore, proprietor of the Colonial theatre, Tacoma, Wash., will soon begin the construction of his new $100,000 house, to seat 1,600. Mr. Moore is a pioneer Paramounter and Artcrafter, and while the Colonial is classed among the best houses in the city he says he intends to keep pace with the advancement in the art, and provide a suitable place to exhibit the Paramount and Artcraft features.

E. R. Saunders plans the erection of a motion picture theatre at Ilwaco, dimensions of which are to be 30 x 100.

Work on the foundation of the new $35,000 theatre building being erected at the corner of Tower avenue and Centre street, Centralia, which was held up on account of the non-arrival of cement and reinforcing rods, has been resumed and every effort is now being directed to the completion of the building by January 1 next.

A three-year lease on the Hancock Building, corner of Second and Allen streets, in Kelso, has been secured by C. G. Vaughan of Centralia. Mr. Vaughan intends to open a first-class moving picture theatre in the building as soon as the necessary improvements can be completed.

The Little theatre, Seattle's newest motion picture house, located at 1116 Pike street, was thrown open to the public a week ago to capacity business. John Hamrick is the new owner and manager.

That latest ideas of architecture will be embodied in the construction of the projected Rialto theatre building on the corner of Ninth and Market streets, Tacoma, was announced last week by John S. Baker, who is interested with other local capitalists in erecting the structure.

Mr. Baker announced that Roland E. Borhek, the Tacoma architect, who has been commissioned to prepare the plans and specifications, will probably tour the Pacific coast to inspect latest and most modern types of theatre buildings in order to obtain new ideas to incorporate into plans for the Tacoma structure.

Preliminary drafts of the building are being made and actual plans and specifications will be rushed as quickly as possible. The structure, which will occupy a site measuring 90x120 feet, will have a seating capacity of between 1,600 and 1,700 persons.

The Hancock Building, at Kelso, is being remodeled to instal a motion picture theatre. C. G. Vaughan, formerly of Centralia, is behind the project and announces the opening at an early date.

WISCONSIN

C. M. Waterbury recently announced that the new Rex theatre at Chippewa Falls would be opened soon with high class vaudeville and pictures. The program will be announced in a few days. The following department heads have been appointed: Stage manager, Alvin Lego; pipe organist, Max Schuldt; picture operator, Charles Lavinge. During fair week John Wininger and company will put on a repertoire program the entire week. A new concrete sidewalk is being placed around the theatre.

Neenah will have a new vaudeville and motion picture theatre in the spring.

Plans for the new enterprise have been completed and the work of building will start as soon as the Winter ends.

The exact location of the new theatre has not as yet been decided on. It will, however, very probably be constructed on North Commercial street.

A. A. Green, formerly manager of the Neenah theatre, now associated with the Bluebird Motion Pictures Corporation, is to be the manager of the new house. The theatre will specialize in high-class motion pictures and vaudeville and will be especially constructed to be a home for entertainments of this type. Arrangements have already been made to place the house on the direct vaudeville circuit with Appleton and Oshkosh. Although the building of this house has been considered for some time, the plans have but recently been perfected. Local capital is backing the proposition.

H. F. Johnson of Minneapolis recently closed a lease for Miner's Opera House, Necedah, for a period of four years. It is Mr. Johnson's intention to paint and decorate the building and otherwise put it in first class condition. He will operate a motion picture show of high quality, and endeavor to give the people of Necedah and near vicinity an amusement house well worth while.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

The 7 "Wise Men" of Detroit

that the illustration of this advertisement ran in the Sunday Morning Telegraph of October 21st, but do you know that since that date there is one more theatre in Detroit playing the famous Paramount and Artcraft Pictures for a solid week?

NOW, THERE ARE EIGHT WISE MEN IN DETROIT. Seven of the wise theatre managers have theatres located as shown in the illustration and the eighth theatre is located on Monroe Avenue.

These eight theatres are classed as first-run theatres.

The quality of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures enables these theatres to show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures for an entire week. They are not little two-by-twice houses, but photoplay theatres in every sense of the word. For instance—

REGENT THEATRE—Seating capacity, 3,000. Only recently acquired and now under the personal supervision of Chas. Miles. Policy is combination second-run Paramount and Artcraft features and seven vaudeville acts. Admission Prices, fifteen to fifty cents.

THE MADISON THEATRE—Seating capacity, 2,000. Owned by J. H. Kunsky, Inc. Is the newest theatre in town, having opened only last March. Faces Grand Circus Park, and is a beautiful structure, as the photograph will show. Admission prices, fifteen to fifty cents.

WASHINGTON THEATRE—Seating capacity, 1,900. Owned by J. H. Kunsky, Inc. Located on Washington Boulevard, adjoining Statler Hotel. Admission prices, fifteen to fifty cents.

Unanimous in Chicago!

The Chicago Tribune: George Loane Tucker's production of "The Manx-Man," from Hall Caine's story, is a great picture. It contains a big story and a big cast. It is one of THE pictures of the day. Don't fail to see this unusual production released through Goldwyn.

The Chicago Herald: George Loane Tucker has achieved a great success in his production of "The Manx-Man," one of Hall Caine's greatest stories which is now distributed by Goldwyn. Elisabeth Risdon is tremendously likeable and there is a big and powerful supporting cast.

The Chicago Examiner: "The Manx-Man" commands the respectful attention of all critics of the photo-drama. There is heart in the story and tremendous interest. It will be a great success in theatres everywhere.

The Chicago American: George Loane Tucker in producing "The Manx-Man" from Hall Caine's novel, has scored a triumph for Goldwyn, which released this remarkable picture. In Chicago "The Manx-Man" is drawing capacity audiences.

Patriotism Plus Profits!

Phila. North American: "For the Freedom of the World," a big special production released through Goldwyn, has grip, intensity and it contains the best battle scene any patriotic film has ever included in a picture—a big, thrilling production.

 The North American's three stars mean "a picture of special excellence."

Phila. Public Ledger: "For the Freedom of the World," now packing the Victoria Theatre is thrilling and compelling—a patriotic drama done on a big scale, that will enjoy wide popularity.

Phila. Record: No picture of the year has been staged on so tremendous a scale as "For the Freedom of the World." A lesson in genuine patriotism. . . . An unrivalled picture of human valor. . . . Thousands have been turned away during the engagement!

Phila. Press: Here is a picture that makes the spectator feel proud that he is an American —"For the Freedom of the World." Patriotism, romance and thrills crowd the picture from start to finish—all Americans will want to see it.

Phila. Inquirer: "For the Freedom of the World" is the best story of its kind ever shown on the screen. Every scene is alive with the tensity and naturalness of war. It makes one proud of the men who fight for their country.

Dear Sirs:-

I want to take this opportunity of expressing to your company the great satisfaction we have had in handling your wonderful pictures "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras", throughout the Orpheum Circuit of Theaters and other circuits affiliated with us.

We are almost daily receiving expressions of gratification on the success of these pictures, and I want to tell you that without exception, wherever these pictures have appeared, they have proven a big success.

As you know, our intention in booking these pictures was firstly to help your company in the splendid work they are carrying out and to put before our vast public the work being done by the British Army at the Western Front. As a box office attraction it was a secondary consideration, but in this as well as satisfying our patrons, it has been most successful, and we will be very glad to cooperate with you on any future pictures of this kind, that you may elect to bring to this country, for we are sure now that America is in the War, that everyone wants to see what is being done, and I can think of no better way to show them, than through your Official British Pictures.

Very truly yours,

My dear Captain:

The picture "THE RETREAT OF THE GERMANS AT THE BATTLE OF ARRAS", produced by the Official Government Pictures, Inc., has had a very successful run on the Keith Circuit. It is not customary in our houses to play pictures, as our entertainment is exclusively vaudeville, but inasmuch as we have been interested in all movements that will benefit those engaged in the war in any direction, we were only too pleased to play these pictures. I believe, in a way, that you are doing much good in exhibiting the pictures before the thousands of people who witness them every week and bring direct to their attention the vicissitudes of this war, bringing to them a realization of why those who remain at home should help.

I want to thank you for your heartycooperation, and anytime that I can further the interest of anything that has to do with the successful operation of the war, I am at your command.

Very truly yours,

ANOTHER STEP FORWARD

1907—Started my first ten-cent house, the same program all week.

1911—Placed the hundreds of Pacific Coast customers of the General Film Co. on a non-conflict, uniform age, definite schedule basis, with special services for better houses charging ten cents and using longer runs.

1913—Organized the "Progressive" exchanges in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle, establishing through their service and protection to exhibitors the first houses in the United States to run the same program for a full week at ten and twenty cents.

1914—Founded Paramount, applying the year-old "Progressive" policies of service and exhibitor protection on a national scale. Originated and applied the percentage basis of handling films between producer and distributor, which gave the first incentive to quality production and assured a co-operation which created the largest organization yet known in the business.

1917—I am applying the same principles of protection and co-operation but dividing the responsibility and profit between producers and exhibitors to the end of insuring the exhibitor against paying more than any picture is worth to him, and to the further end of tying exhibitor and producer together for the development of the business along its logical, progressive lines.

Instead of exhibitor and producer feeling no responsibility toward each other, which is the tendency at the present time, I expect to bring those elements with which I deal together as units co-related and interdependent upon each other with fair profits for all concerned.

Paralta Plays, Inc.,

New York.

Gentlemen:

With J. Warren Kerrigan in "A MAN'S MAN" as the attraction, we did a phenominal business all last week at CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM, seating over 3000, breaking the house record on Saturday night and being compelled on both Monday and Saturday nights to turn away more people than we could accommodate inside. At the matinees on practically every day the line up for the second show extended a block long or more.

CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM, having had the premier presentation of the world's greatest pictures, such as "THE CLANSMAN" or "THE BIRTH OF A NATION", "RAMONA", "THE EYES OF THE WORLD", etc., we are particularly gratified that "A MAN'S MAN" should have approximated the business on those pictures.

Criticisms in the six daily newspapers of Los Angeles actually graded 100%. Unanimously they complimented everything connected with the picture; especially the fine, clean work of Mr. Kerrigan, Miss Lois Wilson and Miss Ida Lewis; the devotion to details in the settings, the practically faultless direction, superb photography, and the excellence of Mr. Kyne's story as adapted for the picture. At CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM this seven-reel production pleased all who attended. Praise was unstinted. I consider "A MAN'S MAN" exceptionally acceptable to the public.

Paralta Plays, Inc. is to be congratulated on the success of its first release. It is but natural that the success of "A MAN'S MAN" at CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM should create the wish on my part to have the opportunity of giving your next release its premier showing at the same house.

With sincere wishes for your continued success,
I remain

Very truly yours,

One of the really great pictures of the year

"The Planter"

The Motion Picture News says:

This powerful seven reel feature production put out by F.M. Manson and released through Mutual is without doubt one of the really great pictures of the year. For a portrayal of strength and power mixed with an inexplicable element of tenderness there has been nothing in many moons that could hold a candle to the work of Tyrone Power in this picture. The setting is laid in the rubber plantations of Southern Mexico and offers a wealth of tropical scenery that ought to carry a strong appeal to the people of this temperate zone. The cast supporting Mr. Power are to be commended for their work, and photography and direction are excellent.

Reviewed By
Lisle M. Albright.

The EXHIBITORS HERALD says:

"THE PLANTER" is a splendidly produced picture. The story has been handled in an excellent manner, the settings are very well selected, the photography clear, and the work of the cast is fine. Tyrone Power's acting especially is something that theatre patrons do not have an opportunity of seeing every day.

Congratulations on having secured Brenon's "Empty Pockets." In my opinion Brenon ranks with the world's best among Photoplay Producers. From an artistic standpoint and as a box office drawing feature the potency of his name has been amply proven. Backed up by unquestioned strength of the First National Exhibitors Circuit anything but unqualified success for the picture seems out of the question.

T. L. Tally,
of Los Angeles, California.

I cannot tell you how enthusiastic I am over the fact that Herbert Brenon, the Master Director, has joined forces with the First National Exhibitors Circuit. Such an affiliation will give him the opportunity of exhibiting his pictures in the finest Theatre Circuit in the world and will guarantee to these theatres a series of the greatest Motion Pictures Masterpieces ever conceived. This makes an unbeatable combination.

Swanson and Nolan,

Brenon, so well known among manufacturers and exchanges, comment superfluous. Among largest exhibitors regarded as one of America's foremost producers, highly qualified, capable and successful. All his productions big winners.

E. H. Hulsey,
of Dallas, Texas.

Want to congratulate you on lining up with Herbert Brenon. In my opinion he is unquestionably a genius and one of the few great directors in the business. "Empty Pockets" is a great story and, with a man like Brenon handling it, picture should be a sensation. Believe our connection with Brenon is next if not equal in importance to Chaplin deal.

James B. Clark,

Congratulations on latest acquisition to our high standard of screen offerings. The combination of Herbert Brenon's masterful direction and screen artistry together with the effort of Rupert Hughes' magic pen is sure to win absolute approval of the greatest critic and reviewer, the box office.

William Sievers,

Congratulations for closing with America's greatest director Herbert Brenon for his production "Empty Pockets" You could'nt have done better. Had a long talk with Mr. Brenon about two weeks ago and know his future productions will be greater than ever.

Mr. Brenon conferring with Rupert Hughes, author of "Empty Pockets." This is the sort of co-operation that advances the motion picture—that makes Brenon Productions pre-eminent in the film world.

GRACE MILLER WHITE

Picturized by

Mary Murillo and Courteney Ryley Cooper

Directed by Charles Miller

In this, the second in her series of Select Pictures, Norma Talmadge is seen in the role of Tess, the little daughter of the squatter village on the shores of Lake Cayuga, made famous by Grace Miller White in her two popular novels, "Tess of the Storm Country" and "The Secret of the Storm Country."

It is a role which will add new laurels to the heroine of "The Moth," "Poppy," and "Panthea." As Tess, Miss Talmadge gives further proof of her versatile talent as a screen actress of the highest order. Already this picture has broken records wherever it has been shown. "The Secret of the Storm Country" sets a new mark in Miss Talmadge's record of artistic achievement.

Chicago, Nov. 3rd, 1917.

Mr. Fred Aiken, Branch Manager,
Select Pictures Corporation,
220 South State Street, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Aiken:

It is very seldom that I am ever moved sufficiently to voluntarily write a letter to any distributing concern, relative to their productions,—but I wish to say that I started a nine (9) days' run of Constance Talmadge in "Scandal" at the Bijou Dream yesterday morning, and my business was so unusually satisfactory that I was wondering if it was the weather, but today's extraordinary business satisfies me that it is a combination of the star and story, "Scandal," which is responsible for the satisfactory box-office receipts. My patrons are all well pleased.

I have always figured productions from two angles: my personal opinion and box-office receipts. The latter, of course, always having preference over the former, but Constance Talmadge in "Scandal" makes good on both.

Here's hoping that you will be able to offer me many productions in the future of equal merit.

Cordially yours,

Watch Your Step

THE news agencies under a Chicago date-line have spread a story which saw publication in some Western newspapers somewhat to this effect:

"Chicago picture theatres seize war tax as pretext to gouge public. Uncle Sam asks only pennies, but managers boost prices a nickel to get war profits."

The news accounts went into great detail. Where published they did immeasurable harm, of course, an injury in direct ratio to the inaccuracy of the stories.

But the warning to all of us for caution in every step to be taken in meeting the varying war conditions is clear.

The same distorted view of conditions, the same vision of "war profiteering" is to be expected in every situation where an increased price is demanded without the necessary preliminaries of education and explanation.

* * * *

WE have been pounding away at a higher admission price crusade for many months now. But war taxes and war's problems have for most theatres made a necessity of a crusade.

But, in truth, higher admission prices for most theatres were every bit as necessary a month ago as they are now with all the war burdens. Taxes have merely crystallized and made concrete the necessity for increased revenue.

Too many exhibitors had found themselves merely "breaking even," too many were falling behind, for the business of exhibiting to continue healthy.

If higher rentals and all the increased cost of better picture presentation were necessary—then higher admission prices had to come. If higher rentals, necessary or not, were being paid, the public had to, in turn, pay the piper.

An industry so many of whose retailers were fast becoming unpaid agents for the manufacturers could not boast of health.

So higher admission prices had to come. And just as surely, if war taxes have not already caused you to raise your prices, must you plan and prepare for the step during the coming year.

* * * *

TAKE heed now from the lesson of the Chicago men accused of profiteering.

Even if you have not raised your prices, but are charging the admission tax in extra pennies, prepare now for the inevitable possibility of a flat raise within the year. The war has only begun; as it grows, so will its problems and so will the hatred of the war profiteer. Prepare the way now, that when increases do become necessary you will not be running counter to public opinion.

Education is the keynote. The public knows only that which it is told. It knows of the admission tax, but it does not know—unless you tell it—that:

Rental prices and operating costs are increasing by leaps and bounds.

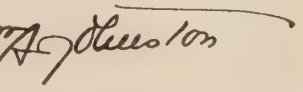
You are paying a seat tax to the Government.

You are paying, through the manufacturers, a reel tax to the Government.

You are paying express taxes—and a hundred and one other taxes.

You must drive these facts home now—even in cases when your patrons are willingly and complacently paying the small admission tax.

* * * *



THE manufacturers have learned their lesson of education in the matter of the fifteen-cent per reel tax. They are feeling the stigma of the "war profiteering" charge. It behooves the exhibitor to begin now on Mr. Public that the long months of war to come will bring no danger of a like fate.

Let the patron know that you are not getting off scot free—that is the dangerous impression that is likely to have been created by the methods of advertising used so far to explain the tax. Drive home this message:

"The admission tax is merely your share, Mr. Patron; Uncle Sam is also collecting from us and in many ways. In addition our pictures cost us 33% more than a year ago, our operating costs have increased likewise. We are doing our bit."

Remember that the American mind welcomes frankness, explanation and education; it balks and harbors suspicion when moves are drastic and unexplained. Lay your cards on the table, now, and—

Watch your step.

Speaking Editorially:

A Fair Question

FROM an editorial in The Idaho Statesman, we quote the following:

"The same Congressmen and Senators who framed the income tax clauses of the War Revenue Bill in such manner as to exempt their own salaries and fees from the Government from tax provisions, also saw fit to exempt chautauquas and lyceum bureaus from the taxes paid by theatres, moving picture houses and other places of amusement.

"Newspapers, theatres and moving picture houses are in the same position relative to the lyceums and chautauquas that salaried men occupy toward the Congressmen or other Federal or State employes. Not only are they heavily taxed, while the lyceums and chautauquas go tax-free, but they are continually called upon by the Government to give free advertising for Liberty Bonds, Red Cross, the food conservation movement and other things connected with the war. Newspaper columns have been crammed with this free publicity, and where is the theatre or moving picture house that has not shown slides and even whole reels of pictures with patriotic appeals, besides giving time to the Four Minute Men for their addresses in favor of Liberty Bonds and food saving?"

"Is this quite fair?" asks The Statesman. "Is it?"

Good—Better—Best

WE hate to talk about ourselves, but—

Are you watching our new Exhibitors' Box Office Reports? So many readers have told us of this department's value that we'd hate to have you by any accident miss a good thing.

Have you noticed the new Table of Contents on the right hand page preceding the editorial page? Right at the opening of the book—and in a glance—it gives you all the news of the week in both editorial and ad pages.

Are you following "The Reader Has His Say" on the opposite page? You'll know the exhibitor viewpoint better if you do. And let us tell you that the exhibitor as a writer is no mollycoddle. It's a page brimful of ginger, pep, snap and dynamite.

How often have you asked "What kind of a fellow is—" You'd never know the big fellows from the average interview, but you can almost shake hands with Richard A. Rowland as seen in William A. Johnston's "imaginary interview" on page 3603 of this issue.

Yes, we hate to talk about ourselves, but—

Have you ever noticed that we are never satisfied to rest on our oars, but just keep plugging away our darndest to give you—along with everything you get elsewhere—more and more of the things you can't get anywhere else?

Passing the Buck Note

WE read with interest: "The Trade Review is in receipt of the following communication from Lee A. Ochs—"

Wonder if Mark Twain ever received communications from Samuel Clemens, or if, perchance, O. Henry ever heard whisperings from Sidney Porter?

Gosh, but this fifteen-cent tax does make an "exhibitor's only friend" feel like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

And those new postage rates have made "communications" so expensive a pastime, too.

Prayer of a Waste Basket

I AM the waste basket. The woes of the Belgian, the lot of the Armenian fall on my ears like chants of glory—for I am the persecuted of the earth, the downtrodden, the oppressed.

My abode is in the film marts. I work for an editor. Enough, you say? But wait, Oh, Allah, and save me—from—

Three page stories of thrilling hold-ups which turn out in the last line to have been staged "for a scene in the forthcoming Bul-Bul release, 'The Last of the Moe Egans.'"

Two page rehashes of jokes Joe Miller inherited credited to the handsome Howard Hollywood in an oddly intelligent moment.

Interviews with Dolly Dotty, whose third cousin once saw a National Guard drill and therefore inspires the press agent to six pages of "timely war stuff."

Letters from a private in the Umpty-Umpt Flutileers who "cannot die in battle until he has received an autographed photo of the fair Bessie Mess to wear next his heart."

Press agents who send the scenario and label it "news"; descriptions of the fabulously valuable diamonds worn by the star in Scene 349; adjectives regarding the historic associations of the antique mahogany rolling pin used in Scene 943—and—Oh, Allah—from tearful six-page interviews with Hugh Muckamuck telling how he loves, protects and cherishes the poor exhibitor.

From these, Oh, Allah, and from seven times seventy plagues like unto them, save me.

The Silver Lining to the Cloud

FOR one effect of the war taxes we should be grateful. If clouds must come let us look for the silvery lining.

The necessity of "taking the sting" out of the admission tax has resulted in beneficial co-operation among exhibitors in many sections that had hitherto remained deaf to appeals for organization.

None but the best of results are reported from every city where exhibitors co-operated in newspaper advertising explaining the war tax to the public. Motives were unquestioned and explanations accepted at their face value—something not always occurring where individual exhibitors bore the brunt of the work.

The Man in the Sticks Wants to Know—

WHY the manufacturer takes a stage star not known forty-five minutes from Broadway, charges him a sky-high rental for the production, and then effectually dampens any prospect of satisfying his audience by staging a story that might do credit to a single reeler.

"The other good productions on a program might make me willing to swallow the distinguished but useless star and pay the rental," he writes, "if the producer would only give me a picture that would merit an 'average' rating.

"But when they even fall down on the story—then—well, as a man in the sticks I want to know why they laugh at me as a business man and call themselves magnates."

Denver Adds War Tax to Price of Admission

AT a recent special meeting of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club in Denver, which was attended by sixty exhibitors and film men, it was decided to add the actual war tax to the price of admission at all theatres in Denver and tributary territory.

THE action taken means that the public will pay an additional cent for a 10 cent admission, 2 cents extra with a 15 cent or a 20 cent admission, and where 25 cents is the price of admission they will contribute 3 cents to the theatre war tax.

ALL legitimate theatres including vaudeville houses will adopt the plan that has been decided upon by the screen exhibitors. It is estimated that the revenue to the government from Curtis street picture houses alone will exceed $100,000 a year. To meet the demand for pennies on the first day when the tax became effective all box-offices were liberally supplied with pennies from the Denver mint. The Strand laid in a supply of 100,000 and the Princess 50,000.

THE war tax has resulted in several theatres in this section gradually increasing their prices for admission. The Rialto in Denver broke the ice on October 25 by a jump from 15 to 20 cents. They have played to capacity houses since that date. It is predicted that other houses will soon follow the action of the Rialto, which has proved conclusively that no loss of patronage will result from raising the admission to a legitimate standard.

San Francisco Film Men Help Liberty Bond Parade

DURING the Liberty Bond parade in San Francisco a number of prominent film men were standing on top of the marquee of the new Jewel theatre, among them being H. D. Pressy, president of the Jewel Amusement Company, which operates the new theatre, and Harry Leonhardt, general western manager of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. In the steam laundry section of the parade a number of pretty girls carried a large American flag, which they held so as to catch coins which were plentifully thrown all along the way to assist in the purchase of bonds.

"We musn't let that pass without doing our bit!" exclaimed Mr. Leonhardt, as, suiting the action to the word, he flashed out a silver coin and threw it into the centre of the flag.

"I'm in on this, too," said Mr. Pressy, as he dug his hand into his pocket, pulled out a coin and threw it. "Here's another dollar!" he shouted to the girls. But as the coin sailed through the air he noted a yellow gleam as the coin whirled its way through the afternoon sunlight and landed squarely in the flag. He had thrown a $20 gold piece.

"Well, it's all for the government," smiled the theatre man, "and, like the pictures we are running, the gold wins."

Leonhardt nearly fell into the flag.

Price Situation in Oregon Is Unsettled

WITH the Evening Telegram of Portland editorially advising theatre people not to raise admission prices above the figure necessary to collect the new war revenue tax, O. P. Hoff, state labor commissioner, making a violent and plausible, if ignorant, attack on the film exhibitors for exacting excess profits from war conditions, and the Orpheum theatre of Portland assuming an "I am holier than thou" attitude and announcing that not for worlds would it take advantage of the public and ask for more than the specific number of pennies required by the war tax, the Oregon price-raising situation is more muddled than ever.

IT is probable that several weeks will pass before the admission schedule is at the figure due for maintenance throughout the season. The public does not fully realize that the proposed five-cent general increase of motion picture admissions is based on a general increase in exhibition expenses, and figures that an increase from 15 to 20 cents means a clear excess profit of 3 cents for the exhibitor. This misunderstanding of the situation is causing many exhibitors to talk of the penny as a power in the box office, and in a number of places the proposed 20-cent ticket is likely to be placed on sale at 17 cents.

THREE Portland down-town first-run houses went to 20 cents before November 1. They were the Liberty, Majestic and Columbia. The Peoples and Star changed prices on the day the law became operative. Unless John A. Jennings suffers a change of heart he will keep the Sunset price at 15 cents, or at least 15 cents for matinees. The Sunset is the other first-run house of Portland, using Vitagraph and Perfection pictures.

Lesser Gives "Bicycling" a Set Back

"BICYCLING" films has been given a set-back at San Francisco, when an exhibitor who had been sub-renting from another theatre owner, was forced to pay rentals to the exchange owning the pictures that been sub-let. The matter was brought to the attention of Sol Lesser, president and general manager of All Star Feature Distributors, when it was learned "The Whip," "Civilization," and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," all owned by this exchange, had been shown in two theatres for two nights each at a one-house rental. Mr. Lesser turned the collection of the bill over to his attorneys, with instruction that prosecution be started if the full amount were not paid immediately. The bill was paid within twenty-four hours.

AN innovation in motion picture exhibition has been introduced to the audiences of the Elite theatre in Merced, California, of which C. H. Douglas is owner. Mr. Douglas is a brother of Leon F. Douglas, inventor of the natural color motion pictures, which have attracted wide attention on the Pacific Coast. Every exhibition has brought crowded houses. Mr. Douglas writes that he finds running full page advertisements in the daily papers and distribution of a monthly program to 500 names on a mailing list bring excellent results in increasing attendance. If the exhibitor is willing to work hard all the time, Mr. Douglas believes, and gives the people a square deal, he cannot lose.

THE necessity of some kind of a circuit of small houses in order to meet high charges on express shipments is urged by W. H. Robinson, manager of the Iris theatre, at Northport, Washington, as the chief need of the exhibitor in the small town. "Unless this is done," Mr. Robinson says, "the little man at the end gets the heavy express bills." Mr. Robinson finds that "Womanhood" has been his best recent feature, because it fully met the claims of the excellent advertising matter published, and satisfied patrons who paid advanced prices. This theatre contains a small balcony and four boxes, with a seating capacity of 400. The lighting system gives red, green and white lights, which can be manipulated to give an atmosphere to the picture being shown.

THE Empress theatre of Hope, Idaho, of which John Larson is owner and manager, is an excellent example of the resources possible for the showman handicapped in the matter of a house. The theatre, which seats 225, was remodeled from a general store, and a change of program three times weekly brings nearly all the town's population of 500. Mr. Larson shows Universal, Pathe and Triangle releases.

West Coast Exhibitors

"QUALITY pictures, well advertised, and courteous treatment to patrons, and perfect projection, are the best business getting stunts I use," says W. B. Martin, owner and manager of the Strand theatre of Modesto, California. His house, which is in a city with a population of 7,000, has a seating capacity of 700, with a change of program four times weekly. Artcraft, Paramount, Goldwyn and Pathe pictures are shown. Mr. Martin urges exhibitors to hammer away for more sensible prices and more modern business tactics by manufacturers and producers. "Get film prices within reason, stop sky-high salaries for stars, cut out advance deposits by all means."

AMATEUR nights, pig and potato stunts, adding and spelling contests, shoe changing, wood sawing, nail driving, pie eating, Sis Hopkins country grocery stores, etc., are the means which George W. Rankin finds profitable in filling his Town Hall theatre at College City, California. More metropolitan methods by advertising and promoting business are unjustified for him, he says, because of the small size of the community.

"WE would appreciate it if you could have the next issue done in Alice blue or a turquoise green, as it is so interesting that it is necessary for us to read same from cover to cover, and as our eyes must be used for divers purposes we will appreciate any attention you may give this matter," writes M. H. Lewis, Artcrafty-like.

"NO improvement could be suggested for the Motion Picture News," writes N. E. Dodd, manager of the Twilight theatre, Haines, Ore. "It looks good to me as it is. The critics' column is most helpful. I don't get a chance to see advance showings, so depend on the critics' judgment in booking programs."

"IT'S a mighty good magazine as it is." C. N. Wonderly, owner of the Rourke theatre, La Junta, Colo.

The Rialto theatre, in association with the San Francisco Examiner, made "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" free to the orphans in the San Francisco public institutions in commemoration of the Liberty Bond observance.

JOHN JOHANSEN, who manages the Yuma and Casino theatres at Yuma, Arizona, was in Los Angeles last week arranging bookings for his two houses.

W. W. WITSON of the Plaza theatre at San Diego is having his theatre redecorated and remodeled throughout, and is having an electric sign, the letters of which are four feet in height and will contain the name of the stars of pictures showing each week, erected for the front of his theatre.

THE Garrick theatre, Los Angeles, has contracted for the Pathe series of pictures starring Mrs. Vernon Castle. The first of the series will be shown the week of November 11, and one each month from then on.

"INTOLERANCE," which is handled by the All Star Feature Distributors in this territory, has just closed a successful three weeks run at the Majestic theatre in Los Angeles. Up to this time the film has played thirteen weeks in Los Angeles to exceptional business.

M. D. "DOC" HOWE of the Temple theatre, Santa Ana, has taken over the Grand Opera House of Santa Ana.

AT a dinner given at the Los Angeles Athletic Club recently, Charles Murray read a postcard from Billy Williams, now a member of the Liberty Army, American Lake, Washington, who is champion amatuer fancy diver, and former cameraman at the Sennett studio. The message stated that cigarettes and smokes were scarce at the cantonment, and the soldiers were being charged higher prices. In five minutes the members assembled donated seventy-one dollars to a cigarette fund and Omars to that amount were forwarded to Williams.

CRANE WILBUR, who has just completed an engagement with the Paul Smith Picture Company at San Rafael when he was starred in "The Finger of Justice," has accepted a four-weeks engagement to appear in stock at Bishop's Playhouse, Oakland, and will be starred in "The Hawk," "Under Cover," "The Great Lover," and "Experience."

H. CALLIS, manager of the Potter theatre in Santa Barbara, has been devoting himself to promoting wrestling bouts between road show nights and openings of the big feature films. The last one was between Bull Montana and a man by the name of Martin. "Bull" will be remembered for his parts in the late Douglas Fairbanks pictures.

Through a friendship existing between "Doug" and Callis, the screen star was induced to journey to Santa Barbara and be present at the match. Needless to say his coming was heralded far and near and a capacity house greeted him.

HOLTZCLAW RAISES PRICES

G. T. HOLTZCLAW'S Circle Theatre, a five-cent Portland house, jumped to ten cents on November 1. Mr. Holtzclaw has been charging ten cents for his Sunsay shows for a number of weeks. His Fourth Street photoplayhouse was one of the leading five-cent theatres of the city.

Several Portland suburban houses have advanced from ten to fifteen cents, including the Union Avenue, W. A. Graeper; Echo, Joe Bradt; Victoria, J. B. Washtok; Alhambra, W. E. Tebbetts.

The Midway of Newport and the Rialto of Medford are among the Oregon State theatres which have advanced from fifteen to twenty cents.

At Salem, the capital, no decision had been made when this was written, George Bligh of Ye Liberty and the Bligh favoring an advance to twenty cents from fifteen, and George Guthrie being understood to favor a two-cent raise.

THE Hippodrome theatre, the vaudeville-picture house of Portland which has just signed a contract for World productions for the Thursday change of each week, has made but two price changes, an increase of five cents for adults at evening, Sunday and holiday performances, and five cents extra for box seats.

The extra nickel is expected to fully care for the tax on ten-cent matinee tickets and fifteen-cent children tickets evenings, Sundays and holidays, these latter figures remaining as before.

THE Sunset Theatre, Portland, is becoming the most popular point for trade showings of pictures in the Oregon metropolis. The latest offering was by Manager W. W. Kofeldt of Pathe, who gave a number of local exhibitors a midnight matinee consisting of the Pathe play "Stranded in Arcady," with Mrs. Vernon Castle, a "Lonesome Luke" comedy, cartoon comedy and scenic. Refreshments included cigars.

AFTER announcing the acquisition of the Vining theatre, of Ashland, Oregon, George Hunt, of the Page theatre, Medford, sprung the news last week that he has not only relinquished the Vining before he took formal possession, but has sold his Page theatre to Mrs. O. T. Bergner. Mrs. Bergner figured in the original deal as the seller of the Vining.

G. A. FARIS, Vitagraph northwest manager; Manager Eden of the Fox northwest organization; "Monty" Montgomery of Triangle, were among recent Portland exchange visitors.

H. A. ZOLLNER of the Rex theatre, Mount Angel, Ore., has temporarily retired from the motion picture business to look after his 120-acre Molalla ranch.

WILLIAM FOX pictures are to be shown at the Strand Theatre, Portland, during the next few months. The Majestic is using the big Fox features but the regular program features have not been used in the Rose City for several months.

"DEADHEAD" NUISANCE IN DENVER ELIMINATED BY POLICE HEAD

DENVER exhibitors are loud in their praises of the action of Commissioner of Safety Dewey C. Bailey, as announced a few days ago. Commissioner Bailey has issued an order calling in the badges of authority in the hands of several hundred special policemen of Denver and their commissions are to be revoked. It seems that every city administration for many years past has distributed commissions carrying police authority to reward their friends for political activity, in most cases, and they still hold their special commissions. The number has steadily increased every year with the result that the aggregate is not only large but unwarranted.

IT goes without saying that a great many of these citizen policemen are theatre deadheads. Local picture houses have experienced much difficulty with them. Many are regular patrons and also bring their families. A refusal to pass them into the theatre has often resulted in a "rough house" to the annoyance of the management and the disgust of paying patrons. This will be ended through the action of Commissioner Bailey and the deadhead list reduced at least 90 per cent.

O. D. WOODWARD has returned from a trip to Los Angeles and San Francisco and announces the following cast which he has signed for initial productions of the National Film Corporation, of which he is president and general manager: Marshall Stedman, director; Eva Lang and Jack Halliday, leads; William Morse, Edward Wade, Marian Black, Homer Barton, Nelson Stevens, Emmett Nogan, Edith Lawrence, Adele Bradford, Clare Hatton and Ralph Lee.

Eva Lang and Jack Halliday were signed in San Francisco a few days ago, on their return from the Orient where they have been playing star engagements for several months. Both have played leading parts for several years in various stock companies and Mr. Halliday has had some screen experience. Both possess ability.

William Morse is a former Metro actor with Flo Reed and played the title role in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Emmet Vogan and Edith Lawrence were with the Lakeside Amusement Company in Denver during the past summer.

The balance of the cast have had long experience either in stock or vaudeville and their new work will be watched with interest.

While waiting for the completion of the buildings at Denver's new movies city, they are filling in 23 days of stock at the Denham theatre, opening with "The Cinderella Man," Saturday, November 3.

MR. WOODWARD has been a dramatic director for more than twenty-five years. He was manager of the Boyd and Brandeis theatres in Omaha, the Willis-Wood and the Auditorium in Kansas City, and the Denham in Denver. He has directed some of the largest productions ever put on the American stage, such as "The Roundup," "Joseph and His Brothers," "Kismet," "The Holy City," "Cleopatra," and a great many others, using anywhere from one hundred to two hundred and fifty people in the cast. He is a tireless, systematic and intelligent worker, and has personally produced a large number of plays. Local film men and exhibitors are extending the glad hand to Mr. Woodward and wishing him abundant success in his new field of work.

C. C. PERCY, who was manager of the Paris in Denver for four years, succeeds Mr. Cassidy. He enjoys the personal acquaintance and warm friendship of many of the exhibitors in this territory.

George M. Mann, general representative of the Triangle, was a recent arrival in Denver from Salt Lake, en route to New York.

F. E. Whitcombe, owner of the Theatorium at Buffalo, Wyo., was a recent Denver visitor.

R. J. Churchill, local Fox manager, is back from a conference in Chicago with General Manager Sheehan.

D. T. McElhenney, formerly with the Vitagraph in Omaha territory, will travel out of Denver for the Fox Film corporation, beginning November 4.

F. W. NORMAN is another new road man out of Denver for Fox. Mr. Churchill says the local office is meeting with big success in bookings of Fox standards and special features and is looking forward to further increased bookings of the new Sunshine comedies.

The Denver office is being remodeled and redecorated throughout, which will make it one of the most attractive film headquarters in the West.

THE Supreme Denver branch has acquired the rights in Colorado, New Mexico and a part of Wyoming for "The Lust of the Ages," the new production of the Ogden Pictures corporation.

J. W. Scott, Mutual road man, has joined the ranks of the Benedicts. The girl who said 'I will" in response to the usual questions propounded by Rev. J. F. Huckleberry of Beth Eden Baptist church, was Miss Lucille Zerschey, daughter of Mrs. J. J. McCrea, and until the day the ceremony was performed was cashier at the Colonial. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have returned from a brief honeymoon trip and are at home to their friends at 2753 Bryant street.

S. E. Abel, special representative for Select Pictures, left for the East and was a Denver visitor during the last week of October.

"Princess Virtue," May Murray film release which was screened here, has arrived and is now being distributed in Denver territory.

W. A. Bach, assistant to General Manager Goldstein, New York, has left for Salt Lake and Los Angeles after a week's visit in Denver.

The Rocky Mountain Screen club's team in the second Liberty Loan drive finished the campaign with the largest average subscriptions of any competing team.

CASSIDY RELIEVES STANLEY IN SALT LAKE

HARRY CASSIDY, formerly manager of the Universal branch exchange at Salt Lake City, Utah, but more recently road representative of the Mutual exchange out of Denver, Colorado, has been appointed to relieve James J. Stanley as manager of the Mutual exchange at Salt Lake. Mr. Stanley has tendered his resignation to take up state rights subjects in the Intermountain section and will manage the office of the Mammoth Film Corporation at Salt Lake. The Mammoth is a recently formed concern. It already has "The Eyes of the World" and "Who's Your Neighbor?" on the road and has several other prints under negotiation.

WILL J. HOPKINS, familiarly known in theatrical and motion picture circles as "Hoppie," after a seven-years' absence has returned to Salt Lake City, Utah, to join the forces of W. H. Swanson, the theatrical man who owns more than a dozen houses in the West. Mr. Hopkins has assumed the management of the Strand theatre in Salt Lake City.

Mr. Hopkins was for many years connected with Mr. Swanson's interests at the old Rex theatre in Salt Lake. After leaving the Mormon capital he was for seven years with John Cort of New York City. He rejoins Mr. Swanson in the same theatre in which he broke into the theatrical business, although the house has now been renamed to the Strand.

He replaces Walter J. Poulton, who has been manager at the Strand for some time. Poulton is leaving the exhibiting end of the business for the producing field. He is also interested in state rights on several large productions released through Salt Lake exchanges.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, theatres made extensive arrangements for made products a week ago when "The Lust of the Ages," produced by the Ogden Motion Picture Company at Ogden, Utah, was given its initial showing at the Strand theatre. On the first night of the picture so many people wanted to see the picture that the management was forced to stop the sale of tickets at 9.15 p. m. More than three thousand people saw the picture on the first day.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, theatres made extensixe arrangements for placing in effect the theatrical war tax on November 1. Theatre men gave the tax wide publicity through the newspapers and in the lobbies, and on the day for putting the fee into effect there was no trouble. The theatregoers for the most part accepted the inevitable in a patriotic spirit and it is not expected that business will suffer as a result.

W. H. SWANSON, owner of the Swanson theatre circuit, comprising theatres in Utah, Colorado and Arizona, was the recipient of a most exquisite array of floral gifts from many friends in celebration of his forty-sixth birthday anniversary on October 26. Mr. Swanson acted as host to the old folks of Salt Lake City at the American theatre on that day.

Notable among the 1,500 guests who attended the afternoon performance was William C. A. Smoot, the last of the survivors of the original pioneers who crossed the plains to Utah, July 24, 1847. In addition there were present eight or nine old folks wearing white ribbons, indicating that they had reached the nonagenarian stage.

MR. SWANSON throughout the afternoon mingled with the audience watching with keen satisfaction the enjoyment which the old folks and the orphans of the city derived from the entertainment. A special program had been planned.

Mr. Swanson has been engaged in the motion picture business continuously for a period of twenty-one years. He is said to have been the first to show a motion picture in this country. He met a French inventor in Boston, in whom he had faith and whom he financed in developing a motion picture machine. The first picture was shown in Trinidad, Colorado, in 1895, after Mr. Swanson had been ignored by New York and San Francisco theatrical men.

MR. SWANSON was instrumental in interesting Thomas Edison, the inventor, in the machine. He organized the Universal Film company, the controlling interest of which he sold two years ago for $1,000,000.

Activities in San Francisco, Salt Lake, Spokane and Los Angeles

T. & D. BUYS ATWELL TRAVELOGUE

THE film exchange of the T. & D. circuit at San Francisco has purchased Nevada and Northern California rights for the seven-reel travelogue, "Atwell's Trip Through the Orient." The purchase was made after the film had been viewed three times by Manager E. M. Asher of the exchange, who believes it to be the best film that was ever brought out of the Orient.

THE popularity of Christie Comedies in northern California territories is shown in the fact that Manager E. H. Emmick of the Peerless Exchange has contracted for the weekly showing at the new Jewel theatre at San Francisco, and at all of the T. & D. Circuit houses outside of San Francisco.

SOL LESSER is shortly to leave San Francisco for the East to preside at the meeting of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., which will be held beginning November 20. Mr. Lesser is now thoroughly recovered from the illness due to typhoid fever, which prevented him from continuing his work while East recently, and for the past two or three weeks has been giving his entire attention to business pertaining to the All Star Feature Distributors Exchange and the organization of state rights men.

EUGENE L. PERRY, special representative of the Fox Company, who has been working in the Seattle and San Francisco territory, has completed his work there for the present and is now giving all his time to the Los Angeles branch. He will remain in Los Angeles working with Manager Guy Gunderson, who is to succeed Field Carmichael, shortly to be transferred to an eastern territory.

CHILDREN'S PROGRAM DISCONTINUED IN SPOKANE

DR. H. S. CLEMMER, Spokane, announces that the children's hour program which has been a feature at that theatre for some time has been discontinued on account of lack of patronage.

MANAGER STILWELL, who is ever alert for improvements, has added to the attractions of the Rex theatre, Spokane, a pipe organ which, with special music, is proving a good drawing card at that house.

AT the Lyric theatre, Spokane, Manager J. W. Allender is proving the efficiency of advertising in the serial "Who Is Number One?" simultaneously with the printing of the story of the same in the Sunday "Spokesman-Review." He is playing to good houses under an increased admission.

MANAGER J. C. KNIPE of the Majestic reports that there is no decrease in the attendance since he raised the price of admission. For some time, while playing some of the larger features, he has had an increase of price, so the change was easily made.

LEVIN IN CHARGE OF NOTABLE AT BUTTE

SAMUEL LEVIN, formerly booking clerk for the Notable Feature Film company, with headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah, has been named as branch manager for that company with headquarters at Butte, Montana. Mr. Levin is now assistant manager of the Denver branch of the Notable concern, but will assume his new duties at once.

Louis Marcus, district manager for the Notable company, made a visit to Butte last week to superintend the opening of the branch office. He says that the growing demand for Paramount and Artcraft pictures in the Northwest has made the establishment of a branch at Butte necessary to insure more rapid and efficient distribution and to establish a closer relationship between the exchange and the exhibitor.

West Coast Exchanges

MANAGER IRVING LESSER of the Los Angeles branch of the All Star Feature Distributors, announces the booking of "The Mad Lover," which this company recently secured, at Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles, for the week of November 26, and "Today" which will be shown at Tally's Broadway two weeks beginning with the week of December 3.

FRANK CHURCHILL, booker for the Los Angeles Mutual Film Corporation's exchange, has left to become affiliated with the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, where he will have charge of the employment department. George Slater, expert booker, who has been connected with the Mutual Dallas, Texas, branch, will succeed Mr. Churchill at the Los Angeles office.

THE World Film Corporation is now located at their new quarters, 818 South Olive Street, on Film Row, Los Angeles. A feature of the new office is a completely equipped projecting room. T. E. Hancock is the new manager of this branch.

RICORD GRADWELL, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, was a visitor at the Los Angeles branch last week while en route on a business trip to the various branches of the west coast.

EXHIBITORS were viewing last week "The Planter," produced by the Nevada Film Company, and starring Tyrone Power, which is being handled by the Mutual Film Corporation. This picture will be released the week of November 12.

HUBERT SOLMSON, formerly identified with the Peerless Film Service in San Francisco as manager, has become a member of the Liberty Army at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Washington.

V. E. EBERHART, who has been manager of the World San Francisco branch, has tendered his resignation and been succeeded by E. R. Jensen. Mr. Eberhart will engage in the manufacturing business at Kansas City.

POPULARITY OF PICTURES IN MEXICO ON THE INCREASE

ADELBERTO GONZALES, general manager of Tivoli Cine of Hermosillo in the State of Sonora, Mexico, who is connected with one of the big banking institutions of Hermosillo, and with other Mexican capitalists is interested in theatres in Nogales and Hermosillo, has prepared plans for the erection of four new houses. All theatres of this company are supplied by Los Angeles exchanges.

IN speaking of conditions in Mexico with respect to motion picture theatres Mr. Gonzales states there is greater demand for amusements by the people there now than at any time in the past several years.

"The patronage of our finest theatre at Hermosillo is about equally divided between English and Spanish speaking people," Mr. Gonzales said, "and in order to accommodate both classes we have employed interpreters for the sub-titles. In the event the titles are Spanish we have an English interpreter, and vice versa if the titles are English. We get films containing both Spanish and English titles in Mexico, and so we must be prepared for all emergencies."

AS an illustration of the desire of people in Hermosillo for amusement Mr. Gonzales told of the business of the theatres continuing about normal all season in spite of the fact that this year there were far more heavy rains than usual. In the summer all theatres are closed and airdomes are used. The patrons found they could use umbrellas without obstructing the view badly and this they did night after night during the rains. The business at the airdomes continued good during the entire season.

CONCERNING American films, Mr. Gonzales said most of them were pleasing to the patrons of their theatres. On several occasions Mexican people were shown in a very unfavorable light and there was much dissatisfaction. On one occasion a film came near causing a riot. To use Mr. Gonzales' words "the patrons protested with bricks and shouts." Following the showing of this the theatre was closed for a week, and it took all kinds of political string pulling to prevent the alcalde, or mayor, from keeping the theatre closed permanently. Local newspapers had editorials prepared, but these were never used. The film that caused so much trouble was the Triangle release "Let Katy Do It."

LOIS WEBER and her company recently made a trip to Oatman, Arizona, where nine scenes were shot for "The Man Who Dared God," and while there had the aid of mine officials and workmen, and the entire village turned out to work in mob scenes. By special lighting equipment Miss Weber was able to secure scenes in several of the shafts of the greatest copper mines of the country, in some instances working from eight hundred to a thousand feet below the surface of the earth. William Stowell is the leading man and Mildred Harris plays the feminine lead.

CHARLES GUNN, Triangle leading man, is now devoting his spare moments to the indoor sport of scenario writing.

What the Players are Doing

ROY STUART is using a six-shooter carried by his father when he served as sheriff of Hangtown, California, in the early frontier days. This will be seen in "The Medicine Man," in which Roy Stuart takes the part of the Sheriff of El Dorado. Hangtown has been made famous by Bret Harte and a number of the stories picture Stuart's father as the Sheriff.

FORMER employes of the American Film Co., at Santa Barbara, are living high and having plenty of smokes at Camp Lewis, Washington, as the result of a benefit performance given by players of the American Film Co. at Santa Barbara theatre. Fifteen men at Camp Lewis were former employes of the American.

WILLIAM RUSSELL, while between pictures, is spending a few days with Lieut. Roy Edward Wales, a former American actor, who is now a member of the Aviation Corps at San Diego.

JACK CUNNINGHAM has just completed a scenario for Olive Thomas, Triangle star, which is an adaptation from the Katherine Kavanaugh prize screen story of the Photoplay Magazine contest.

A NUMBER of Keystone players, including Max Archer and Eddie Gribben, took part last week in a Red Cross benefit at Seal Beach, Cal.

HARRY DEPP, between appearances before the Keystone camera, is cultivating a fall vegetable garden and claims to have the largest eggplants and onions to be found in California.

ALBERT GLASSMIRE, production manager at the Triangle-Keystone, was given inspiration for a comedy the other morning when Rudolph Bylek, a member of the scenario staff, took him to the studio in his automobile. Bylek claims it is a regular automobile, but Glassmire believes soft coal is used and that it is of the same temperament as David Harum's horse.

J. FARRELL McDONALD has been discovered. Keystone studio associates visited a suburban theatre the other night and saw him playing leads opposite a well known star. Prior to this discovery they thought he had been a director and writer all his life.

RICHARD WILLIS has compiled answers for all classes of players to give on employment application blanks. The most recent of the series is that showing the answers given by a proud mother showing her infant prodigy. The mother, according to Willis, writes: "The child does not need to go to school. She has been around the studios and knows everything. She is the most beautiful child in the world, has the loveliest color of hair and the bluest eyes." Concerning salary she says, "enough to keep her pa and ma comfortable."

BESSIE BARRISCALE is said to be the most enthusiastic and unblushing rooter of the film colony's baseball fans.

DARRELL FOSS, Triangle actor, after four excursions into the Santa Monica Mountains, reports having seen a total of fifty deer. No statement is made concerning the number killed, even though this is the open season.

CHARLES GUNN, Triangle leading man, is home from a vacation spent at San Francisco and Portland.

AMY JEROME, leading woman with the Mena Co., has an apartment building in Los Angeles named in her honor. The Clare Apartments is the name of the new structure at Eleventh and Lake Streets, Los Angeles. Incidentally Amy Jerome in private life in Amy Clare.

AT the Vitagraph studio they tell the story on Bill Duncan, the actor director of "Vengeance and the Woman" serial, that he tried to go easy in a fight scene with an extra. He didn't want to beat the man up too much. The following evening he attended the amateur bouts at Vernon and his opponent of the screen battle carried away the honors of the sixth bout card.

EDWARD SLOMAN, American director, is entitled to put in a bill for several thousand dollars. He recently discovered a location within fifty miles of the studios that is ideal for South American atmosphere scenes. Inasmuch as he saved the company transportation on the players is it not right that he should receive the difference in the cost of making the coming Bill Russell subject?

WE have a new mistaken identity story. Carmel Myers was garbed as an Italian peasant and a son of Italy, sightseeing at Universal City, thought he had found his sweetheart who came to America several years ago. It took several minutes to find an interpreter who could explain to him that Miss Myers was just made up and playing she was an Italian maid.

MILDRED HARRIS, Lois Weber Productions' leading woman, narrowly escaped injury one morning this week when a street car ran down her automobile. The rear part of the auto was badly smashed.

UNIVERSAL CITY had as its distinguished guests this week Captain K. Midzutani and S. Iwaka of the Japanese Army, who are in this country to study automobile construction. They were shown about the place of wonders by Frank Tokanaga, Universal's Japanese actor.

MAL ST. CLAIR, Triangle Keystone comedian, bought a Ford the other day and the first time he had it out came back after parking it for a few minutes to find a half dozen just like it in a row. Now he does not know whether he is driving his own fliv or not.

FRED PALMER is a new member of the Keystone-Triangle scenario department. He was formerly with the Sennet-Keystone organization but for the past eight months has been writing exclusively for Lyons and Moran at Universal City.

WILLIAM IRVING was assigned to hiding under a bear rug during certain action in a Keystone set the other day and the company went off for lunch, and he slept for several hours.

A NEW Western is being filmed at Universal City, with Harry Carey as Cheyenne, under the direction of Jack Ford. Molly Malone is to continue as leading woman and besides a number of U cowboys appearing in the subject important parts are taken by Vester Pegg, Helen Wright and Martha Mattox. The story is adapted from one by Frederick H. Bechdolt, with scenario by George Hively.

"THE MYSTERY SHIP" serial company, which has Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber as principals, under the direction of Harry Harvey, are now on the ninth episode and "The Bull's Eye" serial unit has progressed to the third release. This will feature Eddie Polo, with Vivian Reed as his leading woman. The serial is being directed by James W. Horne.

SHERIDAN BICKERS has been added to the Universal City scenario department and is to write especially for Mae Murray.

EDWARD ULLMAN, superintendent of the photography for Universal west coast plants, is taking his first vacation since becoming affiliated with the Universal, almost five years ago.

TWO new Sennett-Paramount comedies were put in production this week, one to be directed by Eddie Cline and the other by Victor Herrman. William Campbell and company, which is headed by Polly Moran, are still at work on "Taming Target Center," and Director Clarence G. Badger is still filming a subject in which Chester Conklin and Marie Prevost are principals. This has not been named. Mary Thurman, Charles Murray and Weyland Trask are the principals of the Herrman subject, while Louise Fazenda, "Slim" Summerville and all the animals of the Sennet lot will take part in the Cline subject.

THE Billy West-King Bee company arrived in Los Angeles Saturday, October 27, and have completed negotiations for the use of the Yorke-Metro studio on Gordon street, Hollywood, where work will be begun shortly on the first picture. Besides Jules Bernstein and Billy West, Leo White came west to play with the company.

THE cowboys of Hartville came into possession of the fact that Roy Stewart was celebrating a birthday—no, he has not said which one—early this week and so the horse opera troupe treated him with such respect that he will never forget. He was chapped, which means he is now taking his meals from a mantle piece or high manger, according to what location may be in use at the times he takes on food.

Daily Change Is Over, Says Marcus

THE age of the daily change has passed, according to Louis Marcus, district manager for the Notable Feature Film Company, with headquarters at Salt Lake, Utah. This company distributes Paramount and Artcraft products in the mountain territory.

"INSTEAD of the daily change of program the week run is coming," Mr. Marcus said recently. "It is in keeping with, and as a result of the remarkable development in the producing end of the business. Just as the quality of productions improves, so the runs will be lengthened. The day of the 'penny dreadful' in juvenile literature passed a decade ago, and with it the cheap paper novel of no value either for real entertainment or instruction.

"Just so is the cheap and trashy film production passing, and as a parallel with the literature, one pays more for good books and they last longer. So with the motion pictures. There is a greater demand for the high-class productions, and houses playing such features as 'The Man From Painted Post,' 'The Woman God Forgot,' 'Arms and the Girl,' the Julian Eltinge series, and other plays of similar calibre are compelled to turn would-be patrons from their doors without tickets, because of lack of house capacity. This is true on four-day runs, indicating that the demand for such productions is so great that in a little time the week-run will be necessary.

"IMPROVEMENT in production is reflected in the physical improvement of playhouses. The most modern conveniences are installed in all new houses, and in those that are being remodeled; every thing to provide for the comfort of the patron is given, and the day of the 'dump' is gone. Motion picture theatres of to-day can well be called motion picture palaces, for they are palatial in their luxury and beauty."

ONE of the snappiest and most readable trade letters issued recently by a film exchange to promote the sale of merchandise, has come from the prolific typewriter of Gordon H. Place, publicity manager for the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake, distributors of Paramount and Artcraft products in the mountain territory. The letter breathes the spirit of youth, and recalls some of the most delightful of boyhood experiences in every man's life. Here are some of the gems from the letter:

"EVER go to a circus when you were a kid? Ever get up at daylight and hike down to the tracks to watch them unload those great mysterious wagons with the canvas covers from under which issued the savage growls of the jungle beasts? Ever follow the wagons and the elephants to the circus lot and hang around the cook-tent watching the roustabouts and the riders and the ringmaster fraternize over the hot coffee? Ever sneak under the 'big top' if you didn't have a quarter to get in at the main entrance?

"Of course you did if you were a sure-enough kid!

"What filled your young brain with the circus fire? Wasn't it the billboards with their perfectly gorgeous 24-sheets? Of course, it was! What kid could resist the alluring temptation to see the beautiful lady leap through the flaming hoop from the back of a galloping milk-white steed? What youngster could stay at home when the calliope tooted after he had gazed in wide-eyed wonder at the brilliantly colored snow-bills picturing all the winders to be seen under the 'big top'?

"HUMAN nature is the same to-day as it was when you wore knee-breeches. Boys and girls and their parents, too, are attracted to amusement offerings by bright colors and attractive advertising, just as they have been since Adam, in his youth, was attracted by the blushing rosy tints of that historic apple.

"Why don't you play on human nature a little stronger and put up one or more first-class 24-sheet stands? It will get the money. It will make your enterprise conspicuous. It will tell all the people that you are in the entertainment business with Paramount or Artcraft, or both.

"THE 24-sheets illustrating Paramount and Artcraft entertainment are without equals for attractiveness. Use them and draw all the people to your house. It pays or the circus wouldn't keep it up year after year. If it's good for them it's good for you.

"WE have Paramount and Artcraft 24-sheet (stock) which we will send free to you if you'll use them. We have special stars and subjects at $1.75 each. Tell us what you want. We'll send it. Then get your bill-sticker on the job. Keep at it a while and you'll see that it pays.

"Shoot along your order right now! What shall we send you first?"

The Reader Has His Say

"Most Interesting Reading in the Trade Field," One Reader Calls This Page—This Week Brings Many Writers Who "Dare You to Publish This"

"I am Writing This to Get It Out of My System"

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I am writing this to get it out of my system, but frankly, I do not dare write what I am thinking of.

I would like to know why the exhibitor is to pay all the war tax of the picture industry. We pay taxes on our seats, taxes on reels, tax on express, tax on parcel post, tax on admissions, etc. That makes five taxes.

Yet one manufacturer had the exalted nerve to say that fifteen cents on a five-reel feature is only seventy-five cents. Yes, but he did not think of the other taxes. The tax on the express will be six cents, and so on. They are all howling "Do your bit!" Why do they not take their own medicine?

While I am at it I want to mention something about the service of some of the exchanges. Why is it that most of them will always send you their worst pictures? I am in a town of five thousand and good westerns and comedies always go big, yet I have to fight all the time to get them. It does not cost the exchange any more to send the good ones. I see where the same concern I have in mind has started a service department to help the exhibitor. What good is all their help and advice and their fandangled ideas about putting the picture over if they do not send pictures that can be put over? Send me the good ones and I will see to the rest myself.

It is a wonder the manufacturers would not get wise and cut out the cartoon stuff. It is only good for one thing to me and that is on a busy night it makes a fine chaser.

Valueless Trade Papers One of the Evils of the Business

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: If your paper is intended for the exhibitor's benefit and the upholding of the industry and you have enough backbone to publish this letter without fearing you will lose some advertising space—then here it is:

One of the evils we have to contend with in this business is a number of trade publications which are both valueless to the trade and the exhibitor and which insists on staying in the field to complicate matters. First, the busy exhibitor has no time to read anything that is not said by an authority; second, these publications cannot even help the advertiser since they have no prestige but as a rule are only backed by a few exchanges to help put over local stuff in their territory.

We have marked the item enclosed from a recent issue of the . . . They are trying to put over the fact on their first page that all these taxes are just, that they should all be shouldered by the exhibitor.

The whole trouble lies in the fact that the manufacturers are organized, while the exhibitors are not. The manufacturer knows this and is taking advantage of the situation. Such trade papers as we have mentioned know that this is so and that they must do all in their power to keep the exhibitors from waking up to the fact that these charges are unjust. So much are they blinded by selfish motives that they cannot see their own disaster staring them in the face.

The exhibitor has been paying a seat tax now for three years and this alone is a burden on many small theatres. I know of many that existed before this tax and cannot run now, small as this tax may seem by the year. As a result the exchange is losing that portion of the business.

Now we are facing the admission tax. Some exhibitors are paying it, others are trying to charge it to the patrons, but even this latter will mean a loss in patronage. On top of this comes the footage tax—for the exhibitor, when the Government has distinctly placed it on the manufacturer. Had they intended it for the exhibitor they could easily enough have dug up another tax in addition to the admission tax.

The exchanges take great pleasure in seeing that not only the new stuff that is released under the tax brings a payment from the exhibitor but they use it as a graft to charge an extra fifteen cents on all their old junk regardless of age. In our case we use four to five-month stuff with even older fill-ins, but even then there is a fifteen cents per reel charge.

If the food speculator takes advantage of the situation to charge a high price he is called a traitor and an enemy to his government. Then for heaven's sake what is the manufacturer and exchange?

We note that one manufacturer is seeing the white and is not going to charge this tax. We hope that exhibitors as far as possible will remember this manufacturer, not at the present time alone but at all future times.

It stands to reason that the manufacturer's margin is not so close that he cannot afford to pay the tax when we think of the enormous salaries being paid to the stars. I am sure also that there are exhibitors whose margin of profit is large enough to pay this tax if they care to, yet that is not the case with the small town man whose margin is fixed and cannot be improved.

Yours sincerely,
OSCAR KORN.

Should Uncle Sam Have Shown More Gratitude?

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: The war tax proposition is certainly going to put thousands of small-town shows out of business but I am going to try and fight it through as long as possible. I think Uncle Sam could have been more liberal as far as the motion picture was concerned. Instead of charging 10 per cent on gross receipts he should have asked one-tenth of one per cent. This would have meant a great deal to us but would not have been felt so badly. I have been doing my best for Uncle Sam in advertising the Liberty Loan ever since it was first broached. Have watched for and read all items in your past issues and am anxiously waiting your magazine from week to week. I love to read and look it over.

Business has taken an awful tumble. My receipts have already fallen off 20 per cent since the draft and what the effect of the new taxes will be no one can say. Enclosed herewith you will find a clipping from my local newspaper showing how I am trying to explain the tax to my people. But I find it a terrible job in a small town.

Wishing the best of success to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, I am,

Yours respectfully,
B. HATKE.

A Bureau of Advertising Investigation Needed in Picture Business

The Box-Office Reports—As Seen by a Big Exhibitor

¶ When I received your first letter regarding the report service I took it for granted that your request was just one of the many similar requests we receive pertaining to our business and for this reason did not give the matter any particular attention.

¶ After receiving the November 10 issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and looking over the department "Exhibitors Box-Office Reports," and finding five pictures shown recently at the Alamo theatre were listed, and that the consensus of opinion all over the country concurred with my own box-office reports on each of these subjects I readily realized at last that the true, logical, conclusive evidence, if such is possible, had been found through the medium of your department.

¶ In consequence I shall be only too glad to furnish you each week with the report card as requested. I sincerely hope and trust that all exhibitors throughout the country to whom the request is made to co-operate will comply with your wishes with a little more speed than I originally exhibited.

Countless Exhibitor Rallies Outcome of Admission Tax

All Large Cities Reflect First Great Spirit of Uniting on a Substantial Basis That Has Ever Characterized Exhibitor Meetings—Movement Is National to Inform Public Upon Tax

WITH petty politics left out of the discussions entirely, a brand new type of exhibitor meeting has sprung into being in cities large and small throughout the United States.

Fully convinced of the threatening character of the tax, exhibitors have been drawn together for the grave task of informing the public. The result has been not only a co-operation of thoughts, but a co-operation of bank-rolls for advertising purposes.

The reports say that the public is taking to this tax with enthusiasm.

Chicago Public Meets Tax in Agreeable Mood

Contrary to all expectations, and much to the joy and satisfaction of the exhibitors, the Dear Old Public, as far as it relates to Chicago, made little or no protest again the Government taxation on tickets. Not an exhibitor in the city had a genuine kick from any of his clientele. The first two days of the tax witnessed a little trouble in educating them on the part of the exhibitor, but immediately afterward they adjusted themselves to conditions and proved themselves patriotic as well as motion picture fans. In fact, there were expressions on many sides that they considered the paying of the tax a privilege. Many of them took the stand that they realized amusements are always luxuries, and, therefore, they had no other recourse than to pay the tax.

Ascher Surprised at Results

Nathan Ascher, speaking for the experience throughout his long chain of theatres in Chicago, said: "The people are glad to pay the tax. We were remarkably surprised. There was a slump in business for a day or two, but it could be more readily blamed on the weather. During the past week, again aided by the weather but with a better kind, everyone of our theatres have sent in encouraging box office reports daily. The people took the tax philosophically. They even joked as they counted their pennies for the extra assessment. While we had made provision to meet the tax by mobilizing all of the pennies we could get hold of, most of the people applying for admission during the past week have had their extra coppers ready."

At the Alcazar, Rose and Boston theatres, managed by Harry C. Miller, the admission price still remains at 15c. in all three houses. Out of this, Mr. Miller states, they will be able to pay the tax themselves. These three houses are right in the heart of the Loop district, and one of them, the Rose, is an all night house.

Tax Increases Business

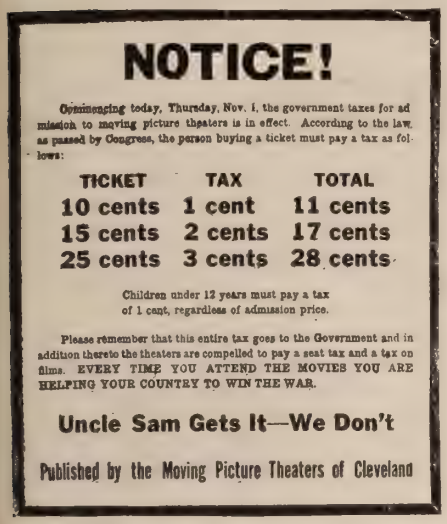
Manager Weil, of the Castle theatre, on State street, also reported a cheerful acquiescence to the ruling on the part of the Government. "The tax has not hurt our business a bit," he said. "In fact, it has increased since the law went into effect. At the Castle theatre the people are paying 20c. admission fee and the 2c. tax without a murmur. Of course there is the traditional grouch to be met with every once in a while who objects. He generally relieves himself in this manner and then digs up the extra 2c."

Following are a few short opinions from managers of Chicago motion picture theatres regarding the statement of the people on the tax:

Sigmund Faller, manager of the Bijou Dream, declared that he had had little or no trouble with the people objecting to the admission tax.

"In fact," he said, "up to the present only two people have kicked at all and one was a Polish woman who couldn't understand what we tried to tell her and the other was a Chinaman in the same boat. The people are paying the tax with smiles on their faces and business is as good as ever.

Costs Exhibitor Money



"No one can afford to pay the tax himself. During the first four days the amount I took in that I had to turn over to the Government was $151, or more than my profit. The war tax is going to cost me $1,000 a month, so what I'd like to do," he said, "would be to take the tax and turn my theatre over to the Government."

Mr. Faller is charging 10 and 15c. and requiring the tax of 1 and 2c. extra.

pheum, said that he was charging the tax extra and asking 15 and 20c. for admission.

"It's the only safe way to get along," he said. "I have had a few kicks from people, but I guess they must have been pro-Germans. Most of them are paying the tax without quibbling."

A. Zilligan admitted that he had experienced a big drop in business since he started collecting the tax. He started out charging 6 and 11c., but said he thought he could do better by raising his prices to 10 and 15c.

Max Barling, proprietor of the Madlin and Ashland theatres, said he was charging 10 and 15c., and paying the tax himself. He stated that he thought in general Chicagoans were paying the tax willingly.

S. Katz, owner of the Wallace and interested in the big Central Park and others, stated that at his little house he was charging 6 and 11c. and that his experience had been that people came expecting to pay the war tax.

"I haven't had any real complaints," he said, "just a few good natured joshes."

Louis Frank, when questioned on the subject, said that his patrons were paying the tax gracefully.

Exhibitor-Exchange Clash in Los Angeles

The fifteen-cent per reel tax on film has caused much discontent at San Francisco, and caused the exhibitors to reorganize the Exhibitors' League of America Branch there. Wilbert Corey was named president, H. T. Goethe, secretary and Ike Oppenheim treasurer.

In San Francisco, all exchanges except the Triangle and Mutual are charging fifteen cents per reel per day tax, and the exhibitors contending that this was unjust called upon President Louis Reichert of the Exchangemen's Organization, and served notice that service would be discontinued if exhibitors were forced to pay the tax. No action has been taken by President Reichert or members of the Exchangemen's Association.

On another day, thirty or more theatre owners called in a body on M. L. Markowitz, manager of the California exchange handling Bluebird, Butterfly, Jewel and Universal subjects.

W. D. Ascough, President of the Maangers' Theatrical Association of Connecticut, Prepared This Box-Office Statement, Which has Been Approved by the Revenue Collectors

When threats of discontinuing service were made, Mr. Markowitz pointed out that his action was directed by the company he represented, and the government, and he could do nothing but collect the tax.

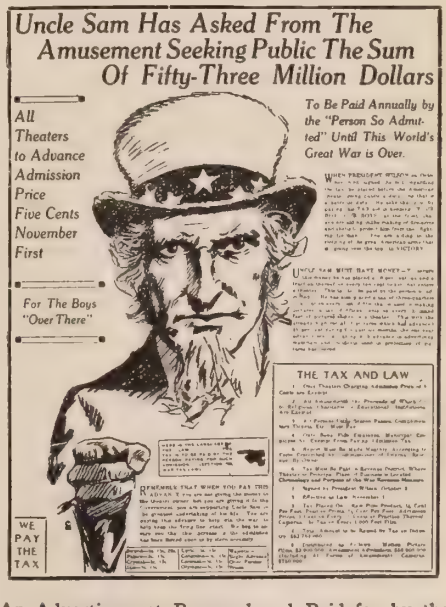
At the same time he called to the exhibitors' attention, the efforts he had put forth in the past to aid conditions for them, in the matter of censorship, etc., and pointed out that the exchangemen had done everything possible for the betterment of exhibitor conditions in San Francisco, and it was up to the exhibitors to befriend the exchangemen now when they were confronted with difficulties.

Newark Happy

Newark exhibitors almost without exception report that their patrons have taken kindly to the new war tax on admission tickets. Local exhibitors are arranging their policies to make the burden of the increased charges of as little inconvenience as possible to their patrons.

Several of the larger picture houses have decided upon the policy of leaving unchanged their admission prices for matinee performances. A five-cent increase in evening admission prices has been put in operation by those exhibitors who have not increased the prices for the afternoon shows. The Strand theatre and the Goodwin are both working on this arrangement and declare it has many advantages over others.

"My plan is to cause as little inconvenience as possible to Goodwin patrons," explained George Turner, assistant manager. "By keeping the price of the afternoon performances the same we encourage attendance at these shows. The night crowds are generally of a little different type than the afternoon patrons. They are often better able to pay and the extra nickle is of little consideration to them.



"Then, too, it avoids confusion in theatres that have small lobbies. It eliminates the long line before the box-office that is forced to wait while change in pennies is being counted.

Another advantage of the straight charge in nickel denominations is that it conserves pennies, in which there is a reported shortage. This is a serious matter, and exhibitors can co-operate by reducing its dangers."

Mutual Sues New York M. P. Corporation

Asks $400,000 Alleged Damages in Action Instituted in Superior Court, and Also Wants Permanent Injunction on Certain Pictures

THE Mutual Film Corporation, it was announced last week, has filed in the Superior Court of New York a suit for $400,000 alleged damages against the New York Motion Picture Corporation and a group of related concerns. The suit is one that will no doubt commend more attention within the industry than any threshed out in the courts in months.

In addition to asking the large sum in alleged damages, the Mutual action includes a prayer for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant concerns from the further circulation of various motion pictures. The defendants include the Broncho Motion Picture Company, the Keystone Film Company and the Domino Motion Picture Corporation.

The Mutual Film Corporation charges that the New York Motion Picture Corporation and its allies have violated contracts for the exclusive sale of the pictures in question to the Mutual Film Corporation and that they have further refused to deliver to the Mutual additional print copies of the pictures as stipulated in the contract before made and entered into.

"The motion pictures involved," remarked President John R. Freuler, of Mutual, "include all of the pictures made for the Mutual by the defendants in the period of 1912-15, which means the old Keystone comedies, the W. S. Hart pictures of that period, the Charles Chaplin comedies made by Keystone, the early Mack Sennett comedies and the Western productions of Broncho and all Domino pictures.

"The contracts covering these pictures provided that the Mutual Film Corporation was to have exclusive right of distribution in the United States and Canada and that the Mutual was to be supplied with additional positive prints of any of the pictures at any time."

The suit is under the supervision of President Freuler and Samuel M. Field, general counsel for the Mutual Film Corporation. The suit is being handled in New York by John G. Turnbull, Eastern counsel for the Mutual Film Corporation.

Griffith Resumes Operation in Los Angeles

Prepares to Screen Remainder of Three Subjects for Which He Secured Exteriors in Europe—Stars Arrive on the Coast

D. W. GRIFFITH arrived in Los Angeles, Friday, November 2, and immediately began making plans for the work of filming the remainder of the three subjects for which he secured exteriors while on the war front in France. Mr. Griffith brought with him to Los Angeles approximately 80,000 feet of negative film exposed while in Europe. He was accompanied by his cameraman, Billy Bitzer, and the day following Robert Harron, Misses Lillian and Dorothy Gish, and Mrs. Gish, arrived from the East.

Mr. Griffith will use the lot in Hollywood, made famous by the great Babylonian sets erected there for "Intolerance." At this place he will build several big exterior settings, duplicates of ruins he photographed in war-ridden Europe. It is very probable his producing activities will again be centered at the Fine Arts studio, shortly to be entirely vacated by the Triangle-Keystone producing organization.

Mr. Griffith did not make any statement concerning his three productions with respect to the length or stories they will tell. He intimated it is very probable almost as much negative will be made in Los Angeles as was taken in Europe, and the three subjects will be taken from this great assortment of scenes and action.

Lust Exchange Gives Advice About Express Delays

Owing to the irregularity of expressage, Sidney B. Lust, manager of the Lust Exclusive Exchange, Washington, D. C., has suggested to his patrons in the small towns that the exhibitors combine and have on hand several films suitable for all occasions, to be known as emergency films, to be used when shipment of shows is delayed. This should help to lessen the disappointment of patrons and exhibitor. Mr. Lust is also not making bookings so close as formerly, to provide for such delays. Sending films by parcel post is also to be considered.

Seelye No Longer with Pathe Exchange

It was announced at the offices of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., this week that C. R. Seelye, who has been business manager for Pathe for the past year, is no longer connected with the organization.

Levine Acquires Laboratory Agency

H. Z. Levine, who operates a free lance bureau, buying and exploiting special attractions, has acquired the agency of one of the largest laboratories in the East, it is announced, and has moved from the Candler Building to the Times Building.

Dwight Whiting Visits Pathe Exchange Main Office

Dwight Whiting, treasurer and general manager of the Rolin Company, maker of the "Lonesome Luke," "Rolin" and "Toto" comedies for Pathe, accompanied by his wife, is in New York for a few days' visit at the Pathe Exchange main offices. He brought with him a "Toto" comedy called "One Night Only," which is described as a knockout.

Mr. Whiting reports a large expansion of the Rolin Company during the past year, and many improvements in the studios.

Sherwood Does Not Personally Approve Films

H. F. Sherwood, assistant secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, has called attention to the circulation of reports, both spoken and printed, in which it was claimed he expressed special approval of a particular photoplay, and has asked MOTION PICTURE NEWS to state that the reports were used without authority. Mr. Sherwood said he has not been interviewed for publication, and if asked to do so, he could not express a personal opinion of a production, as the action of the National Board regarding specific pictures is that of committees and not individuals.

Century Theatre Club Honors the Silent Drama

The first time in its fifteen years of existence, the Century Theatre Club recently turned over its monthly social meeting to the consideration of the play and the screen.

As a good example of what can be done in an artistic way in the film world it selected the Goldwyn organization, and as the latest exponent of new ideas and methods it invited the Goldwyn staff to present its own ideas to the members. Margaret Mayo was selected as the Goldwyn representative and was introduced by Edith Ellis, head of the Goldwyn literary department, who was one of the three founders of the Century Theatre Club.

"Movie Ambulance" Used to Raise More War Funds

The ambulance for service in France which was provided by donations from motion picture producers and their stars, including Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew, Ruth Roland, Louise Huff, Bessie Barriscale, Mae Murray, Violet Virginia Blackton, Jackie Saunders and Florence Turner, will not, as was first intended, be put into immediate service for the war. It will be used to raise money for six more of the same pattern, it is announced, and motion picture people will guide the campaign to its goal.

Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton is the chairman of the committee in charge of the work, and others on the committee are Daniel Frohman, J. Stuart Blackton, Jesse Lasky, Edgar Selwyn, S. L. Rothapfel and George Kleine.

Three Mutual Companies Declare Big Dividends

Three of Mutual's subsidiary and allied corporations have declared important dividends and stock redemptions involving large sums in profits paid over to stockholders in these Freuler enterprises.

The companies are the Lone Star Corporation, the concern which produced the Mutual-Chaplin comedies; the Lincoln Film Corporation, which financed the production of the Helen Holmes serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," and the States Film Corporation, which made the Helen Holmes serial, "The Girl and the Game."

Conflicting Views Cause W. W. Irwin's Withdrawal from Russian Post

Vitagraph's Head Feared Handicaps to Work Through Lack of Full Co-operation—Makes Public His Correspondence with George Creel, Resulting in Withdrawal from American Cinema Commission

WALTER W. IRWIN, of the Vitagraph Company, has withdrawn from the American Cinema Commission, organized to carry Uncle Sam's message to the people of Russia, Italy and France by means of the motion picture.

Clash of Views

A clash of views over vital matters in the conduct of the commission's operations is given as the reason for Mr. Irwin's withdrawal, with George Creel, of the Committee on Public Information, representing the Washington viewpoint and Mr. Irwin the practical motion picture standpoint. In response to a request from MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Irwin declared that he did not care to make any statement in addition to the plain declaration of his withdrawal, but solely in the interest of making his position clear he consented to throw open his correspondence with Mr. Creel.

The correspondence, which shows that Mr. Irwin was responsible for an ambitious and detailed scheme of operations for the commission, throws a clear light on the situation and effectually banishes any whisperings of the rumor-mongers. For that reason MOTION PICTURE NEWS presents the letters in full.

The first communication herewith is a reply of Mr. Irwin to a letter from the head of the Committee on Public Information which is withheld out of deference to Mr. Creel and the Government because of its confidential nature. The letter, however, brings out one important point, that of Mr. Irwin's appointment, in the sentence, "When you are ready to go to Russia a warrant will be issued for your expenses." The other points necessary to an understanding of the situation are covered in Mr. Irwin's reply, which is as follows:

Hon. George Creel, Chairman,
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Creel: Your favor of October 24 was duly received.

When five or six representatives of the Motion Picture Industry, including myself, conferred with you at your office in Washington about September 18, you stated in effect, that innumerable German agents, together with from twelve to fifteen thousand people who had left this country or were deported from it, were spreading the propaganda among the Russian people and troops, that this country is not in fact a democracy, but, on the contrary, is an autocracy of wealth, with autocratic principles equal to those of Germany; that accordingly, the United States is devoid of justice; that it is not preparing for war, nor has it any intention of participating actively as an ally, for its entrance into the war is a mere bluff; that this country does not intend to assist Russia either to win the war or to establish herself as a democracy, and that these false preachments were partly responsible for the demoralization of the Russian Army; that in the judgment of the Government, the wide exhibition of motion pictures demonstrating that this country is a democracy, and showing the social and economic results obtained under a democratic form of Government, and the preparedness of this country to actively participate in the war until its successful conclusion, such pictures as our troops in the French trenches, our tremendous training camps in this country, our great aeroplane fields and factories, our schools and school children, our factories and industries, the life of our workmen and the conditions under which they work, the kind of homes they occupy, clean rooms, clean clothes, the President walking at the head of the parade of those drawn by conscription, the parade of the Red Cross nurses, the great Western farms with the farming done by machinery, munition factories, big railroad stations, tall buildings, cattle herds, chicken farms with incubators, railroads running through mountains, the railroad crossing Salt Lake at Lucin Cut-off, big bridges, etc., etc., would be a most effective medium of counteracting the propaganda of our enemies, by educating the Russian people and troops as to the real facts of our democracy, the results to the people obtained under a democratic form of government, and of our gigantic preparations to make democracy safe; and thereby so increase the morale of the Russian people and troops, as to cause the latter to remain in the trenches, and thus prevent the transfer of the Germans from the Eastern front to the Western front; that if this result could be obtained through the motion picture, it would not only mean the shortening of the war and the saving of hundreds of thousands of lives, but the saving of the lives of tens of thousands of American boys; in fact, that the educational motion picture by aiding in keeping the Russian troops in the trenches, would be an important factor in assuring victory, and likewise would be a decided influence in enabling Russia to more quickly become a stable Republic after the war; and that the Government desired the Motion Picture Industry to recommend a competent man to establish in Russia an organization for the distribution of these pictures, as well as a man for each of the countries of France and Italy to undertake work along similar lines.

From the moment that this country entered into the war, I think there is hardly a man who has not felt every time he met another in khaki, that he would like to find a way to do his "bit," and who has not been turning over in his mind the question as to how he can actively support the President, and thus do his part not only for the American people, but in the cause of democracy.

In my own case, I am too old to be a private, and am likewise too old for a commission as a lieutenant, and could not hope to be a captain without a very long period of study and training. Therefore, I was troubled because at a loss to know what I could do. But from the moment I listened to your recital, I realized that here was a splendid work in which I was thoroughly competent, just as much as I would be for an officership, had I graduated from West Point or Annapolis, and that accordingly, I had no right to consider my family, my personal responsibilities, or my business, or permit those factors to influence me in not undertaking a work which I knew I could accomplish to the fullest extent possible under the conditions existing in Russia; in other words, obtain the exhibition of educational motion picture subjects to the largest possible percentage of the Russian public and to all of the Russian troops within the shortest possible space of time.

The endeavor to make the motion picture a factor in the saving of the lives of thousands of American boys by exhibiting to the largest percentage of the Russian public and to all of the Russian troops within the shortest period of time, in other words, by getting the largest percentage of the people to thinking upon the same subject at the same time, involves a tremendous responsibility to the cause of democracy, to the support of the President, and to the American people. Even now, the Italian lines are being crushed by the Germans withdrawn from the Eastern front.

However, you say in your favor of October 24, that Mr. E. G. Sisson "will be in absolute authority," and that "all expenditures before being incurred must receive his approval."

It is to be assumed that the recommendation by the Motion Picture Industry of me as the proper person to undertake this work in Russia, means that by training and experience, I am an expert, qualified to form the best judgment to accomplish the end under the conditions as I find them, and likewise fully qualified to accomplish the execution of the plan determined upon. It is also to be assumed that Mr. Sisson, who is an accountant, who knows nothing about the motion picture business, and who has never undertaken the execution of a business plan of this kind, is not as well qualified to exercise judgment or to dictate its administration.

Yet, in the final analysis, it would be Mr. Sisson's judgment which would control, for at all times he would be privileged to exercise the power of veto, so that in reality I could carry out no plans without keeping in close touch with him and using the time and energy of explaining them to him and convincing him; instead of meeting conditions as they arose; and, at all times, would be subject to his disapproval either of execution or of expenditures involved.

To thus jeopardize the cause of democracy by placing this work under the authority and control of one incompetent by training or experience to judge or to execute, would in my judgment be unpatriotic.

To determine definitely upon a plan of procedure before leaving for Russia is, of course, impossible. It might well be, that upon arriving in Petrograd or Moscow, I would find that such motion picture exhibitors as there are in Russia, would not readily take and exhibit the pictures to the extent desired, or that the Russian public which is extremely suspicious, would not believe that the pictures were sent by this Government, because of the fact that the exhibitors charged an admission, or that all the exhibitors would not furnish readers to read the Russian titles to the very large percentage of the illiterate, or that our enemies were causing the titles to be incorrectly read and the films to be destroyed by the operators, and that, therefore, it would be inadvisable at that time to establish a system of exchanges; that it might be decidedly more advantageous to obtain the largest theatre or theatres in each of the largest cities, and operate them simultaneously, of course with no admission price, from 9 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock in the night, or during the entire twenty-four hours, if the attendance warranted it, by the reason of the proclamations issued by Premier Kerensky, the military Governors of the Provinces and the Civic authorities calling upon the people of Russia to see these pictures, and, if necessary, with extensive advertising in addition to the proclamations; the program of pictures to be changed weekly, bimonthly, or monthly, as the attendance warranted, so that each unit of pictures would be shown to the greatest percentage of the people in each city, and to continue this process throughout the smaller cities, until the hamlets and the crossroads were finally reached. Or it might be that after the initial showing in the larger cities and the proclamations accompanying them, the people would be so aroused and so anxious to see the actual social, industrial and economic conditions of this country, that they would be willing to pay the exhibitors admission price, and that the product could be placed in the hands of the exhibitors without undue fear of its destruction through sinister influence, and that, therefore, the establishment of a system of exchanges would be more expeditious and economical.

Whatever the plan determined upon, each member of the small organization taken from this country, would be thoroughly competent to execute it, and to meet all conditions that would arise.

In fact, after quickly but thoroughly gaining the information as to the operating conditions now existing in Russia, a plan of procedure would be laid out, and the members of the American Unit would spread out over Russia with specific instructions, of which each would be thoroughly competent of execution. What section of Russia I myself would handle is, of course, unknown, but after determining upon the method of operation and developing the specific instructions, my own work would be of the same character as that of my associates.

Under these circumstances, I and my associates would at times be several thousand miles away from Mr. Sisson, and therefore unable to properly explain to him, or, if necessary, convince him of the desirability or necessity of certain expenditures or procedure, or may be, unable to communicate with him at all.

Such conditions would be both impracticable and intolerable in the interest of the results to be attained.

Evidently, the conditions under which exhibitions would be given to the Russian soldiers, would have to be met as I found them, for upon conferring at your request with Dr. Mott, the head of the Young Men's Christian Association, he was unable to tell me how many amusement centers they intended to operate; how many would be in existing barracks; how many they intended to build; when these would be constructed; how they would be equipped; whether he would be able to supply them with expert operators; whether he would furnish experts with which to

M. P. E. L. Protests Fifteen Cents Per Reel Tax

Lee Ochs Issues Eight-Page Letter, All of Which Cannot Be Crowded in Here, Setting Forth Exhibitors' Complaint

Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, on Saturday issued an eight-page open letter to the picture distributors regarding the fifteen cent per reel tax.

Mr. Ochs is at pains to explain that he is "acting merely as the mouthpiece of the exhibitors" in presenting the arguments against the manufacturers' attempt to collect the fifteen cent tax. Quoting the exhibitors the letter goes on to give the first really definite and exhaustive statement of the exhibitors' case. MOTION PICTURE NEWS suggests that the late receipt of the communication, it being delayed until after the Trade Review had appeared, makes it impossible to publish the letter in full. Briefly summarized the points it makes are as follows:

.."As the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, and acting as the mouthpiece of the exhibitors of the country, I feel it my duty to advise you that the exhibitors of the United States will not submit to your arbitrary action of recent date, namely, the imposition of a charge of fifteen cents per day per reel on all film leased by you, as a means of providing revenue with which to meet the footage tax on film as provided in section six hundred of the War Revenue Tax Law.

"I base this opinion on the hundreds of telegrams and letters which I have received and upon the action of exhibitor organizations all over the country since the first brief, curt, mandatory, notes were sent out by your exchange managers advising exhibitors of your arbitrary action.

"It is only through careful study and consideration of the mass of material that has come to me on this subject that I have felt the necessity of transmitting to you that what in reality amounts to a consensus of opinion of the exhibitors of the United States on this vitally important subject. I will endeavor to present to you the various arguments that have been advanced as to why this tax should be paid by you and not by the exhibitor. In doing this I am acting merely as the mouthpiece of the exhibitors, and take this means of pointing out to you that, if you persist in the attempt to collect this unjust charge, it will result in a period of strife and disharmony between distributor and exhibitor at a time when the interests of the industry, patriotism, and civilization, demand a united and co-ordinated body working in the closest co-operation and harmony.

"The exhibitors of the country cannot understand why you consider it necessary to gracefully slide out from under this tax and attempt to place it on their already overburdened shoulders.

"You have made statements in your meetings and in your advertising to the effect that you cannot pay this tax out of your own pockets and remain in business. Do you think that the exhibitor is in any better condition to pay the tax out of his pocket and remain in business, or do you think that he can arbitrarily collect it from his patrons without sacrificing a large part of his business? . . .

"It is by no means clear in the minds of exhibitors, although a statement often reiterated, that if you pay this tax you will be forced out of business. . . Do you mean to contend that it is impossible for you or your producers as business men to save the small sum of $1,575 in the production of a picture, a sum amounting to merely five and one-quarter per cent. in a picture costing $30,000, and a much smaller percentage in a product of higher cost? . . .

"The exhibitors of the country believe that it is the patriotic duty of every producer and distributor of motion pictures to assume and pay this tax, and, judging from the high prices which the exhibitors are called upon to pay for film, believe that the producers and distributors can well afford to pay it.

"The exhibitors point with pride to the fact that in every instance where they have been called upon to do something to aid the Government that they have responded willingly and enthustically. . . .

"The exhibitors emphatically call the attention of the other two branches of the industry to the fact that they are already overburdened with taxes. . . .

"It is their opinion that they should refuse to pay this charge of fifteen cents per day per reel because it is unjust in its method of application. They believe that the "average method" as worked out by the expert accountants employed by the distributors is unfair to everyone concerned, the producer, distributor, and exhibitor. They cannot believe that the average life of an average picture is only fifty to fifty-five days, especially when they are booking pictures that are two and three years old. . . .

"They believe the charge is unjust because it is discriminatory against the small exhibitor forcing him to pay a high percentage of taxation while the first-run man with the big house pays an infinitesmal percentage. . . .

"The exhibitors from all parts of the country hotly resent the arbitrary manner in which the distributors sought to impose this fifteen-cent charge upon them. . . .

"The exhibitors believe, granting for the sake of argument, that it was impossible for the distributor to pay this tax and remain in business, and that he was forced to pass it on to the exhibitor, that a more just and equitable way could have been found of apportioning it, instead of displaying the crass fear of the big first-run theatre which is manifest in the method they adopted.

"The exhibitors call your attention to the fact that many of your exchanges are endeavoring to collect the tax on pictures that were released prior to Oct. 4, 1917, the day on which the law went into effect. This, in their opinion, is nothing more or less than an attempt to collect money under false pretenses, as you, as distributors or producer, are not compelled to pay a tax on such pictures.

"The exhibitors are free to admit that the war revenue law as applied to motion picture films is unjust, inequitable and discriminatory. But they see no reason why, because Congress in its ignorance of the motion picture business, saw fit to pass a law of this kind, that the distributor who has not such an excuse should endeavor to continue the evil and seek to slide it off on the shoulders of the exhibitor. They believe that the remedy lies with Congress and that if the producer and distributor have been unjustly taxed they must seek relief from Congress and not from the exhibitor."

Rembusch Lays Blame on Lee Ochs

MOTION PICTURE NEWS herewith presents part of a communication from Frank Rembusch, national organizer of the A. E. A., concerning the exhibitors' war taxes. Mr. Rembusch delivers a stinging rebuke to Lee A. Ochs, on whose attitude since the beginning of the tax trouble he places the blame for most of the exhibitors' worries. The communication follows:

"The recent revenue act of Congress placed a tax on film stock, which tax went into effect immediately upon the passage of the law early in October. The tax amounts approximately to $5 per reel of 1,000 feet.

"Immediately following the N. A. M. P. I. held a meeting and the producers decided to pass this tax along to the exhibitors by charging each exhibitor 15c. per reel per day. On good authority we are advised that Lee Ochs voted the fourteen proxies of exhibitors directors in favor of placing the added burden on the exhibitors. Evidently Congress expected the film producers to pay this small tax out of their profits the same as any other business, but the producers decided that the exhibitors should not only pay the burden but they added sufficient to the bill as they passed it to net them a neat profit besides.

"For example. a reel that runs usually three hundred days will have earned $45 for exchanges, a profit of about $40 a reel, or about $200 on a five-reel feature per year. This is indeed a great injustice and exhibitors that have any backbone will never stand for it.

"Without asking the exhibitor, the film companies (excepting the Mutual Film Company and many of the state rights companies) added the 15c. per reel on the bills to the exhibitors. In some instances the film companies held up the show if the exhibitor refused to pay the tax. A storm of protests arose all over the country and meetings have been held all over the United States and exhibitors are uniting everywhere against this outrageous extortion on the part of the film exchanges.

"The American Exhibitors' Association wired their state presidents to stand against the imposition and a fight will be waged by the National Organization and the State Organization until not a single exhibitor will pay this tax. At this writing every exhibitor in Indiana, Oklahoma, North Carolina, Chicago, Illinois, and many other cities and states have pledged themselves that they will never submit.

"Arrangements are being made to cancel all services of the producers that insist upon adding the tax. The producers that are asking this tax are mostly all advance deposit producers and it is natural that they would be inclined to add every hardship to the exhibitors' burden as usual.

"This is the second time certain film producers have attempted to escape taxation on film stock by 'passing the buck' to the exhibitor and in each case Mr. Ochs has taken the side of the film interests against the exhibitor. It is presumed that because he runs a trade paper which depends on its existence by the advertisement of film interests that he cannot do otherwise. Exhibitors are realizing that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is being used by the film interests for their own selfish ends and the only hope for exhibitors is to join the American Exhibitors' Association, which is composed alone of bona-fide theatre owners or accredited managers.

"Here is a bit of history unknown to many exhibitors. Immediately after war was declared, Congress began work on a Revenue Bill which included a proposed tax on theatre admissions and another tax on film stock. We are asked to believe that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is instituted to protect the industry as a whole in a big, broad, unselfish way. It was at this time confronted with the most important question in its history. Did they call a meeting of the exhibitor-directors and counsel with them as to what the tax should be? Certainly not. However, the producers branch held a meeting and rushed off to Washington with Mr. Ochs advocating that the tax on film stock be entirely eliminated and all the tax for war purposes be placed upon the exhibitor.

"The frame-up was about like this: 'Dear Congress, don't tax film stock, because we expect to make the exhibitor pay it, if you do, in addition to the admission tax.' They did not stop here, but proceeded to state that this tax should be ten per cent on gross receipts. In other words, it mattered not what the exhibitor thought about it, 'we will ask for a high tax on the exhibitors and then Congress will leave us out.'

"Let any fair-minded person ask, did the N. A. M. P. I. do right in asking and specifying a tax without consulting the exhibitor? Was it not the business of the exhibitor to say what his tax should be? And does it not show a very selfish spirit on the part of the N. A. M. P. I. and prove that this organization is a film organization and that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is working into the hands of the film interests against the exhibitor? Has the N. A. M. P. I. ever done anything that helped the exhibitor? Has it not looked after the film interests first, last and always as a general thing?

"Last Spring Mr. Ochs camouflaged the exhibitor by wiring exhibitors everywhere to ask their representative to favor a tax like the Canadian tax. Many exhibitors followed his instructions, not knowing about the frame-up, and we now have the unique spectacle of exhibitors being at present greatly alarmed about the results to their business from the present tax and the record that Congress will now show that they advocated and practically said to Congress, 'Please put a tax of ten per cent on my gross receipts.'

"There is no reason why film producers should not pay their tax and support the Government the same as the rest of us. Let them cut down the general extravagance practised in production and distribution and the salaries of great stars. The interest they get on the money exhibitors have up in advance deposits will pay the tax many times over. If a great company like the Mutual can pay the film tax the balance of the producers should be able to do likewise or go out of business."

John Francis Skerrett Dies

John Francis Skerrett, vice president and general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, died on the morning of November 10 following an illness of several months.

He was forty-two years of age, and is survived by a wife and infant son.

The Power official was a pioneer in the picture game, having been a municipal inspector in the days when pictures were introduced in New York and film trailed through the machine down into baskets or often over the balcony rail to the orchestra. He joined the Power forces several years ago and in addition to being one of the most popular of film men, gained a wide reputation as an executive.

Numerous prominent film men were present at the funeral services, held Monday, at ten o'clock.

Public Takes Kindly to Tax to-goodness tax, levied by the Government itself, and that it is not a hold-up on the part of the exhibitors; that it is no trick to get a few more pennies. This is the trouble we experienced in Canada, when we were compelled to do the bidding of the powers that be.

I said that the big idea was to impress the people with the truth of the matter. The Canadian plan is a feasible one, and a replica of that in vogue in Paris.

I would suggest that a theatre have roll tickets printed, with the words "War Tax" prominent, and also show the denomination, viz., one cent, two cents, or three cents, etc. Then have a sign prominently displayed at the entrance of the theatre explaining the new ruling. The War Tax Ticket is to be presented to the doorman, together with the regular admission ticket. Have the tax tickets numbered in the usual way, so that you can check up with the cashier. Allow patrons to buy more than one ticket at a time. This stops future congestion at the box office, and also helps the patron to eliminate the nuisance of carrying a lot of pennies in his pocket. You will find that usually you will sell more tax tickets than admissions. Feature the two words all the time, War Tax, WAR TAX!

The greatest thing that could happen would be for all the exhibitors in a town or city to get together and agree to use uniform tickets, all the same style, and thereby convince the people that the tax comes from the same source and goes to the same treasury. M. KASHIN.

War Tax Added to Admissions in Illinois City

At a special meeting of all the motion picture managers of Quincy, Ill., at the Orpheum theatre in that city last week, it was decided to add the war tax to the admission price at each theatre in town, with no exceptions. Business has been reported good in that section, and the exhibitors have expressed themselves as very well pleased with the outlook for business during the coming months.

Exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska Divided on Tax

While many exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska are paying the 15-cents-per-day-per-reel tax charged by many of the exchanges, others are refusing, and exchanges in Omaha have received a flood of cancellations. The exhibitors, in their letters to these exchanges, complain that the tax is not just; that the distributing companies are making a big war profit, and they will not pay it.

Exchanges whose companies are not collecting the tax report a big increase in business during the first week of Nevember. "Our increased business will more than pay the $7.50, each 1,000-foot reel will cost us in Government tax," said one exchange man.

A committee appointed at a recent meeting of the Iowa and Nebraska exhibitors at Omaha to investigate the 15-cents-per-reel-per-day and report back whether it is just and whether the exhibitors should pay it, had not reported on Nov. 4. The exhibitors voted to pay the 15-cents-per-reel-per-day under protest, until advised of the instructions of the committee. Many of them are not waiting for the instructions, but others are all paying the charge under protest.

Triangle and Mutual Win Exhibitors' Thanks

Decision to Absorb Reel Tax Brings Forth Avalanche of Favor from All Parts of Country—Move Will, No Doubt, Repay Them

THE announced decision of the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the Mutual Film Corporation to absorb the fifteen-cents-a-reel tax on films going to the exhibitor has called forth a volley of "Thank yous!" from all sections of the country, and both companies appear certain that their move in this connection will be rewarded many times over in gratitude and business from the exhibitors.

In discussing the new war tax shouldered upon the industry, Y. F. Freeman, general manager of Triangle Distributing Corporation, made the following statement as to the position Triangle would take with the exhibitors:

"It is not our belief that the tax of 15 cents a reel imposed upon film manufacturers was intended by the United States Government to be paid by exhibitors, as they have already been taxed 10 per cent. on admission charges. We believe that film producers and distributors should bear their just proportion of the new tax, and we are not in sympathy with any plan that is intended to throw an additional burden on the shoulders of exhibitors. It is for this reason that we have announced to Triangle exhibitors that we will pay the entire tax of 15 cents a reel levied upon Triangle productions."

The attitude of Triangle on the question of war taxes is another indication of the endeavor of the largest producers to treat all exhibitors fairly and squarely. That this announcement is appreciated by Triangle exhibitors is illustrated by the following letter received from J. R. Rainey of the Princess theatre, Clarksville, Texas: "Let me take this opportunity to express my appreciation of Triangle's policy in regard to the war tax. While I think it is nothing more than right that the producers should bear their part, as the exhibitors are to pay their 10 per cent. of the gross receipts, nevertheless you will certainly win favor of the exhibitors, as most of the exchanges are already trying to collect this item from the exhibitors."

President John R. Freuler's announcement that the Mutual Film Corporation would absorb the Federal excise tax and notifying exhibitors that Mutual branch managers had been instructed to cancel the assessment of 15 cents per reel, brought forth a deluge of letters and messages of congratulation and commendation.

Organized exhibitors passed resolutions of commendation, officers of exhibitor organizations, local and state, sent letters of congratulation, and individual exhibitors, from coast to coast, wrote Mr. Freuler voicing the thanks of the exhibitor for his help in handling one of the most difficult situations which has ever confronted the industry.

Resolutions of the Chicago Theatre Owners' Association, affiliated with the American Exhibitors' Association, signed by Louis H. Frank, W. J. Mulligan and E. Thomas Beatty, commended Mutual's action, and follows in part: "Whereas, the motion picture distributors of the United States have, arbitrarily and unjustly, and we believe unlawfully, decreed that each reel of film shall be assessed 15 cents to cover the Federal war excise tax; and whereas this assessment, now in force, works an undue hardship upon the exhibitor of motion pictures, jeopardizes his business; and whereas, the Mutual Film Corporation, through its president, John R. Freuler, has announced its determination to absorb the war excise tax and instructed the managers of its various exchanges to cancel the 15-cent assessment; therefore be it resolved by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association that the thanks and commendation of its members be extended to the Mutual Film Corporation and its president for their fairness and justice in meeting this situation."

Attendance in Pennsylvania Holds Up Well

Reports received by MOTION PICTURE NEWS from its representative in Harrisburg, Pa., indicate that at the end of the first week in which the war tax on tickets has been in force there has not been any serious falling off in motion picture theatre attendance in Central Pennsylvania. Many of these houses have raised their prices and are paying the tax out of the receipts.

In cases were attendances have dwindled to some slight extent, theatre managers for the most part report that increased revenues coming from the higher prices of tickets fully if not more than offset any loss which might be expected to result from the small reduction in the number of theatre patrons.

Practically All Raise Prices

In practically all of the theatres in the cities of 50,000 or more population in central and eastern Pennsylvania, which had been charging only 10 cents admission, the placing of the war tax on theatre tickets resulted in increases of the admission price to 15 cents. The placing of the tax was regarded as presenting an opportunity for exhibitors to put into effect increases in admission prices that most of them have for some time felt should be in force. Many exhibitors, however, had some misgivings as to whether the boost to 15 cents would not result in such a falling off in attendance as to cause a falling off in net revenue, but

Varner Defines Purpose of Organization

A Letter Well Deserving Publication, Written by H. B. Varner to Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles

H. B. Varner of the A. E. A. has sent the following admirable letter to Mr. Glenn Harper, secretary of the Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles, Cal.:

DEAR MR. HARPER: There is no end to the things that you can accomplish as an association that will be profitable to the individual theatre owners. First, you should have a good organization with practically all theatre owners in it. You should discuss and have all the members to engage in the discussion as to the best method of conducting a theatre, not only how to make money for yourself, but you should study what is best for your respective communities—try to eliminate objectionable pictures, and the theatres should join in with the community and work for the best interests of all the people from a moral and civic standpoint.

Through an organization you can use your influence to repeal objectionable laws in your state affecting your business. That one point is of great importance. As an organized body you can prevent discriminating against your business in the various towns and cities where your members do business. The biggest piece of business that you can do at the present time is to get your people all lined up to fight the obnoxious and burdensome tax that was placed on the industry by the extra session of Congress—a 10 per cent tax on admissions, as well as a footage tax, for the theatres either have to pay this tax themselves or pass it on to the public, and we as theatre owners ought to protect the public when it is in our power to do so.

Personally, I have been fighting the battles for the exhibitors of the nation to the best of my ability for more than three years in Washington without reward or hope of reward, and with very little cooperation from the theatre owners of the country. If we had been organized properly and had put forth the proper effort at the extra session of Congress we would not now be burdened with this unjust tax on admission. I fought the matter through the Senate Finance Committee and through the United States Senate, and motion picture admissions were exempted from taxation up to and including 25-cent shows; but I got disgusted and practically quit, and the result is that we are in trouble.

What your organization should do is to have each individual member to personally interview as many of your Congressmen and Senators as possible and urge them to repeal the tax on admissions, and you should have each member to write a strong letter to the Congressmen and Senators from California, calling attention to the fact that the moving picture exhibitors of the country have been extremely patriotic during the period of this war and have done everything in their power for the Red Cross, for Food Conservation, to sell Liberty Bonds, for enlistment in the Army and Navy, and that they have stood loyally back of the President and Congress in this great crisis, and are hoping to continue to do this patriotic work. And then go on to show that this tax is unjust, that no other business in the country has been so burdened, and try to get it thoroughly impressed that the motion picture exhibitors are not all rich and that they are not making any more money than anybody else.

The great trouble has been that we have done too much blowing and bragging about the amount of money we were making when there was no ground for it.

Last, but by no means least, you should get hooked up with the national organization that is in sympathy with your business. Up to the present time the old Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has not done enough for the exhibitors to justify their existence. On account of this fact a new organization was born in Chicago last July known as the American Exhibitors' Association, composed of nothing but bona-fide exhibitors, with headquarters in the Times Building, New York City, in charge of Chas. C. Pettijohn as general manager.

This new organization has been busy getting together the greatest organization of exhibitors ever before organized in the United States, and it is the purpose of this new body to perfect a strong organization in every state in the Union and in that way be in position to be a powerful influence for bringing forth a better day for the exhibitors of the nation. When this organization is completed and is properly financed they propose to have a representative to look after legislation in the interest of the exhibitors in the Capitol of the nation. Your association should be a part of this organization, and your influence should be felt not only in California but in the Capitol of the nation. I feel confident that Congress has no desire to be unjust to the exhibitors of this country. The trouble is that members of Congress have not been properly informed as to our conditions and our needs.

The only way we can succeed is by organization. Every exhibitor in the nation should stand together, because what is best for the exhibitor in North Carolina is best for the exhibitor in California, and when we exhibitors benefit ourselves we naturally are benefiting the entire motion picture industry. Your organization should be one of the instruments to assist in getting the industry of the nation to work together to save it from itself.

With best wishes, I am

Very truly yours,

H. B. VARNER.

Directors' Association Addressed by Jos. Farnham

At the last meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association in New York, the members were addressed by Joseph Farnham, president of the Screen Club and general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. During the business session the following directors were elected to membership: James Kirkwood, Roscoe Arbuckle, Hobart Henley, Carroll Fleming, George Irving and Charles F. Miller.

Rodgers Shows Exhibitors How to Save Money

National Organizer David C. Rodgers, of the M. P. E. L. of A., has been in Nebraska recently helping the League of that state gain in membership, and incidentally showing the exhibitors a few methods of economy.

It is announced that the Nebraska plan of annual dues will be changed to dues of one cent per year per seat, with an additional $1 a year for the support of the National Association.

"We are showing the exhibitors where they can save one year's dues in the matter of lights alone," said Mr. Rodgers. "Combining in the League, they can buy lamps 35 per cent cheaper than they could by making individual purchases."

Deitrich Resigns from International Service

Theodore C. Deitrich, for years with the editorial departments of Hearst papers, and who, during the past two years, has been advertising and publicity director of Hearst's International Film Service, has turned in his resignation, to take effect November 22, it was announced this week. It is understood that Mr. Dietrich expects to enter the motion picture producing field as president and general manager of an organization recently incorporated.

tirely on trade publications for his viewpoint. Those who have the opportunity to be in touch with central points such as New York and Philadelphia know just how much of the advertising, news and reviews can be depended upon to be the truth. It is an unfortunate condition that no trade paper is entirely free of these false items—and some are worse than others.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is my favorite trade paper. I read seven weekly publications devoted to trade events but none can compare with the NEWS. And yet—even the NEWS hasn't the courage to call a spade a spade, when from the standpoint of theory your first duty is to your readers and not to your advertisers. The company that made the picture mentioned in your editorial may, perhaps, benefit by your mild reproof, but your exhibitor will go on carrying the wrong impression.

Dare you in the present instance show up the glaring example of fraudulent advertising which I have labelled Exhibits "B" and "C"? With best regards, I am

Very truly yours,

WALTER BROOKS.

The Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa.

[Exhibitor Brooks encloses as Exhibit "B" an advertisement of Pathe's "To-Day," and "The Mad Lover," which declares "The Pennsylvania Board of Censorship passed these remarkable features with high commendation." As Exhibit "C" he encloses the official report of the Pennsylvania Board of Censorship on "To-Day." Suffice it to say that ad and report are far from agreeing.

We thank Mr. Brooks for his declaration that MOTION PICTURE NEWS is his favorite trade paper. We will thank him again should he give us further opportunity to "show our courage."—ED.]

train operators; or what equipment the amusement centers would possess, and I procured for him an expert and worked with the expert in laying out the full detail of projection equipment units to meet all conditions, and now you instruct me to put the "Y. M. C. A. matter to one side for the moment."

With conditions such as these, it is apparent that the important matter of serving the troops with the educational pictures would have to be determined and executed, unexplained to or unapproved by Mr. Sisson. I am inclined to think that with the press of important matters, it has been impossible for you to give sufficient consideration to the matter in question, to realize that the proper execution of the work in Russia would constitute a big business undertaking for which but one head must be responsible for the results produced.

In other words, no one not an experienced executive in the handling, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, would be any more competent to pass judgment upon my plans than he would be to lay out for me a complete and sufficient equipment of projection, either with or without electrical current, or for exhibitions both within doors or without, for it was my intention as soon as the weather broke, to give outdoor exhibitions to ten or twenty thousand troops at a showing, and to have portable equipment by which the entire population of a town could witness a unit of the pictures each evening, or to lay out for me complete exchange equipment to meet conditions under which not even wrapping paper can be obtained.

It of course follows that I could not undertake to handle the moneys necessary for the work of the American Unit any more than I would undertake to handle the moneys involved in the conduct of this company, and that such business must necessarily be attended to by Mr. Sisson, or some other accountant appointed as the official disbursing agent for the Government, but to place such agent in "absolute authority" and to compel me to abide by a rule that "all expenditures before being incurred must receive his approval," would make accomplishment impossible.

With regard to receiving an appointment by the President, I beg to refresh your recollection upon our conversation at your office, the morning of September 18, in which you stated, in reply to questions, that the executives would be responsible solely to the President; that all expenditures would be paid from the Presidential Emergency Fund, and that we would be under the full responsibility of establishing a distribution organization in the respective countries to which we would be sent, and in executing the work of distribution. This Mr. Brady confirmed by assuring us that we would be appointed for the work by the President. Moreover, my understanding from you was, that the pictures to be exhibited in these foreign countries were to be presented as the pictures sent by the United States Government. The title which you say was suggested, "The American Cinema Commission in Europe," implies that the executives were to receive a commission directly from the Government. The authority to present these pictures in behalf of the Government would not, so far as I can see, involve any ambassadorial powers.

In the case of Russia and its present labor conditions, by which labor is almost unobtainable, it would seem that if it became necessary to establish a system of exchanges, or to operate a chain of theatres, that I might be compelled to request the Government of Russia to some extent to detail intelligent soldiers to perform the services, or would be obliged to appeal to the class of people who gratuitously render services in this country in behalf of such causes as the Red Cross, to volunteer their services in spreading the real facts regarding America. Under these circumstances, it would seem that direct appointment by the President would make success much easier of accomplishment.

With regard to a military rank or the wearing of a uniform, the suggestion arose by virtue of information obtained by Mr. Marian and Mr. Powers from persons in a position to judge, and thereafter by statements made to me by Mr. and Mrs. Kaplan who have lived in Russia for the last four years, including the period of revolution and many months thereafter, and with whom some of your representatives consulted regarding the motion picture conditions there, to the effect that the work would be tremendously facilitated, particularly in the most difficult distribution problem to be handled, that of transportation, if the members of the American Unit possessed a military title. Personally, I have no desire to possess a military title or uniform for the sake of my own pride, but I do desire both of them if they would be an asset to the cause; in other words, if the work would be facilitated and the cause thereby advanced, they ought, if possible, be granted as an asset to results, not for the sake of personal pride; for with so much depending upon the exhibition of the pictures in Russia, the cause ought to be granted every possible asset, so as to best cope with conditions now existing in that country. Under these circumstances, a direct appointment by the President or a military title, or both, would be thoroughly consistent with your favor of October 24, in which you say that I was to be granted "all proper recognition" with which to produce success to the fullest extent.

As to the matter of salary, this item can be entirely eliminated as far as I am concerned, and I have no doubt that this statement applies as well to Mr. Powers and Mr. Marion. The $5,000 per year, as you know, was considered for the purpose of partly covering personal expenses. With most necessary articles practically unobtainable, and with the price of those that are obtainable, advanced from several hundred to several thousands of per cent, and with the necessity of the American Unit to take with it even stable articles of food, such as flour, tea and coffee, it is reasonable to assume that my personal expenses for which in traveling about Russia, I could not always account to the Government by voucher, would several times exceed the amount of my compensation. As I explained to you, I looked upon this item merely as one which would partially cover expenses out of my own pocket.

As to being given supreme power in Russia to conduct the business at hand, and to direct the expenditures necessary to produce the quickest and best results, such authority would follow as a matter of course, otherwise no competent man could undertake the work. And this is precisely in accord with our understanding, for in your favor of October 24, you say that you understood that the Motion Picture Industry "in return for full authority and all proper recognition would take charge of the film campaign in Russia," and yet in the latter part of the same favor you say that Mr. Sisson "will be in absolute authority," and that "all expenditures before being incurred must receive his approval."

As I explained to you, I would only attempt to handle the matter in a big way, fully consistent with the presentation by the United States Government, and with getting the largest percentage of people to thinking upon the same subject at the same time; and I assume that the Government would want me to conduct its business in just such a manner, for my observation is that Governments at war make all expenditures necessary to produce all possible influences in the winning of the war, whether such influences be large or small.

If the Government desires me to undertake this work in a manner that will mean success, I shall be only too happy to do so; if it does not desire me so to do, I will be very greatly disappointed, in not being able to do my "bit." But, as a patriot, I feel that it would not be the part of good conscience for me to undertake a work involving such splendid possibilities under conditions which, in my judgment, would make for failure.

Sincerely,
WALTER W. IRWIN.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION
Washington, D. C.
October 31, 1917.

Mr. Walter W. Irwin,
1600 Broadway,
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Irwin: I have read your letter with close attention and deep interest, and the change in plans does not affect my appreciation of your patriotic desire to serve. The authority that you wished was promised, and could only have been given, under the Motion Picture Industry's assumption of all expenses. When it became necessary for the Government to assume the entire burden, it became equally necessary for the Government to assume control.

You are mistaken in assuming that Mr. Sisson is an accountant. I have been placed in full charge of the entire Russian matter, and Mr. Sisson, as Associate Chairman, went to Russia as my personal representative, concerned not only with the motion picture end of our campaign, but with the campaign as a whole.

I have been fortunate in making some new arrangements that will carry out my plan effectively, and I shall always be sorry that our differing views prevented me from accepting your offer of service. As new things come up, I hope to be able to call upon you with every assurance of your willingness to aid.

Believe me,
Very sincerely,
GEORGE CREEL,
Chairman.

November 3, 1917.

Hon. George Creel, Chairman,
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Creel: I greatly appreciate the kindly expressions in your favor of October 31, and deeply wish for the undertaking the fullest results.

If anything new arises in which I can be of service, I beg of you to call upon me with the assurance of my eagerness to be of assistance.

Very sincerely,
WALTER W. IRWIN.

Review Board Co-operates With First National

It was announced last week that arrangements have been made with J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., whereby the productions of that organization will be reviewed systematically by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Mr. Williams has expressed it as the desire of the First National, in line with its policy to present to the country the best productions possible, to co-operate with the National Board to the fullest extent.

Greene Urges Continuation of Patriotic Spirit

Concerning the subject of patriotism as applied to the motion picture industry, Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, said last week: "The motion picture men should be thankful that the President of the United States recognizes the importance of the industry. We must not rest, however, but should stand behind the President as a unit. Patriotic slides can be exhibited, and Old Glory should be unfurled from the top of every picture house in America."

Henderson's "Road to France" Read in Public

Daniel M. Henderson, advertising director of McClure Pictures and the Petrova Pictures Company, claims the distinction of having his war poem, "The Road to France," read at the Army and Navy Bazaar recently. He was awarded $250 by the National Art Club for the poem.

Another Triangle Employee Joins the Colors

Donald Fullen, the latest Triangle employee to heed the call of the war bugle, has chosen a rather unusual field in which to do his bit. He plans to go to Seattle to enter the employ of a shipbuilding concern, and will help increase Uncle Sam's merchant marine.

Raver's "Public Defender" Shown at Progress Club

"The Public Defender," Harry Raver's screen production of Mayer C. Goldman's story of the same name, was shown at the Progress Club last Sunday evening.

The exhibition of "The Public Defender," which was arranged through the courtesy of Harry Raver, brought out a large attendance. Among those present were: Judge David Weil, of the Municipal Court, Supreme Court Justice Warley Platzek, Judge Leo Prince, Max D. Steuer, and Saul Rogers, attorneys.

"The Public Defender" met with an enthusiastic reception. A letter of appreciation was sent to Mr. Raver by a leading member of the Progress Club, and stated in part: "The audience applauded the picture generously at its conclusion and countless members expressed their appreciation of 'The Public Defender' both in the light of a powerful argument for a necessary reform and as an excellent entertainment as well."

National Association Computes Footage Tax

Price, Waterhouse and Company Assert Law Is in Some Respects Ambiguous—Cite Ways to Collect Tax on Reels

PRICE, WATERHOUSE & COMPANY, of 54 William Street, New York, in compliance with a request from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for a computation of the recently imposed footage tax, replied as follows:

"At your request we have computed the cost of footage taxes imposed on film by the War Excise Tax Law of 1917. The law is in some respects ambiguous; the figures given herein are based on an interpretation of the law agreed upon by your members and are subject to the final determination of the meaning of the act:

(1) The tax will be imposed only on film released after October 4, 1917.

(2) The tax—one-half cent per foot—Sec. 600 X—will be paid only once on each print, not paid each time the print is leased.

"Upon this basis the cost would be nearly 9-10 cent per foot of released positive, the taxes being one-half cent on released prints, one-quarter cent on raw stock, including waste and prints not released, together with one-quarter cent on negative raw film, none of which is leased.

"Sec. 1007 provides that where contracts are made prior to May 9, 1917, the film owner may collect the tax from the lessee. We understand that you have agreed that the manufacturer or producer must in some way make a charge to the lessee to cover this footage tax. This can be done in several ways, some of which are as follows:

(1) Collect the whole tax from the exhibitor who first releases a print. This would be easy for the manufacturer but unjust to the exhibitor. If the latter happened to get a new copy he would pay the whole tax. Sec. 1007 of the law cited, however, seems to contemplate just this method.

(2) Division of the tax among the successive lessees of a print. Unfortunately no one can tell in advance how many times a given print will be leased; the accounting would be burdensome; the plan is not easily worked.

(3) An average charge on all film leased; the charge to be sufficient to reimburse the manufacturer for taxes paid.

"Plan No. 1 is too unjust for serious thought.

"Plan No. 2 is theoretically correct, but the work it would entail would double the total cost of the tax. It would offer special difficulty in the case of replacements of reels or parts of reels, because such replacements if made after October 1, 1917, would pay footage tax. You would have the anomaly of subjects, some copies of which were not taxed, some partly and some wholly taxable.

"Upon the whole, the third method appears to be best. If adopted, the charge to exhibitors would take the form of an addition to the rental of a fixed amount per reel per day, the amount being computed as follows:

Cost (per reel) of taxes—approximately $8.75. Number of rental days earned by each print as per estimate furnished to us and according to the best information we can obtain—average 50. Cost of tax per rental day, per reel—16 cents.

"So far as we can ascertain the average of rental days given above is reasonable.

"The charge would apply on all film, old or new, the manufacturer pays the full tax upon release, and the charge would have to be applied on all film to reimburse the manufacturer's outlay. On the other hand, upon the repeal of the law the charge should cease immediately, although there would then be much film in use on which tax had been paid.

"Even this plan would entail much additional clerical work. The number of tax items would be the same as the number of entries of film rentals, the individual amounts being very small."

Clark to Manage First National Exchange

Will Also Be Treasurer of New Organization, with Quarters in Fifth Avenue—Distribute Subjects in New York Territory

WITH the appointment of R. H. Clark, long associated with the Turner & Dahnken interests on the Pacific Coast, as general manager and treasurer of the new First National Exchange, all speculation as to who would manage the affairs of the new organization were brought to a halt. The quarters of the company are at 509 Fifth avenue.

Mr. Clark's experience began with Turner & Dahnken in San Francisco when their exchange business was taken over by the General Film Company. He left them to associate himself with Sol Lesser, who had just contracted for all the Mutual Single releases. When the World Film Corporation opened its San Francisco offices he was chosen for manager, remaining in that capacity two and one-half years, when he resigned to reassociate himself with Turner & Dahnken as manager of their Tivoli Opera House, which post he held until placed in charge of the new T. & D. theatre in Oakland.

Mr. Clark is surrounding himself with a staff thoroughly familiar with local conditions. Although it will be a few days before the new firm is fully ready for business, Mr. Clark and his salesmen will be on hand to discuss bookings of Chaplin's new "signature-protected" comedies and Petrova films. He states that other releases will be added as rapidly as quality productions can be purchased on the open market.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Universal Files Counter Suit Against Baruch

Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which was sued recently for $50,000 alleged damages by Dr. Baruch for showing in its "Current Events" Baruch walking with former Ambassador Von Bernstorff, has instructed its attorneys to enter a denial that they "falsely and maliciously" intended to injure him, it was announced by Universal this week.

The answer, according to Universal, will contain the allegation, backed by affidavits by Jack Cohn, manager of "Current Events," that Dr. Baruch personally asked Cohn to take the picture, and, when Cohn refused, Baruch carried his appeal to President Laemmle.

Cinekrome Color Pictures Shown at Wurlitzer Hall

The latest results of the natural color cinematographers were unfolded before a trade audience by the American Cinekrome Corporation at Wurlitzer Hall, New York, on Friday evening, November 9.

The demonstration consisted of a short program of miscellaneous scenes designed to show the ability of the Cinekrome process to reproduce all sorts of color schemes.

The process was evolved and worked out by the Kunz, Wheeler Moffat Company, of Boston, and a feature of the new system is the use of a duplex projecting machine, this most ingenious piece of mechanism having been designed by J. E. Robin of the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company, New York, and specially constructed for the Kunz, Wheeler, Moffat Company, under Mr. Robin's supervision.

A technical description and review of the Cinekrome process will appear in the Camera Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in due course.

Special Features Buys "Raffles" State Rights

The Special Features Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., has bought the first block of territory for the open market production, "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman,"" it was announced last week. This territory includes Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, and marks a precedent in state rights circle, as it is probably the first time southern territory has been disposed of before other parts of the country were sold.

"Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," is being handled by Hiller and Wilk, and the picture stars John Barrymore.

New Mary Pickford-Artcraft Picture Is Started

Following "The Little Princess," the current Mary Pickford feature through Artcraft, the star's next production will be "Stella Maris," it was announced last week by Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation. Work on the picture has already started at the Hollywood Studio, under the direction of Marshall Neilan, who was recently drafted in the National Army but was discharged on account of poor eyesight.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

R. O. Proctor, general manager of Standard Film Corporation, Chicago, arrived in New York last week to look over the market.

S. L. Rothapfel, director of the Rialto theatre, left New York last week for the West where he will spend his vacation. Mr. Rothapfel will spend a week or more in the Southwest.

Carl Pierce, manager of Artcraft Service Department, returned Monday from Montreal, Canada, where he spent several days visiting the various theatres carrying the Artcraft service.

Lewis J. Selznick left last Friday on a business trip to Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. Mr. Selznick will visit the Select exchanges in the above cities.

Ben Friedman, Friedman Film Corporation, Indianapolis, is in New York on business. Mr. Friedman is making his headquarters at Hiller and Wilk, Longacre Building.

Joseph Partridge, division manager, U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, left last week for a trip through the West in the interest of the company. Mr. Partridge is organizing the sales forces.

William Alexander, U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has returned to New York from business trips to Boston, Philadelphia and other large cities where he arranged for trade showings of the company's first release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

Joseph F. Lee, who is handling the exploitation of Charles Rankin's independent feature, "A Modern Lorelei," returned to New York last Wednesday from a business trip to Pittsburgh and other points south. Mr. Lee disposed of the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory for this production.

Rothapfel Leads Exhibitors in Thanksgiving Week Smoke Fund Drive

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theatre, New York, has agreed to turn over five per cent. of his total receipts during Tranksgiving week to the motion picture division of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," realizing his patriotic opportunity in helping to supply that prime necessity of trench life—tobacco!

Mr. Rothapfel has written a letter, copies of which will go out to every known exhibitor in the country, urging them also to contribute a small share of their Thanksgiving week receipts for this praiseworthy cause.

The letter follows:

Dear Sirs: A copy of this letter will be sent to every known moving picture exhibitor in the United States. It is written in an effort to mobilize, during the week in which Thanksgiving Day occurs, all of the tremendous force of the combined effort of moving picture theatres in this country in support of a nation-wide movement to supply our soldiers at the front with tobacco.

This national movement was organized and is maintained by Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund, 25 West Forty-fourth street, New York City, to which hundreds of newspapers, magazines and trade journals throughout the country have lent their powerful support. Scores of tons of tobacco have already been shipped to the boys at the front. Hundreds of tons will be needed. The tobacco is supplied at absolute cost by the five greatest tobacco companies in the country, acting in co-operation. Labor, transportation, office facilities—everything is donated free of charge. Not one cent contributed is spent for anything but tobacco at cost of manufacture. Every dollar contributed purchases two dollars' worth of tobacco at retail price. There is no waste.

The Rialto of New York City has investigated the entire project with the utmost care and respectfully invites your sincere co-operation. The Rialto will contribute 5 per cent. of its gross receipts to Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund during the week beginning Sunday, November 25, 1917, and urges you to do the same.

Write today to Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund, notifying them that you will do this. Our fighting men somewhere in France will know and will not forget. Do Your Bit.

The Rialto,
S. L. Rothapfel,
Managing Director.

Motion Picture Division of the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund

Total to date.....$363.03

A SPLENDID patriotic opportunity is given to every American exhibitor to be of some use to our soldiers in France. They want "smokes" more than anything you can send them. Motion Picture News, which is the official organ of the campaign, urges all exhibitors to place receptacles in their lobbies, for the collection of coins and packages of cigarettes.

No cigarettes can be accepted except in original packages and on which the revenue stamp has not been broken. This is an order from the Government.

How to Go About It

1. Send to Motion Picture News for a card, inviting your patrons to drop pennies and packages of cigarettes into the bowl or box provided.

2. Arrange with the commissary department of your nearest cantonment for distributing (unbroken) packages of cigarettes. In case you have superfluous packages send them directly to Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.

3. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check sent weekly to Motion Picture News. For every 25 cents you collect, you will receive a postal of thanks direct from the trenches. For example: If you contribute $10, you will receive 40 postcards of thanks direct from the trenches in France. These should be displayed in your lobby, photographed for slides or sent out to your mailing list.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Rowland?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game—Caught in Action! —Next Week—Adolph Zukor

By William A. Johnston

"MR. ROWLAND," I began, "I have been commissioned by MOTION PICTURE NEWS to interview you; I—"

Mr. Rowland raised a detaining hand. He swiveled his chair, cocked his hat, and deposited two nattily leathered feet upon his desk. His socks were of purplish hue, matching purplish stripes in his shirt.

"Easy," he counseled. "Easy. You mean you commissioned yourself. Let's cut out the bull, now, and begin right. Shoot!"

"Fine! Mr. Rowland," I replied. "Fine! I'll put down your exact words. That's just what I want—an intimate view of your natural self."

"More bull," said Mr. Rowland tersely. "If you took down my exact words you couldn't print them. You know that."

"Very well. Very well. Suppose then we try something conventional. For instance—do you know, Mr. Rowland, why you were chosen to head this series of interviews?"

"Certainly. You and I agreed to it, didn't we?"

"Yes—yes, I know. But we can't say that. We ought to—"

Mr. Rowland laughed sardonically. "Say, why did you pick on me, anyway? Zukor's out of town, isn't he?" he asked suddenly.

"Yes, he's on the West Coast."

"I thought so." Mr. Rowland looked bored. "Say, honestly," he began, "I don't want any of this publicity stuff. Why don't you hand it to our stars? Say." Mr. Rowland grew suddenly interested. "There's an idea! Open up with me—you know—just mention my name and then give a bunch of stuff to each star." Mr. Rowland grew serious and earnest. "Can't you help me out on that? You know—just a little rot about each one. We've got to hand it to them, you know. Be a good fellow." Here Mr. Rowland grew genially playful and leaning over confidentially flicked his cigarette ashes in the interviewer's vest pocket.

"Sorry," I said. "Sorry, Mr. Rowland. But this is on you. Now, why can't we say that you were chosen first because you stand out as a remarkable combination of all branches of the industry. You are an exhibitor, a distributor, a producer."

"Producer?" queried Mr. Rowland. "Well, maybe. I might admit it to you—confidentially. But if I say so it will make some of the boys sore—"

Mr. Rowland looked at his watch. "That reminds me. I'm due in the projection room right away now—"

"But, Mr. Rowland, you haven't told me about yourself."

"See Joe Engel," said Mr. Rowland absently. "I refuse to be quoted."

"But Mr. Engel referred me to you."

Mr. Rowland yawned. "You'll have to excuse me," he said. "I've got to go in and swear at a picture."

Here are a few things said offhand about Mr. Rowland by his co-workers and other acquaintances:

"He is essentially and truly democratic."

"He never worries."

"He shakes trouble easily and is a sort of human buttercup."

"He hates unfairness."

"He will not tolerate a man in his organization who plays selfishly."

"He sticks up for his friends."

"He genuinely enjoys the film game."

"He puts organization first in his business world."

"He is open-handed with ideas—anybody can have them who wants them."

"His clothes are like his attitude toward life—snappy and colorful."

"He believes in efficiency, but not efficiency in art."

"He computes figures as fast as an insurance actuary. He can figure in a twinkling the minimum and maximum receipts on a picture."

"He believes that honesty and fair play in business are of more value than capital."

"He cannot tolerate people who are slow — he wants always an instant answer."

"He detests self-conceit."

"He believes that an employee should never be so busy that his head is not above his job."

"He says that the idea never counts—it's the man who puts it over."

"He is human and eminently sensible."

EXPLANATION:—"Extra"—extra big business getter; "Big"—unusually good; "Ave."—average, not an exceptional picture; "Poor"—not a box-office picture.

A Question of Honesty

WE are in receipt of a letter from Mr. Henry Goldman, of Green Bay, Wis., who says he has compared our reports with pictures he has run in his house and NINE TIMES OUT OF TEN found them wrong and ALWAYS in favor of the picture.

You do not mean these box office reports, Mr. Goldman, or if you do you are the man who needs most to learn that these reports ARE HONEST.

If you refer to our reviews of pictures, Mr. Goldman, we wish to call to your attention that the reviewer's name is always given, and if he has injured you by reporting too favorably on the picture these box office reports will give you something besides your opinion to back up your complaint.

WE gladly accept all criticism that is fair. We don't doubt Mr. Goldman means to be fair. But when he goes further and says he can "read between the lines" even in our editorials a favoring of the producer, he gets a bit too far away from the facts not to force a little proof on our part to the contrary

These box office reports do not favor the producer, as any man who reads them without reading between the lines can see. They are not based on reports from unsuccessful exhibitors, who give no picture a chance, and therefore the majority of the pictures reported are at least "average" pictures. But they are based on typical successful exhibitors' findings.

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Putting the Punch in the Title

Find Out the "Big Idea" in Your Feature and Use Everything to Drive It Home

SINCE we have been printing these talks on advertising, with special reference to the Sunday displays, the greater portion of the specimens have been of the exploitation of pictures in which stars have been, and rightly, featured over the production itself. This has brought a number of inquiries concerning the exploitation of a picture for the picture itself, and without reference to the cast.

It is a self-evident truism that no feature can be stronger than the cast, if by that one means a comparison between the capable and the incapable, but it is equally true that there are pictures that in themselves are stronger than any star and which deserve to be featured for the stories and the productions themselves.

The one weak point in the star system—at least so far as exploitation is concerned—is that when the star is seen in a poor or unsuitable vehicle the drawing power of the star in the following picture is generally weakened. Few patrons really put the blame where it should rest—on the producer, or the author or the director, but the star must take the blame.

Another weak point in star advertising is the temptation on the part of some of the producers and a great percentage of the exhibitors to announce that the latest production is "the greatest in which Mildred Jones ever appeared," regardless of whether they know or believe that this is true. Of course every producer and every exhibitor knows that he is working against the future when he makes statements that he does not know to be true, but there is a subconscious self-conviction that leads into these practices.

We say this in explanation, because many of the statements in this article bear to a considerable degree on the star pictures as well as those which are featured for the strength of the stories themselves.

Now let us suppose that you have booked a big, smashing picture, one that carries itself because of the event with which it deals, its method of production or its timeliness in presenting some present day problem. In the first place, you ought to see this picture before you undertake to exploit it, as you ought to see all pictures before you try to tell your patrons about them. But if you cannot do this, study the picture carefully. Watch the reviews in the NEWS, read carefully the entire press matter that is sent you and give several hours of study to it.

You cannot expect to have a story dependent on the punch of the story itself go over unless you put the punch behind your advertising.

Every prize fighter has one particular punch with which he wins from the greater portion of his opponents, there is one particular blow on which he relies chiefly to "bring home the bacon." His other blows are effective and contribute toward the result, but there is one that brings the KNOCKOUT. And the same is true of every picture that depends on the essence of the picture itself.

The prize fighter who went into the ring knowing nothing about the power of his own punches and the ones on which to rely would be pretty sure to be licked. And the exhibitor who goes into the exploitation of a picture without knowing what is the thing to exploit.

If you know why you booked the picture you ought to know what to advertise, you ought to know the driving power of it.

All of you who live in the smaller cities through the country remember that when the legitimate was in its glory practically every stage production that came to your city was advertised as "the sensational success direct from New York" or as a play "with the original Broadway cast," and that when you went to the theatre you generally found that it was the same play all right enough, but generally produced by a third or fourth rate cast and often with dirty scenery and travel worn effects. It was this very thing that gave motion pictures their great handicap over the spoken drama. The public was tired of being bunked by policies of the legitimate stage. They recognized that in the film they might get the exact production, with the same cast that New York and Chicago and Boston had been seeing.

The same temptation that led to exaggeration in the legitimate field affects many exhibitors when they book a big feature. They are not satisfied that it is genuinely a BIG feature. They are not content unless they declare that it is the BIGGEST EVER.

"Greater Than 'The Birth of a Nation'" has been worked so much overtime that the expression must bring a smile to the face of every intelligent patron. And yet the same time worn expression is used in one of the displays printed on the opposite page.

There's plenty of room for strong exploitation without exaggeration and superlative.

In the first place the name of the picture itself ought to be a strong appeal, and if the name tiself does not drive home the character of the picture you ought to pick out enough of the spirit of the production to couple the name with the motif of the picture.

There is a reason why the picture was made—tell it to the public. You booked the picture believing that there was a reason why the public would want to see the picture. Don't hide behind "stupendous," "marvelous" and other circus words but jab out every jab you have behind the one thing that really stands out above everything else in the picture.

Now take the advertisement of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, on the opposite page. The production is "The Mormon Maid" and the advertiser has been able to express the whole spirit of the production in few words and with an attractive design. He advertises the name above the star who appears in this picture, and properly, for the picture is not sold to the public on account of Mae Murray, but on account of the expose of early Mormon methods. The "eye" at the top gives the idea of baring a secret and the hooded figure at the bottom conveys the mystery element. Everything is in keeping and there is one single idea brought before the public that this picture exposes alleged terrible Mormon secrets. There is more punch to this display than had there been a thousand lines strung with adjectives attempting to enumerate a hundred different elements.

Modern theatre, Boston, accomplishes the same result in a different way. Of course the average reader could fairly well guess the character of a picture by that title itself if featured above everything else, but still there is enough explanation to make the first impression a convincing fact. Again the stars are not featured and the ordinary reader would gather that the production is greater than the stars, that there was some reason for it beyond the appearance of the stars—and this is the impression the advertising of every big feature ought to have.

Starland theatre, St. Paul, has relied on the title of "The Man Without a Country" and big type alone. Good space is used in the display and it strikes one immediately upon looking at the page, but there are still a lot of people who haven't meard of "Edward Everett Hale's Famous Patriotic Novel," and there should have been an added kick put behind the picture telling just what it is about.

In writing the advertisement for "The Honor System" the manager of the Lafayette theatre, New Orleans, seems to have deliberately avoided telling what it was about. We defy the man who is not familiar with the subject to get any idea of the picture from the considerable amount of text. The name of the picture and the stripe border might carry the impression to some that it is a story of prison life, but no advertisement should rely on impression. Feints are all right in prize fighting, but feints never put over a knockout blow. There is splendid material in "The Honor System" for advertising, yet the impression is left on one that the writer of the advertisement did not want to say that it was a story founded on prison life, but at the last moment he threw in the picture of a man about to be lashed just as added

Getting the Punch Over on the Title of the Picture

With the exception of the display of the Circle theatre all of the advertisements shown here and explained in the article on the opposite page are reduced one-half. The display of the Circle has been brought down until it is less than one-fourth its original size.

Putting Punch In the Title, Secret of Success In Big Picture Exploiting

There is no excuse in the world for advertising any picture this way. There is a reason why the public should see every picture, or there is NO reason, and when there is no reason you are losing money by attempting to advertise it. Don't write around a big picture and expect adjectives to carry you through. That day is done.

Now there is another type of a big feature in the display of the Circle theatre, indianapolis, which, by-the-way, is one of the most intelligently advertised houses in the country. The big feature for the week was "The Battle of Gorizia," although there was another feature also shown. This advertisement of nearly five full columns, and accordingly in the greatly reduced reproduction the display appears crowded. But note the way that the writer has been able to bring out the war idea. He has put every punch behind the title of the picture, he has made his illustrative drive home stronger, the fact that it is a real picture of a real battle, and then he has gone further to tell in detail some of the scenes that are shown. You won't find in this advertisement the statement that these are the greatest war scenes ever made or anything of that sort, but with the punchy title to start with, there is smash after smash that convinces you that it is a production you cannot afford to miss. There is no curse of the fakily written advertisement here.

Because it helps to emphasize the full scope of the expression, "Putting the Punch in the Title," we have also shown here an advertisement of Gordon's Olympia theatre, Boston, on the Sunday before the opening of the serial, "Who is 'Number One'?" Paramount has been spending hundreds of dollars in Boston explaining this chaptered story. Especially with the first episode of so well an advertised picture about to open the punch is in the title, and the title with a picture of the star was featured and smaller type told the rest. Here is a fine example of trading on the name and on the publicity already given. It was a case where the theatre was justified in playing the serial ahead of such a big feature as "The Woman God Forgot," because here was the one single chance to get the punch home on the serial opening with all its power.

Cuts are essential in the newspaper display of a big picture. We have advised you in the case of other films to use pictures of the stars. Here in the case of the production featured for itself alone, the smash should be put behind the title by explaining the nature of the picture itself as the Strand theatre has done, or there should be scenes, like those in the Circle ad. that "guarantee" the picture. The advertisement of the Starland would have been a hundred per cent. more efficient with cut display.

Make the title of the big picture stand out.

Make every word you use give a reason why the reader should see that picture.

Back these reasons up with cuts that illustrate or explain the production.

Then you are aiming every blow in the same direction, on the same spot, and there is bound to be telling results. The way to win a knockout is to aim for one thing. The way to make a picture a success is to convince the public that it is the one picture with ONE purpose.

In the displays of the Strand and the Circle, no matter where your eye may fall you cannot escape the punch. That's the thing to put behind every picture that you show—punches all with the same purpose, not wild blows that merely fan the atmosphere.

Universal's Service Bureaus Grow Through the West

When W. A. Bach has finished his present tour of the United States, every Universal exchange will have in helpful operation a "Service Department" that will act in an exclusive and special capacity as assistant to every exhibitor in the territory serviced by the various exchanges. Mr. Bach has reached Denver on his way to the Pacific Coast, his further route embracing visits to Salt Lake City, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, El Paso and back to New York with stops arranged to cover the Southern territory.

The Service, or "Make It Pay" department, first became operative and was tested with entire satisfaction by Mr. Bach in connection with Universal's exchange at Toronto, Can. When it was decided to put a man on the road to build up and extend the idea to all Universal branches, Mr. Bach was appointed for the work. He first established the department in connection with Mecca exchange, in New York, leaving C. G. Wood in charge. Taking to the road, Mr. Bach visited the following cities and appointed managers: Detroit, B. B. Greensburg; Chicago, M. L. Firestone; Toronto, Raymond S. Peck; St. Louis, G. H. Giebler. Meanwhile the territory served by Portland, Spokane and Seattle was placed under the "Make It Pay" supervision of Dean Collins, with headquarters in Portland

THIS week the title of this series of articles is slightly misleading, for S. L. Rothapfel is out of the city on a vacation earned by his strenuous work in conducting the Rialto and making the plans for the new Rivoli.

But while Rothapfel is not present in the flesh he is there in the spirit and one who has for weeks studied his presentations by his side many feel the very spirit of the Rialto remains whether the director is in person present or not. And it is a remarkable tribute to the ability of Mr. Rothapfel to build up a wonderful organization which runs smoothly when the master is away. For all of the employes have completely entered into the ATMOSPHERE—and there is truly an atmosphere of its own at the Rialto—and that is something that every manager should strive to create for this theatre.

Which reminds us: When the new Rivoli opens in December the head of every department will be some man or woman who has been in the employ of the Rialto. So complete an organization has Rothapfel created that he will not be compelled to go outside his own ranks to find the chiefs in all departments. And while we are not at liberty to tell you the details of the plans for the Rivoli which we know, we can drop a hint here that this new theatre is going to be the greatest and most delightful surprise that the motion picture public has known.

"Me and My Dog," a scenic picture made by Robert C. Bruce for Educational, probably sets a record for applause at the Rialto this week. Five times during the showing of the picture there came great bursts of applause. It is really one of the most remarkable scenics that we have ever seen and it was put on with that care to music and lighting that makes the Rialto showings such successes. A man and his friend, the dog, see scenic wonders in Montana, Washington and Alaska. The subtitles are clever and there is a human touch all the way through that is appealing. Dr. Reisenfeld selected unusually attractive music for this scenic, playing selections from "The Queen of Sheba." And he also arranged a clever effect that took the house by storm, for at the end of the scenic he introduced a picture showing an Indian dance and then a river scene. The lighting effects during the scenic had become striking, the dome now becoming dark blue, with the proscenium red and the blue of the dome gradually fading into a pinkish center. But to continue the "weaving in." A title, "The Land of the Sky Blue Water," was shown and as the Indian scenes were shown Miss Mary Ball in Indian costume stepped in front of the curtain and after the orchestra had played an Indian war dance the melody turned into "The Land of the Blue Sky Water" by Cadman, and Miss Ball sang the song in a manner that brought applause that didn't want to be stopped.

There was another splendid example of weaving in the picture and the music at the end of the Rialto magazine. But first let us consider the parts of the animated weekly. It opens with a cartoon on Wheatless and Meatless Days and then turns into Daniels reviewing marines at Quantico, Va., shown to the tune of "Here They Come," and then did a comedy turn into Mutt and Jeff in "Kanning the Kaiser," an unusually funny cartoon which got over well with the aid of a Fox trot. Few numbers have scored more applause at the Rialto than the pictures of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy visiting the French front. When the veterans who stopped the Germans at Verdun were shown in review there was burst after burst of applause that would have done credits to heroes of some American victory. The stirring music of the "March Royale" and the "March Bombardment" brought out the fullest emotions. An especially clever feature following, Mutual presenting a letter from a boy in France to his folks at home, each paragraph being illustrated by pictures of the soldiers at work in France. "The National Spirit" march set it off and then came a Hy Mayer cartoon showing Liberty standing behind a charging American soldier, and as the orchestra turned into "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" the real welkin of American freedom rang through the big theatre.

Now note another turn into a musical number. Coming immediately after the cartoon and apparently a part of the animated magazine there were some scenes in Jerusalem. The orchestra began to play Max Bruch's "Kol Nedrei," a setting for 'cello and orchestra of the ancient Hebrew ritual melody sung in synagogues on the Day of Atonement. As the picture ended the curtains over the panels on either side of the screen parted, showing in deep blue effects the minarets of Jerusalem and at the same moment, Gaston Dubois, first 'cellist of the Rialto orchestra, seated on the stage in the half light, played the ritual melody in a masterly manner.

Now note that both so-called solo effects were brought in with pictures. There not only wasn't the slightest element of "weight," but pictures and music were so blended that the psychological effect is a most happy one. We have spoken before of making pictures and music and lighting into a harmonious whole. The Rialto has done it and many other exhibitor can do this—at least now and then and the result will be to set your whole city talking about your theatre.

There was another clever effect with the feature picture, Elsie Ferguson in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," a picture by the way with wonderful heart interest. The opening scenes of the picture show the East Side and children dancing to the music of the hand organ. So the Rialto secured a hand organ and with this played "Around the Town." A simple thing, wasn't it? And anyone can do it—anyone who will think can do many "little" things like that which made a BIG hit. And these things are well worth trying. You can all book the big pictures and all of that, but it is the close touch to detail that helps put them over with the rarer success that marks the Rialto presentation. The LITTLE BIG things count.

Following the feature, which has little of the comedy element the orchestra came in with selections from "Alma, Where Do You Live?" light and airy music that relieved the strain that one felt after having witnessed the powerful work of Miss Ferguson.

"More Haste and Less Sleep," a Christy, is the comedy feature this week, shown with light and whimsical music.

The overture was Massenet's "Phedre,"

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF NOV. 11

FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT'S story, "Sarah Crewe," shown on the screen with Mary Pickford as the star under the title of "The Little Princess," delighted Strand audiences this week. There was a splendid musical score for this production, and as played by the Strand orchestra enhanced the presentation greatly.

Rossini's "Siege of Corinth" is the overture, and this is followed by the Strand topical, which opens with President Wilson voting in the recent election at Princeton and then turning into pictures of the victorious New York suffragettes. Pictures of the Rochester, victim of a submarine, leaving an American port followed, and then there came great applause with the parade of the women workers of Glasgow, in their working clothes, pledging their aid to England. A Paramount-Bray showed the method of preparing and weaving hats in the West Indies, and then came some views of the sunken Southern Pacific ferryboat at Oakland, Cal. Billy Sunday got much applause in his address starting the Y. M. C. A. Army Fund campaign at Camp Kearney, Cal. Then came another Paramount-Bray, "Over the Jumps with Army Tractors," which pleased the audience mightily. "Spending the Day with the Drafted Men at Camp Upton" gave a splendid local touch, and the topical ended with a picture of Mayor-elect Hylan and his family. All the pictures except those noted were Hearst-Pathe.

There is an interesting picture by Educational this week in "Enemies of the Garden," one of the Ditmar creations. It is a particularly appropriate film in these days of food conservation. The comedy element is supplied by Victor Moore in "Nutty Knitters."

The soloists were Helen Scholder, 'cellist, in "Rhapsoide Hongroise" and Herbert Waterouse, baritone, in "On the Road to Mandalay," and "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms."

Your Idea—and Ours

WE have printed so much about getting the punch out of your to-day attraction and the division of space on coming offerings that we are glad to print the display of the Zelda theatre, Duluth, Minn. On the Saturday on which this advertisement appeared the three day run of W. S. Hart in "The Cold Deck" was just coming to an end and therefore little space was given that attraction, although the display was made at a place where it could not be missed—right next to the name of the house. Then the main space was given to Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess" and a space of about one-fourth the size to the Pauline Frederick bill the latter half of the next week. It is excellent Saturday afternoon advertising.

While we haven't reached Saturday afternoon in our talks on advertising, we take this chance of saying that in cities where pictures are allowed on Sunday it is a good plan to announce your Sunday bill in considerable display on Saturday, because it catches the attention of those who are making "dates" for the next day.

Make your "date" to meet cheerfulness and courtesy at your theatre to-day. They won't be jealous of each other.

PARKWAY theatre, Baltimore, in addition to its newspaper advertising mails a card announcing the attraction for the week to a big mailing list. A specimen of one of these is reproduced here. The management always illustrates this card with a picture of the star or a scene from the production and then devotes only a few lines to the production. Instead of trying to tell the public "all about the attraction these cards serve to whet the appetite of the fans. Parkway theatre finds these cards valuable not alone for bringing business from those who do not read the daily papers, but also for their cumulative effect. Note that the card also tells the attraction for the following week.

If you leave all your business to some one else it is probably done per-Haps.

HERE is an idea that may be of value to men who own a string of theatres. It is being used by General Manager Frank B. Buhler, of the Grand Central Market Street Company which operates six houses in Philadelphia. The idea has been followed for some time by newspapers in "charting" attractions at local theatres for the week, especially by the Philadelphia Evening Ledger and the New Orleans Item.

The idea, of course, of this form of a folder, which is sent to the mailing list of all the theatres, is that it saves expense in having six sets of programs printed. There is another argument in its favor, and that is that by giving the names of all of the attractions at all of the houses it is likely to bring the follower of some particular star or one who has heard about a particular picture to one of the company's houses.

Penny-wise is generally picture foolish.

WE tell you often about the value of keeping up to the minute and taking advantage of every opportunity that some

Vote For Kate Saxon For Sheriff

It sounds like a joke! But after next Tuesday it may be a genuine possibility. If we have "votes for women" in this state next year, who knows but what several counties may elect women sheriffs in 1918. But can they perform the duties? One woman, elected Sheriff, cleaned up a rough mining town that had defied her male predecessors. It is graphically shown in the Vitagraph picture, "By Right of Possession" at the Family Theater to-day. See it and know the future. Several clever comedies and the last Sunday Song Revue of the season are on the same programme.

current event gives you to advertise your theatre. And we have illustrated a number examples of doing so, but none better than that of the Family theatre, Rochester, N. Y. On the day before the November election the theatre put in the newspapers advertising like that reproduced here.

Especially since votes for women was one of the issues, this advertisement attracted unusual attention. The remainder of the paper was filled with displays on behalf of the various candidates, and because this advertisement carried the name of a woman it attracted instant attention and centered the interest on the attraction at the Family theatre.

GENERAL FILM is supplying exhibitors with unique small easels for advertising the Bernarr-Macfadden series of physical training pictures. These are in the form of an easel and show Mr. Macfadden in the attitude of a wrestler. These little stands will be found excellent for use in store windows and merchants will probably be glad to use them for your theatre because they do not take up a great deal of space. They might also be used in connection with displays in sporting goods stores.

Put your aim high and instead of shooting once, keep pulling the trigger.

THIS is just a little thing, but little things count in successful picture exhibition. It is nothing new for theatres to give away passes to the first episode of a serial, though we believe that free tickets, unless connected with some contest that bring in more paid than free admissions, are bad things. But here is the example of coupling the free admission with publicity. Instead of merely printing a card saying that it is good for a look at the first chapter of "The Fighting Trail," the Bijou theatre, Orange, N. J., has used two attractive scenes which will not only intensify the interest of the recipient, but will probably draw paid admission through word-of-mouth advertising. Here is an example of making everything you do count, of getting the utmost out of every penny that you spend in your house.

What Live Wires Are Doing

Most managers would merely issue a ticket. This manager thought about what he was doing and put forward an idea.

Things don't HAPPEN. Some one makes them happen. Do the day's events in your theatre surprise you?

PLENTY of white space is a requisite for good ads. Don't think that you have to fill up every line of space that you buy simply because the space is there. It is a mighty good plan to figure out how much space you need to say what you really have to say and then buy just twice as much room. Especially if your advertisement appears next to those of other theatres, you will find the white space has more than paid for itself.

For example this display of the Broadway theatre in the New York Sunday papers was placed on a page nearly filled with other advertisements, yet it stood out above them all because the copy writer used plenty of white space.

Your theatre is no longer a nickleodeon. Are your methods?

PALACE theatre is one of the best advertisers whose work comes to our attention. Located in one of the smaller cities, the display of the Palace is uniformly superior to that done by most of the managers in large communities. In the first place the name of the house, in outline lettering and uniform style is always kept close to the top of the advertisement and there is plenty of white space to set off the typing. The cuts are not crowded next to the text and the manager has not confused the reader by sharing the display with a coming attraction, but he effectively announces his mid-week change by simply using the name of the star who will appear on Wednesday.

Do you think merely about the "picture business" or THE picture that you are showing?

HERE is a novel idea that could be used with especially good benefits by exhibitors in the smaller cities and particularly by the managers of neighborhood houses, although the idea comes from the Comedy theatre, Brooklyn. This theatre is located in a section where it cannot be reached by newspaper advertising, especially since the larger part of the population does not read English papers. This circular is so cut that it may be hung on the door knob.

During the night the manager of the Comedy had one of these hung on the door of every house in the section. There was

John J. McNally, Manager New Newark Theatre

High Prices Come to Stay in Newark

Anything that will bring the exhibitor closer to the public and especially his patrons will only reflect to his good."

"High prices have come to stay," declared Mr. John McNally, proprietor of the Newark theatre. "Many said when I opened the Newark theatre as a motion picture house that the Newark public would not pay 50 cents to see any form of screen entertainment. They have done it and are now doing it. My theatre has played to capacity houses practically since its opening a month ago. My 50-cent seats are those that are the first to be sold."

Puts on Actual Race in "The Whip"

Manager Tom Moore, of the Strand theatre, Washington, introduced a novelty during the recent showing of "The Whip" and literally brought his audience to their feet by combining the film drama with the stage spectacle and giving the actual race scene which is one of the big points in the film production. But instead of showing the film scene Mr. Moore secured a treadmill and five horses from the Hippodrome, New York, and staged the spectacle at the proper point. The entire stage setting was in keeping with the race effect.

Mahanoy City Theatre Claims Tax Honor

Manager McAtee, of the Elks theatre, Mahanoy City, Pa., claims the honor of having sold the first war tax ticket with an admission. One minute after the war tax went into effect, Manager McAtee reopened his house and the first ticket was sold to Joel A. Levy, representing the Pathe Exchange out of Philadelphia.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

WHEN we walked up to the door of Theatre I a small automobile was standing in front of the door, immediately opposite the entrance. There was no chauffeur and the machine appeared to be the property of someone who was seeing the show. We noticed that others coming to the theatre in machines were compelled to stop at one side or the other and we wondered why the manager of the house, which evidently should make an appeal to the auto-owning trade, did not ask the owner of the blockading car to move it. We found out later that the owner was none other than the manager of the theatre and that the car would stand at that position through the evening.

This house is located in the residence section of a city of 125,000. In many ways it is the most attractive theatre building in the town and the most modern. It was built about a year ago by a realty concern which was improving that section of the city because it believed that amusement near at hand was needed. Construction of good streets brought the theatre within easy distance of everyone in the city who owned a machine and there were thousands of these. The house was just far enough from the center of the town to be in pleasant driving reach and afford time for an evening spin and the enjoyment of the show.

The next thing that we noticed about the house was that the entire front of it was plastered with vari-colored posters of all dimensions, with an occasional streamer flaunting in the wind. It might have been possible for one standing directly in front of the house to discover what series of pictures formed the day's bill, but certainly no one driving by the house would ever find it out. Instead of attracting attention the whole effect of the front was to confuse the possible patron and so disgust him that he would not stop. No one likes to go into a store and not make a purchase. Neither does one like to have to stop in front of a theatre and diagram the program and probably drive away.

After that we walked into the house and we were surprised to find that the interior was attractive, that the theatre was apparently well managed from the inside and that there were high-class pictures being shown. These were pictures that were shown for the first time in the city some three weeks previously at one of the downtown houses. In the meantime the films went on a tour of the neighboring cities and this was the first time that they had been shown here again. So it might legitimately be called the second-run house of the city.

When we say that the theatre was apparently well managed from the inside we mean that the theatre was clean, comfortable and cool (it was then summer), that the cashier was polite, the seats comfortable and the projection good. But there was something absolutely impersonal about the theatre. Evidently the manager, when he left his machine standing in the roadway, went to his private office, for there was no evidence of him around.

Three months later we chanced to visit the same theatre again. The car wasn't standing in front of the house, and instead the lot next door had been cleared off and it was well filled with machines parked there. The mass of posters had disappeared from the front of the house and there was a simple display with a strip across the front of the house telling the name of the star and the title of the picture. A little closer look and we saw the manager in front of the house greeting his patrons and another man going about taking the numbers of the cars that were parked there and also recording the numbers of those who passed BY the house.

It did not take an announcement to see that the house had changed management. And two things had been put into the theatre—attention and intelligence.

The pictures weren't any better than those that had been shown on the previous visit; in fact they were of the same make. The house wasn't any cleaner nor the projection any better. The physical house remained about the same, but the ATMOSPHERE was wonderfully different.

We learned that the theatre had changed managers only a few days after our first visit. The first thing that the new director realized was that he ought to get business other than the neighborhood trade. And it occurred to him as it would have occurred to any other intelligent man that what he needed was the auto trade that was passing his doors—and passing. So the first thing that he did was to insert a small ad. in the daily papers. He felt that he could not afford to spend as much as the downtown theatres and so he undertook to announce only the name of the star and the title of the picture, counting on the publicity that had been given the production on its first showing to do the rest. Of course he went about developing the neighborhood trade, but the place that most of his money was coming from—or rather his additional patronage was to come from the owners of machines.

And he did this in a very short time and very simply. He first got a list of the auto owners and sent them all a neatly typewritten letter calling attention to the change in management, the class of picture being shown, and how easy of access the theatre was. But he followed this up with a couple of form letters. One of these went to every owner of a car the first time after

Calvert Brings Whole City's Theatres to New Plane by His High Example

"PSYCHOLOGICAL dressing of the photoplay."

That sounds awfully high brow to some of the exhibitors of the country who know little more about their business than to open the theatre, sell as many admission tickets as they can, project the pictures on the screen, count up the cast and go home.

There was a time not so very long ago that the motion picture houses in most of the large cities came within this class, but there has been a marvelous progress in exhibition, and none more marked than the evolution that has taken place in Minneapolis.

Three years ago when conditions which we have just described existed, Lowell A. Calvert became managing director of the New Garrick theatre. He had had early training in newspaper work and then was associated with various releasing companies, and so he was well fitted for his post. But above everything else Mr. Calvert brought brains to the New Garrick. He spent more time in thinking than he did in apparent work

And that is the reason why, a short time ago, the head of one of the biggest film companies in this country placed Mr. Calvert among a small group of the leading exhibitors of the country. Mr. Calvert is essentially a modest man and it is difficult to get his story into the trade press, but his position is one that brings him to the fore to show what can be accomplished in motion picture exhibition by the men who will think.

But to get back to the psychological dressing of which we spoke.

Mr. Calvert believes that everything should be in harmony, that pictures, and music and colors should unite in the proper presentation of an evening's entertainment. Few other theatre managers are harmonizing these elements, but more and more are doing so. Mr. Calvert was one of the pioneers in this field.

Special sets around the screen were really an adaptation from the scenery of the speaking stage, but the lighting effect which blends with the music and the picture is a recent accomplishment of the greatest exhibitors. Mr. Calvert pays perhaps more attention to his electrical department than to any other phase of the theatre. There are light cues prepared with each picture, just as they are for the musicians and the effects that one gets at the New Garrick are little short of wonderful. Yet one gets them unconsciously for they do not obtrude. The psychology of color is that it must blend. In other words, it must so nearly approach the motif of the picture and the music that it seems a natural part of the whole.

Mr. Calvert pays great attention to his stage settings. They are changed from time to time and always kept in good taste, pleasing in their simplicity and attractive in their modesty. Perhaps they are representative of a series of French windows, with fountains playing outside of them, with palms and shrubbery growing about; they do not reach the massive and gorgeous stage that makes one admire them for the first few times, but they are more along the line of unconsciously knowing that one's surroundings are pleasant, comfortable and a bit unusual.

It would hardly be necessary to say that he has developed his orchestra to a point of perfection, or say much about the style of his house decorations, when a man has reached into new avenues that Mr. Calvert has.

But there must be two sides to every theatre manager, a vein of art and a strain of business. Tucked back somewhere in his busy brain there is a portion that takes care of the business and of theatre. While these other things are basically created for a better business there are still some things that require a business man's nerve to accomplish.

Minneapolis has never been known to be a high priced admission town. For several years quite a few of the theatres have attempted to raise the price from ten to fifteen cents. The attempts were never profitable.

Mr. Calvert decided however that it could be done. Shortly after the first of this year he put out his fifteen-cent sign. It was looked at askance by many of the other theatres and some few immediately started a battle royal. Big pictures at the good old price. Mr. Calvert stuck to it however, with a little better music, a few more constructive ideas, a little more solicitous for the comfort of his patrons, insisting on more courtesy from his employees and in many other ways strengthening up the details of his organization which was worth more than the additional five cents to his patrons. And after a week or two, when the town saw he was in earnest, there were indications of a steady increase. It shortly reached the old proportions—and then the rest followed suit.

It is interesting to see what sort of pictures Mr. Calvert selects. For instance, for the week beginning November 4 the bill includes Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess," Pathe Current Events, "Mutt and Jeff" and an Italian travel picture, while the orchestra and pipe organ rendered Ponchelli's "Dance of the Hours," from "La Gioconda," and there was special incidental music for the pictures.

Lowell V. Calvert, Managing Director, New Garrick Theatre, Minneapolis

This House Develops Auto Patrons

he has visited the house, conveying the appreciation of the management and calling attention to the bill for the next week or so. The second letter went to all who drove by the house each evening. It referred to the fact that the manager had seen Mr. A—— drive by and called to notice the bill for the next few days, etc. The result was wonderful. The letters were so astonishing that they attracted immediate attention to the theatre.

The manager told us that he was finding that he was getting the business of quite a few people who deliberately passed up the downtown showing of the picture when they knew that they could see it later at his house which was reached in a pleasant ride. In short this manager was capitalizing on every benefit of his theatre.

Nearly every house which isn't literally located in a mud-hole can get this sort of business. The auto is no longer a luxury. It is almost a vehicle of the common people. The new manager knew that auto owners liked motion pictures as well as anyone else, and to them he made a simple little appeal that made them know his house was worth while.

Your theatre can in some degree reap the benefit of this example. Why can't this be your theatre?

Magazines to Co-operate with Pictograph

Ten million magazine readers are expected to be attracted to the Paramount-Bray Pictographs as the result of an arrangement whereby the editors of Leslie's, Every Week, Popular Science Monthly, the Metropolitan, Woman's Home Companion and Field and Stream are to prepare and edit the subjects used in "the magazine of the screen."

All the subjects which appear in the Pictograph will also appear in printed form in the magazines

Exhibitor Clears His House After Each Show

Instead of having one continuous show, Exhibitor Frank Eager of Lincoln, Neb., clears out the Lyric at the close of each show, an entirely new house seeing each picture. As a usual thing he packs them in twice a night at 15 and 25 cents.

Mr. Eager, who also runs the Orpheum and the Wonderland, was in Omaha the other day. At the Lyric he shows Gold Roosters three days; "The Seven Pearls" and Pathe News at the Orpheum and "The Fatal Ring," two-reel Luke comedies and a single reel comedy at the Wonderland.

Montana Exhibitor Sets Pace For All In Novel Displays and His Advertising

UNQUESTIONABLY one of the most enterprising exhibitors in the country is located in Butte, Montana, the city made famous by Mary MacLane. He is P. E. Noble, manager of the American theatre, a house that in its physical form and in its atmosphere would be a credit to the largest cities. Manager Noble truly gives the house his personal attention and stands out at the very front of managers. The MOTION PICTURE NEWS is printing this as the first of a number of stories telling of stunts that Mr. Noble has put over with success.

Naturally conditions differ in various sections of the country and in the West the patrons want plenty of "pep" in their displays. This is meant as a foreword to an account of the lobby display that Mr. Noble used in "Golden Rule Kate," the story of a western dance hall in which Louise Glaum was starred. Here is his own description of the display:

"The lobby display is made of set pieces the same as scenery and is screwed together, the scene of the desert country, the cactus, the evening glow of the sunset, together with the cabin in front with the two doors, one opening into the PARADISE POST-OFFICE and the other into the RED-LITE SALOON, has caused unending comment and has been more than worth the time and money to build. I made all of this myself and would be pleased to furnish instructions and data to any exhibitors interested. The box used over the sidewalk is also easily constructed, and would be pleased to furnish full particulars to those interested. The sides are apart from the box and used as inserts, the letters and figure being cut out, reflectors being used inside, together with sixteen globes to furnish the inside illumination. Letters were of red as were all of the lights in the front of the theatre. The entire front from the electric sign to the sidewalk was symbolic of 'GOLDEN RULE KATE' and 'Redlight Saloon,' and that was what we wanted to impress the Butte people with, and from the business we are doing I heartily recommend this to anybody anywhere.

"The lobby display costs only fifty dollars and can be used over and again (of course my time costs nothing, and it only took the spare time of two days)."

Prior to this display and current with it Mr. Noble used one of the cleverest advertising campaigns that we have seen, and while it is applicable to but few attractions and probably would not go in the "effete cast," it was strikingly original and scored a big hit. These were all in large space, ranging from eighth to quarter pages.

All of these displays carried heavy black borders which made them stand out. The first ad bore the words "Sh-h-h. 3-7-77. Warning." This was used because it was the sign used on the body of the I. W. W. leader who was hung by Vigilantes. It had every one guessing, and this was followed by another display headed, "If William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks," and the third had a big question mark and the words, "A Minister Tends Bar in the Redlight Saloon." Then followed two quarter pages during the run of the picture, and on the last day an eighth of a page with the words "Have You" and a question mark in bold black type.

Next week we will print some of the lobby displays on other pictures. They are all thoroughly striking, and exhibitors everywhere can get some most valuable ideas from the work of this Montanan who does things with a bold hand, not only in his lobby displays but in his newspaper advertising.

Petrova Brochure to Tell "10 Reasons Why"

Petrova Picture company is preparing a brochure which will tell exhibitors of the country "The Ten Reasons Why" these productions should be booked.

The booklet will explain the drawing power of the star herself, the great exploitation campaign inaugurated in behalf of her productions which includes displays in twenty-five national magazines and a $50,000 newspaper campaign. Emphasis will be placed on the manner in which her vehicles are selected and attention called to the fact that S. L. Rothapfel will act as "Pre-Production Counsel" and will pass on all productions.

Other points which are to be covered are the cost of production of the pictures, the public popularity evidenced from the various announcements of the company in the hundreds of inquiries received, the supporting casts, the mechanical system installed for the laboratory treatment of the films, editing and titling and the remarkable staff of studio assistants who will figure in the making of every Petrova production.

Free "Number Ones" Pack Cincinnati Theatres

Avenue and Royal theatres, Cincinnati, report success with one of the stunt suggestions given in the Paramount advertising book on its first serial, "Who Is 'Number one?'" The newspapers advertised that the theatres would give a pass to the "Number One" employe in all of Cincinnati's large department stores, and the police and fire departments and to conductors and motormen.

It is reported that the plan worked most successfully and that a great share of the "Number Ones" brought their families along to see the first episode.

Here is probably the most unique use to which one of the few remaining horse cars left in the country has been put. Manager M. K. Harmon, of the Odeon theatre, Cottonwood Falls, Kansas, employs it on the interurban line between that town and Strong City as an advertising medium. Mrs. Harmon is on the rear of the car which is carrying a display on Mary Miles Minter in "Her Country's Call" and at the front is Mr. Harmon.

Denver Theatres Use Wealth of Electric Signs In Advertising Their Attractions

William A. Bach, who is touring principal exchange centers and establishing service bureaus for Universal, writes this week of conditions as he observed them in Denver. Mr. Bach is writing a series of articles for the News. These have been appearing for several weeks.

The spirit of Denver that made Curtis street the center of amusement, recreation, etc., in the days of the old West seems to have lived right through, with the result that to-day Curtis street is still the center of gravitation for the entire population of Denver for their amusement. The old gambling houses that lined this street have their direct antithesis in the modern "movie" palaces that make the two blocks from Fifteenth street to Seventeenth street brighter and "crowdier" than any two blocks on Broadway.

Light is the first feature that strikes one in reference to Curtis street. Possibly it is the flat rate in existence in this town that makes them so prodigal of their electric current, but the fact that one house alone uses 87,000 candle power a night on the front is significant of what these two blocks look like after dusk.

Most certainly from the theory that bright lights attract, Curtis street has taken no chance.

And in any town where electric current is at all reasonable Denver's example is a good one to follow. Unfortunately on Curtis street it has developed into a race, with the consequence that each front is simply a glare, which, while it has its effect on the street as a whole, does not really give the individual theatre the benefit it should for the current expended. Another point that the Curtis street exhibitor has overlooked is that a display of his offerings, were it only the name of the feature placed among the lights on the high front above the arch of the lobby that seems to prevail here, would be a wonderful point of attraction.

Much Better Than in East

However, the average display on Curtis street is much better than those I have observed in the cities of the East. Several of the exhibitors have grasped the theory of concentrating on one thing in their display. For instance, one house advertising a new feature of a well known male star concentrated upon this star's name, which in itself fills houses. The photos, which I have pointed out before, are a vital point of attraction and create greater interest than any poster, were most attractively and effectively displayed on a background that brought out their whole detail.

Then a simple but striking cut-out was used of this star in action, evidently produced from a poster, and to strengthen the whole arrangement a most vivid color combination of orange and black was used throughout the whole display.

Again, another house carried out the same idea of concentration by having the name of the play which they were showing cut out in large letters and suspended across the entire front of the house. These letters, which were at least four feet high, made a most striking display and could be seen for some distance, and as the name itself was interest-attracting it produced the business.

Touch of Coney Island

A touch of old Coney Island was imparted this week by the appearance of an orchestra, of which the drum was the most important part, on the outside balcony of one of the theatres. While it attracted the attention and arrested the progress of passersby, I do not think the stunt was productive of many dimes in the box office.

And speaking of the subject of music, the great and somewhat unreasonable competition which exists on this street has led some of the exhibitors into really inexcusable extravagance in the matter of music. Two of the houses, which I understand have just installed elaborate and beautiful pipe organs, are now arranging for large orchestras, which are totally unnecessary. In the matter of music the same principle can be applied as to the display, and that is, concentration on one thing will undoubtedly bring success, and this fact is strongly evidenced by the record of one house on Curtis street which still uses a graphaphone and yet gets the crowds. But on the whole the music is good and the projection is something upon which the Curtis street exhibitors can be congratulated. Several of the houses are installing new screens, which undoubtedly will bring this important point of their houses to even further perfection.

Suburban Houses Unimportant

The keen competition which exists on this street, which enjoys rather an unusual distinction as in Denver there are only one or two suburban houses of any importance, has produced a large rental price for the pictures that are being shown on the street, and moreover this is practically a street of first runs and I do not believe that anywhere in America in such a short length of street can so many big stars in big features be seen.

The result of this terrific competition should be to foster extensive selling. The exhibitors should give their attention to every point that goes to make up their theatre—display, projection, music, comfort, convenience, and last but not least, the pictures they are showing. And again, the location of the house, if properly used, may spell the difference between success and failure. For instance, one house which is ideally located on the street for the transient trade, women downtown shopping, etc., is at present running heavy, highly dramatic features, and it is my opinion, as well as that of many others in Denver, that if this house would switch to a lighter, prettier brand of pictures which would be more to the taste of the casual passerby, the house would do a bigger and better business.

In conclusion, although better than the average display, projection and comfort which exists in the downtown Denver theatres, there is still an opportunity for some house to make for itself a Rothapfel reputation for music, just as one of the theatres here has already gained such a reputation for comfort and elegance.

Exhibitor Uses Serial for 6 Consecutive Nights

Small town exhibitor's problem of getting a full house each night has been solved by G. F. Geidle, of Fargo, North Dakota. He booked the Mutual serial "The Secret of the Submarine," showing five reels each night for six consecutive nights. On one night his receipts exceeded $72.

Speeding up serials is becoming increasingly popular among exhibitors in small communities. One exhibitor recently booked "The Vampires," the Mutual-Gaumont serial at three chapters a week, running the picture every other night until the final chapter.

Ready Made Ad-Talks

Harold Lockwood and Pauline Curley in "The Square Deceiver"—A "Best Seller"

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

"The Square Deceiver" is the first picture in which Harold Lockwood is featured since his transfer to Metro's Eastern studios in New York. It is adapted from Frances Perry Elliott's novel, "Love Me For Myself Alone." Pauline Curley, Mr. Lockwood's new leading lady, is seen for the first time in this production in support. The management of the ———— theatre extends to his patrons a most cordial welcome to the ———— theatre when Mr. Lockwood's latest picture is shown for the reason that he firmly believes that it is the best Mr. Lockwood has ever done. It is a typical Lockwood production, for it smacks of the romantic. Miss Curley is good to look upon. In this picture you will see her in a role that fits her like a "Fifth Avenue Frock" and gives her the opportunity to display those talents which have given her a place in rank with some of the most talented screen stars. Mr. Lockwood has the role of Billy Van Dyke, a young millionaire, who waits for his "dream girl." A certain society-mad millionaire has arrived in New York with his daughter and his ward, Beatrice. By accident Billy meets both the daughter and the ward, but is impressed by the fact that Beatrice, the ward, is something different from the average run of girls. Her guardian needs a chauffeur, and he dons his ex-chauffeur's uniform and hires himself out as the society-mad's chauffeur, wins the girl of his dreams.

William Russell in a Clever Comedy-Drama, "Snap Judgment"—Great

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

The "funmakers," the cartoonists and the comic weekly have told us a lot about the groom who disappointed the bride on the day of the marriage, having overslept or forgotten the engagement, but it is seldom, if ever, that we have heard of the actual occurrence. There may or may not have been an actual occurrence, but William Russell speaks from the screen, and says that such is possible. "Snap Judgment" is the title of the five-reel Mutual release which tells of a young man who forgot that he was to be married on a certain morning until it was time for the ceremony. His intentions are good, but in the spirit suggested by the lines of the once popular song, "Please Go Way And Let Me Sleep," he overlooked this important event in his life, and in his eagerness to get their on time at the same time to assist his fellowmen, he gets into trouble and finds himself in the wilds of Arizona, far from the scene of the supposed marriage ceremony. Not only is he separated from the bride, but he is mistaken for a Western "bad-man," and it takes a lot of money and influence of his fiancee to convince the populace of a certain town in Arizona that he is some one else than Arizona Pete, although he did have to admit that he looked like his friend with the "bad-man" name. At any rate, the bride and groom become husband and wife, but before this takes place there are a number of events which afford excellent subjects for screen conversation.

Ethel Clayton, Favorite World-Brady Star, in "Easy Money"—Romantic

(World Five-Reel Production)

You're on the road to fame as a sculptor. Your uncle has been supplying the money to carry on your education along these lines. He writes that he can no longer continue the practice. Your room rent is due. You haven't sufficient money to buy your next meal. And "you" all the time is a charming young lady. And this charming young lady is asked by a young man to marry him, in order that he may get possession of a large amount of money due him at the event of his marriage to any girl excepting a certain actress of questionable character. What would you do? If you wished to continue your art you would think twice before refusing. In the late World picture Ethel Clayton, as Lois Page, is placed in this situation. "Easy Money" is the very apt title of this five-reel feature picture which will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Miss Clayton has been seen in World pictures for some time back, and it is to be doubted if she has ever once disappointed. In the supporting cast with Miss Clayton are: John Bowers, Frank Mayo, Louise Vale, Eugenie Woodward and Charles Morgan. The story of "Easy Money" was written by Gladys E. Johnson, and produced under the direction of Travers Vale. Lois decides to take the chance, and it happens that she is not only permitted to continue her studies, but she is brought to the realization that she loves the man whom she married for the sake of her career.

"The Fringe of Society," with Ruth Roland and Milton Sills Featured

(Hoffman-Foursquare Seven Reels)

Deception even in its mildest form is destructive of human happiness. The longer the deception lasts the greater will be the penalty. In some instances the revelation brings about a better understanding, but this is the exception rather than the rule. Pierre V. R. Key, a newspaper man and for many years musical critic on the New York World, has written "The Fringe of Society," its theme dealing with the result or results of deception in our domestic relations. His story has been adapted to the screen and produced by the George Backer Film Corporation, releasing through M. H. Hoffman, Inc. Ruth Roland, whom he will remember for her work in Pathe's serial, "The Neglected Wife," and who is also a comedienne of note, is cast in the leading role. Milton Sills is in chief support. Leah Baird, the popular screen star, has an important role, and George Larkin, who is seen in daredevil stunts in the "Grant Police Reporter" series of stunt pictures produced by Kalem is also prominently cast. Others in "The Fringe of Society" are Ollie Kirby, Tammany Young and Jules Cowles. The author takes up the question of modern society, and reveals some of its secrets. The social leper and his underhanded methods are "shown up." The husband and wife each love the other, but each believes the other to be a "teetotaler." The husband, outwardly, is a strong advocate of prohibition. What is the result?

The ———— theatre will give the answer when "The Fringe of Society" is shown on ———— of ———— week. Ruth Roland and Milton Sills in the leading roles.

Irene Castle in Baffling Mystery Drama, "Sylvia of the Secret Service"

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Irene Castle will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in "Sylvia of the Secret Service," produced by Astra and released on the Pathe program. This is a "corking" good mystery drama, and one of the best photodramas in which Miss Castle has ever been seen. It is mystery from start to finish. The "Kimberly" diamond has been lost, and Sylvia Carroll (Irene Castle), a girl detective, is placed on the trail of the gang. Much of the action takes place aboard channel boat to England. Later the scene of action changes to New York. Prescott, a young clerk in the establishment which was sending the diamond to England, is responsible for its safe delivery. While aboard the channel boat the diamond disappears, and Sylvia is made prisoner, because it is discovered that she is a detective. The proprietor of the store from which the diamond was sent is murdered, and Detective Hemming, from Scotland Yard, arrests young Prescott for the murder. Hemming arrives in New York on the trail of the "Kimberly" diamond, and there finds that the girl detective, whom he belittled in England, has been assigned by the New York authorities to assist him in locating the gang supposed to be responsible for the robbery. She succeeds in rounding up the gang. One of the gang confesses to the murder of the owner of the diamond.

At the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, Irene Castle in a stirring mystery drama, "Sylvia of the Secret Service," in five reels.

"A Case at Law"—Human, Appealing Story, with Dick Rosson Featured

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

How a young girl brings about the reformation of a young newspaper reporter, and incidentally reforms her father, who is a noted physician, is told in "A Case at Law," a Triangle release featuring Dick Rosson. Pauline Curley presents the principal feminine role, Riley Hatch impersonates the doctor. Jimmy Baggs is a young newspaper reporter and a victim of drink. He meets Mayme Saunders, daughter of Dr. Saunders. Mayme did not remember her father, for he had left her when she was very young in the care of friends. Not wishing to have his daughter know that her father was an inveterate drinker, he went West to try and conquer the habit. It was years later when Mayme met the young reporter, and, taking an interest in him, she advises him to go with her to Sago City in the West. They elope, and for a time her husband goes straight. Getting in with old friends, however, he falls back in his old tracks, and Mayme goes to see Dr. Saunders. The doctor recognizes her as his daughter. The two work together to save the young reporter, and how they bring about his reformation, and how the doctor conquers the drink habit is revealed in this late Triangle picture featuring Dick Rosson. Miss Curley has a role that is well suited to her charming personality, and she enacts the part of Mayme Saunders with appreciation. In the supporting cast with her are Jack Dillon and Ed. Sturgis.

At the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, "A Case at Law," a five-part Triangle picture, with Dick Rosson in the featured role.

Belle Bennett in "Fuel of Life"—Story of How a Wronged Woman Sought Revenge

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Belle Bennett, recently given a place among the stars of the screen drama, will be seen in the feature role of a five-part of a Triangle picture, entitled "Fuel of Life." It tells the story of the wife of a Wall Street banker, who loves her husband and leads a double life. She finds her husband unfaithful to her, and rather than submit to his perfidy, determines to revenge her wrongs on other men. Miss Bennett presents the role of the wife. Bragdon Brant, one of Angela's new friends, is a rich mine owner in the West. Angela learns that her husband has been lost at sea, and is given a free hand to get her revenge. Brant wishes to get control of a certain railroad, which is the only means of communication to his mine, and he sends Angela to get control of the road. Young Spalding is the owner. Spalding falls in love with her at first sight, but after securing control of the road for Brant, she leaves for the East. She tries to ruin Brant, but is halted by Spalding, who has followed her to New York. He convinces her that she is working toward her own destruction, and proves to her that he is sincere by asking her to become his wife. In the supporting cast are: F. H. Newburg, J. Barney Sherry, Texas Guinan, Lee Hill, Margaret Shellingford, Alberta Lee, Lee Phelps, Eugene Burr, Edward Hayden, Thomas H. Guise and Estelle La Cheur.

Belle Bennett, a new addition to the list of screen stars, will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in "Fuel of Life."

"His Old-Fashioned Dad"—Story of a Father's Sacrifice for His Son

(General Four-Reel Production)

"His Old-Fashioned Dad" is the title of one of the most appealing screen dramas ever shown on the screen of any theatre. It tells of the sacrifice a father makes for his son, who is at college, and who is unreasonable in his demands for money. The father, an old-fashioned country doctor, has every confidence in his son, but when he has mortgaged his home, and realized on every tangible article which he possessed, he grew suspicious of his son's continual demands for money, and decides to visit him at college. Arriving he finds his son playing poker and he tells his father that he is working on a formula that will make him rich, if he can get the money to complete his experiments. The old doctor, thinking that his son is really old-fashioned, believes him. He leaves to return to his home, and is caught in an automobile wreck. A stranger is killed, and the old doctor leaves certain articles and papers on the person of the dead man, which would indicate that it was he who was killed. He then disappears from sight. His wife collects on the insurance policy, and the money is given to the son to complete his experiments. Later the old doctor longing for a sight of the old home returns, his wife taking him for a burglar, shoots, and kills him. This is the story that will be enacted for you on the screen of the ——— theatre when ——— "His Old-Fashioned Dad" is shown on the screen. Daniel Gilfether enacts the role of the country doctor and Richard Johnson that of the son.

Alice Joyce in "The Fettered Woman"—Adapted from Chambers' Story, "Anne's Bridge"

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

Alice Joyce is to appear on the screen of the ——— theatre ——— week in an adaptation of one of Robert W. Chambers' most popular stories, "Anne's Bridge." It appears on the screen under the title of "The Fettered Woman." Alice Joyce presents the role of Angelina Allende, who is at college when she receives word that her father has killed himself because he had lost his fortune. Allende is left alone in the world with only the old homestead and two hundred acres of land. She can not work the land herself and being without ready money she accepts the offer of a real estate broker to dispose of the property. He tells her that she will have to accompany him to New York, where he attempts to force his attentions upon her. He is shot by his partner in the scheme who is jealous and the blame is thrown upon Allende. She is sent to the House of Correction and after three years is released. She returns to the old home, disgraced in the eyes of the neighbors. She advertises for boarders and the only applicant is a young man from New York. The two become close friends and he proves her innocence after learning her secret. Webster Campbell, Donald McBride, Lionel Grey and Templar Saxe are in the chief supporting roles. Tom Terriss directed. This Vitagraph production offers Miss Joyce every opportunity to display those talents that only she possesses. There are some nice bits of comedy contained and the main theme of the story will hold your undivided attention for every minute that "The Fettered Woman" holds the screen.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Alice Joyce in screen drama adapted from Robert W. Chambers' story, "Anne's Bridge."

Jack Gardner in "Gift o' Gab"—Story Full of Thrills and Adventures

(Perfection Five-Reel Production)

A series of "hair-raising" stunts and an explanation of how a young man can talk himself into and out of trouble form the material for "Gift o' Gab," a five-reel feature, produced by Essanay and released on the Perfection program. Jack Gardner, who has been seen in some of Essanay's best five-reel Western pictures, has the featured role of Tom Bain, whose propensities for talking prompted his parents to predict for him the career of a Demosthenes or a Cicero. Tom is ambitious to become an inventor and invents what he believes to be a "world beater." He convinces a large manufacturing company that he has invented a machine that will start at one side of a mountain and dig a tunnel through to the other side without the aid of man. His gift of gab helps him in this matter and he convinces the manufacturer that he should give it a trial. He sells the rights to the machine, but it proves worthless. Tom, however, because of his loquacious qualities is engaged as salesman. He has a series of adventures in this capacity that is guaranteed to thrill the most hardened. Then he meets Betty and he convinces her that she is the right sort of partner for him. There is every essential to sustaining interest in the screen drama contained in this late offering from the Essanay studios. Helen Ferguson presents the principal feminine role.

Jack Gardner will be seen in a series of thrilling escapades when he enacts "Gift o' Gab" on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Emmy Wehlen in "The Outsiders," Adapted from Vance's Work of Fiction, "Nobody"

(Metro Six-Reel Production)

Lovers of the silent drama will be pleased to know that Louis Joseph Vance's most popular bit of fiction, "Nobody," has been adapted to the screen. Those of you who have read this work of Vance's remember the character Sally Manvers. Did you ever wish that you could see this character on the screen? It is a pretty sure wager that you have. Well, did you ever have in mind Emmy Wehlen as a good type for the character of Sally? Of all of Metro's stars Miss Wehlen was chosen as the one to interpret this role, and Metro has made no mistake. The director could have looked the length and breadth of the land and he couldn't have come nearer to Mr. Vance's idea of Sally than he did when he selected Miss Wehlen to present this role. "Nobody" has been transferred to the screen under the title of "The Outsiders" and it proves a "winner" among kindred screen subjects. Among the Metro stars who assist Miss Wehlen in enacting this drama are Herbert Heyes, who has the principal male part; Florence Short, Virginia Palmer, Jules Raucourt, Harry Beham, Ilean Hume and Gladys Fairbanks. Every incident of any importance which Mr. Vance created in his story has been transferred to the screen by Director Dowlan. Sally is one of the many shop girls who becomes dissatisfied with the routine of the dreary life they lead. She rebels and resolves to be one of society's "hangers-on." She goes on the roof of the tenement house in which she lives to solve the problem, falls asleep, and is awakened by a heavy storm. The entrance has been closed and she runs across the roofs for an opening. Finding one she descends and finds herself in a beautifully furnished apartment and face to face with a burglar. Then follows a series of events that bring startling results.

Vola Vale as the Princess in Royal Romance, "Zollenstein"—Political Intrigue

(General Four-Reel Production)

A royal romance always affords food for entertainment. It is difficult to find more suitable material for reproduction on the screen than that which results from a royal romance. "Zollenstein," with Daniel Gilfether, Vola Vale and Monroe Salisbury in the leading roles, tells of the rulers in the principalities of Zollenstein and Saxonia. The two houses have always maintained the most friendly relations and it is planned to marry the daughter of the King of Saxonia to the son of the King of Zollenstein. The rulers failed, however, to take cognizance of the fact that the young prince was already married to the "maid-of-honor-to-be." Enraged when he learns the truth the King of Zollenstein banishes the young prince and his wife. They go to London, accompanied by Betty, a servant. A child is born. The young princess dies. The prince is recalled to be crowned King of Saxonia on the death of his father. Boris, an illegitimate brother of the deceased king, conspires to have the infant son of the new king killed. He finds Betty, the servant, and she tells him that she has made away with the child. Betty, however, takes the child away. Boris informs the king that his wife and son have died. Betty rears the child as her own and calls him John Mortimer. Years later an envoy sees Mortimer and is struck by his resemblance to the king. He is publicly declared heir to the throne and Boris attempts to disprove the prince's right. Betty arrives and gives evidence of the prince's birth and he is crowned king on the death of his father.

Ann Pennington, Beauty from Ziegfeld Follies, in "Antics of Ann"—Comedy-Drama

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Ann Pennington, former "Follies" beauty and now a star in the silent drama, will be seen at the ——— theatre in "Antics of Ann." This clever little dancer from the Ziegfeld Follies' school who has delighted the thousands who have visited the New Amsterdam roof is now doing her "bit" toward entertaining the crowds that flock to the New Century theatre nightly. Miss Pennington is one of the busiest members of the theatrical world. During the day she works before the camera and at night she "trips the light fantastic" behind the footlights. She has found time to enact the principal role in a late Paramount production, "Antics of Ann," and the result of her work will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. She has the role of Ann Wharton, a troublesome little pupil at a girls' school. Because of a joke perpetrated at the breakfast table she is sent to her room in disgrace. Looking from her window she sees Tom Randall crossing the campus for the football practice. Ann climbs through the window and joins him. When he leaves her she secretly enters the gymnasium and dons football togs. She rushes headlong into the game and not until it is over do the boys discover her identity. She rushes back to school and is climbing back through the window of her room when Mrs. Bredwell sees her. She is horrified, for she thinks that a man is entering Ann's room. She learns that it is Ann herself and to punish her she makes her display herself before the student body arrayed in football togs. Tom takes her clothes from the locker and plans to return them to her at the dance. His plans fail, however, and the clothes are given to Mrs. Bredwell. Ann, in disgrace, is sent home.

Vivian Martin in "Molly Entangled"—Story of Ireland and Irish Blue Eyes

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

"Molly Entangled" is the latest vehicle supplied Vivian Martin in which to ride to the hearts of her thousands of admirers. It is a story of Ireland—Irish blue eyes, golden curls and a teasing smile. Vivian Martin typifies the Molly Shawn who lives with her father, the smithy of a small town in Ireland. Barney is the helper in the fields and toward Barney the big blue eyes of Molly are turned. She likes Barney and Barney likes her. A bitter fued exists between the families of the Barrys and the O'Maras. Jim, the only son in the Barry family, is a black sheep and his parents are anxious for him to marry in order that the vast lands of the Barrys might be kept from descending to the O'Maras, who are distant relatives. Jim while drunk falls down a flight of stairs and is seriously injured. His mother, desiring that he marry so as to leave an heir, asks Jim his choice of a wife. He names Molly and Molly is brought. A midnight wedding takes place and Molly is taken to the big gloomy house of the Barrys as the wife of Jim. Jim recovers, but Molly does not love him. She longs for the old smithy and one day secretly steals away and visits her old home. She finds Barney. While they are talking Jim appears, and realizing that Molly loves Barney he tells them the secret of their marriage. The marriage he tells Molly was performed by a criminal garbed in a priest's vestments. When Molly learns that she is free she throws herself in Barney's arms and happiness reigns in the hearts of both.

Second Episode of Paramount's First Serial—"Who Is Number One?"

The second episode of "Who is Number One?", Paramount's first serial, is titled "The Flying Fortress," and contains some of the most thrilling incidents ever screened. Kathleen Clifford is in the featured role. The mystery of "Who is Number One?" deepens. Aimee assists the Hales against the T-T-T and a flying fortress is placed in operation. The flying fortress plunges through an obstacle. The fugitives, who have marked Tommy as a victim of "Number One," flee aboard a locomotive, but are overtaken by the flying fortress and cornered.

Thrills aplenty characterize this second episode of Paramount's first serial. Action is the by-word—there is action every minute Kathleen Clifford is in the midst of the excitement every minute and convinces by her dare-devil stunts that she is entitled to a place with the screen's most daring "dare-devils."

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, the second episode of Paramount serial, featuring Kathleen Clifford, "Who is Number One?". "The Flying Fortrss" is the title.

Are You Getting Most Possible Out of Advertising?

Are you getting the most out of your advertising?

It will pay you to read these Ad. Talks whether or not you use them just as they art written. It will save you a lot of time in wading through long-winded press matter to find out what the picture is ABOUT.

That is what you want to tell the public—and in the fewest words possible. But you cannot talk to the public about something of which you know nothing yourselves. Read these before you try to write the advertising for your newspapers.

And after you have read them, you will find that they make mighty good reading notices that most newspapers will give free to theatres that advertise liberally. Try using these in your daily papers.

On another page we discuss exploitation with you each week, but after all it's you that must do the exploiting. Be informed so that you will exploit intelligently.

Saturday Morning "Mats" Prove Big Success

Saturday morning matinees for school children have been tried out with such success by several of the Marcus Loew theatres that they are to be ultimately adopted in all the houses of the circuit, according to reports from Paramount, which is supplying the features for these exhibitions.

Earlier releases of pictures with Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark have proven especially popular.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Mutual's Music Expert Is Also Against the Tax

Thinks Exhibitor Should Divorce His Program from All Taxable Tunes and Let Distributors Suggest Music for the Pictures

JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN, director of the music service of the Mutual Film Corporation and who has made an exhaustive study of the exhibitors' music tax problems, is also among those who have arrayed themselves against the tax imposed by the authors and publishers. He thinks the exhibitor should eliminate all taxable music from his program.

Concerning the question, Mr. O'Sullivan said: "There is no reason for the exhibitor to feel alarmed over the activities of the American Society of Authors and Composers in enforcing the tax on music composed and published by members of that society. However, precautions should be taken that no taxable music is used, as the simplest and most effective means of eliminating this rapacious element from the motion picture sphere is by ignoring their output and using only non-taxable music.

"The exhibitor who is using Mutual cue-sheets is protected in this matter, as in all the musical settings only non-taxable music is cued in. By following the suggestions in these cue-sheets the exhibitor can rest assured that he will not be liable to litigation on account of music tax.

"Service, to be of real benefit to the exhibitor, should be all that the name implies, and of this service the music suggestions have become an important element.

"Under present conditions it is up to the music service department of the film distributors to eliminate all taxable music from their cue-sheets so as to protect the exhibitor. For screen purposes the so-called 'popular' music is not essential, except in light comedies and direct cues for up-to-date dances, and even of this class of music there is plenty available that is not subject to tax."

Irving Cummings In Metro-Barrymore Feature

"An American Widow" Has Well Selected Cast and Is Being Directed by Frank Reicher—Screen Version from the Play

WHAT Metro has announced as a superb cast has been selected to support Ethel Barrymore in her next Metro wonderplay, "An American Widow," which is now in the process of production.

Heading the list of players is Irving Cummings, who will have the role opposite Miss Barrymore in this five-act feature, directed by Frank Reicher, and adopted by Albert Shelby Le Vino from the play by Kellett Chambers. Mr. Cummings' most recent appearance was in W. A. Brady's "Rasputin, the Black Monk." For the Fox Company he has been co-starred recently in three features with Virginia Pearson.

H. Dudley Hawley, a well known actor of the speaking stage, will make his screen debut with Miss Barrymore in "An American Widow," playing the Earl of Dexminster. His twenty-one years' stage experience includes drama, comedy, vaudeville, stock and musical comedy.

Earnest Stallard will have the role of Tutwiler in the new Barrymore production. Mr. Stallard is considered one of the most distinguished English players now on American soil. He was a member of the late Kyrle Bellew's support in "The Builder of Bridges."

Alfred Kappler is another well known player of the cast of the coming production. Mr. Kappler first won recognition in musical comedy and vaudeville, being featured successfully with Audrey Maple.

An old Metro favorite, George A. Wright, will play a county judge in the new production. Mr. Wright has been seen as a friendly valet in "His Father's Son," with Lionel Barrymore, as Simpson in "The White Raven," with the present star, and in other Metro wonderplays.

"The Secret Game" Has Good Cast

What is said to be a cast of more than ordinary excellence has been chosen to support Sessue Hayakawa in his forthcoming Paramount picture "The Secret Game," directed by William C. de Mille.

The star has the role of Nara-Nara, a Japanese detective; Jack Holt is Major Northfield, head of the Quartermaster's Department, supposedly located in Los Angeles; Florence Vidor is the girl in the case, May Kelso has the role of Miss Loring, while Charles Ogle is Dr. Smith, a ringleader in the machinations of German spies. Raymond Hatton is said to have one of the most unique parts that he has ever had, that of Mrs. Harris, a spy disguised as a woman.

Thomas Meighan Opposite Billie Burke in New Feature

For the cast of "The Land of Promise," in which Billie Burke will be starred shortly, Paramount announces a number of excellent screen players, including Thomas Meighan, who appears opposite Miss Burke in the leading male role.

Helen T. Tracy, J. W. Johnson, Mary Alden, Margaret Seddon, Walter McEwen, Grace Studeford and John Raymond complete the cast, and in each case it is claimed they were chosen because of their peculiar fitness to the roles.

Farrar Spectacle Eclipses Her Former One

According to W. E. Greene, president of Artcraft, "The Woman God Forgot" is meeting with unusual success, and the records of the company show that the Farrar spectacle has eclipsed "Joan the Woman" in every way.

"The popularity of this subject," said Mr. Greene, "demonstrates conclusively that the objection of some exhibitors to a costume play is unfounded. 'The Woman God Forgot' has played to turn-away business in all parts of the country and has been acclaimed by critics in trade, theatrical and daily papers as a superpicture standing as a colossal monument to the remarkable degree of artistry the motion picture has attained.

"Scores of theatres whose patrons were unable to get into the theatres when the film was exhibited have rebooked the film, the number of such return engagements greatly exceeding our expectations. In New York the Rialto theatre opened at ten o'clock in the morning during the week the subject ran there.

"In Cincinnati, Ohio, the Walnut Street theatre played to absolute capacity, and the newspapers frankly stated that it surpassed any spectacular attraction that had ever visited that city at two-dollar prices. We have reports like this from coast to coast, which tend to show that this picture will prove one of the greatest attractions."

Goldwyn Specials Meet with Favor Generally

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, according to an announcement made through its publicity department, is having exceptionally good fortune with its special productions, Rex Beach's "The Auction Block," "The Manx-Man" and the Ira M. Lowry production, "For the Freedom of the World."

The Rex Beach feature has been distributed to all Goldwyn offices in North America and is also in Australia, where it is claimed to be meeting with general favor among the exhibitors.

Bookings on "The Manx-Man" are said to be climbing steadily, and Goldwyn attributes much of the impetus of the past fortnight to the claim that exhibitors in many sections have played the production at a good profit. Marcus Loew is now showing "The Manx-Man" in his New York City houses.

Goldwyn offices in the various American zones are said to have booked their prints of "For the Freedom of the World" well ahead. The picture is reported to be one of the most timely war panoramas of current issue.

No ill effects in booking have been felt by Goldwyn, it is announced, because of the war tax situation which recently went into force.

Hodkinson Enters "Tenth Circle of Film Experience"

Prominent Distributor Who Has Returned to Industry After Absence of Six Months Has Had Worlds of Experience in All Branches of Business—First "Circle" Was His Exhibitor Experience

IN the course of an interview given recently by W. W. Hodkinson at the offices of his new distributing organization, he stated that he felt that his greatest usefulness to the motion picture industry had been his knack, as he called it, of bringing together the forces which can and he feels, must work together toward a common goal of stability and success.

Nine Previous Experiences

Mr. Hodkinson spoke of nine previous complete experiences in the business, the present company being his tenth "circle." He added that in each of the previous circles he had worked out his principles as far as circumstances would admit, and had progressed to the next circle because in the larger field alone were new opportunities to be found.

The trade will remember that the first of those circles was a small theatre in Ogden, Utah, from which Mr. Hodkinson, faced with the difficulty of getting the sort of films he wanted, entered the exchange business as a side line, in order, if possible, to have some control of the product he had to show. From this first step his progress has been largely that search for a better product; and for the sort of protection to the exhibitor which he has felt was the fundamental basis of the stability of the business.

In all that fight with conditions up to the organization of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, where he first endeavored to apply the principles nationally, probably the most interesting from the viewpoint of the exhibitor with his own problems in his own territory, is the story of his work in San Francisco.

It was in the old Nickelodeon days, in 1911, that Mr. Hodkinson, then with the General Film Company, faced a situation that, with the thirty-six reels of film then issued, was common throughout the country. There was daily change of three or four reels, requiring each house to use twenty-one to twenty-eight reels weekly, making it impossible for two or more houses to be patronized by the same people, as they inevitably saw films they had seen a day or two before in the other house if they tried the experiment of going to a competitor's show. The big houses, already building, were using the entire first-run output and ruining the business of the smaller exhibitors. As Mr. Hodkinson put it at that time, "These houses pay big rentals, but I don't think the business of all the smaller houses can be ignored on that account. The weakness of the situation is due to the large houses giving the public too much for the money. They should not have been allowed at less than ten cents admission and less frequent changes of film."

A New Angle

Other complicating causes made the situation still more chaotic. Mr. Hodkinson approached this problem from a new and revolutionary angle. His plan was to require the larger houses to charge ten cents and change only two or at most three times a week. The smaller houses were to be put in the same regulations, with a limit of three changes weekly. At that time each exhibitor was trying to get at least one first-run film each day, and filling in with reels already shown by his competitors. The readjustment would give him films of the same age, none of which had been shown in his location before. Here are the words in which Mr. Hodkinson set down the solution of the local situation, six years ago, when no one else, either exhibitor or producer or distributor, saw anything ahead but higher rentals and a general scramble for the newest films without attention to quality or competitive conditions. It is extremely interesting in the light of the present and of whatever plans Mr. Hodkinson may have to offer to the industry. In his report to the General Film Company, Mr. Hodkinson wrote:

The Daily Change

"To offset the imagined disadvantage of switching from daily change to three times weekly, the following advantages may be shown. No conflict or running pictures previously seen, with great emphasis on the fact that the showing of pictures previously seen is responsible for reducing the attendance. Each patron will soon learn that the three places do not conflict and then will attend all instead of one only, having two nights in which to do it, which really figures cutting your number of changes in two but increasing the number of likely prospective customers by three."

This was written before the arguments against daily change were thought of by anyone else, and before the quality picture had come as even a hope for the future. Mr. Hodkinson had this in view, also, as was indicated by the following paragraph:

"Further advantages are that it is easier to get three genuine features than seven, and genuine features properly put on and advertised will cause the first night audience to send others to the second night performance. The running of pictures more than one night will induce the manufacturers to turn out reels with more second-night drawing power while, under present arrangements, the main consideration of the exhibitor is that the reel be new. Such an arrangement would let each exhibitor announce his whole program knowing that no one not seeing pictures in an entirely different locality could have seen any of them. At present no exhibitor cares to put out any poster excepting that covering his new reel, and disappoints his public when it gets inside. And so on, world without end."

The story is completed with the showing of the reports of the San Francisco Exchange for the month immediately preceding the change and that immediately following. Not only did the exchange increase its business by more than 20 per cent, despite all predictions to the contrary and bitter opposition from the theatre managers, but the theatres themselves, after the first weeks, found that new stability and assurance of continued patronage that has been changing the business slowly from a get-rich-quick proposition to a substantial industry. And stability was really new six years ago, as old exhibitors well remember.

Protecting the Exhibitor

It was in San Francisco, in the situation just related, that Mr. Hodkinson first tested out his principle of protection for the exhibitor, in his guaranteed territory, no matter what his rental. After the San Francisco situation was cleared up, a similar plan for the entire United States was offered to the General Film Company by Mr. Hodkinson. A quotation from this plan, as Mr. Hodkinson wrote it in 1912, will illustrate the continuity of his development toward the idea which he put into his first great national distributing organization and also toward what may well be expected of him in his new enterprise. It need hardly be said that Mr. Hodkinson's plans have seldom been limited to himself, but have been capable of adoption throughout the industry, as the distribution principles he laid down in Paramount were accepted generally throughout the distribution and production branches of the trade as a cure for many of the evils of three years ago.

In 1912, writing his outline of a plan for the development of the business of the General Film Company, then at the very apex of its career, Mr. Hodkinson predicted:

"Our future depends on our ability to increase the efficiency of a certain number, a very limited number, of reels so that they can do for us the following things:

"Bring in large rentals per reel, control the business of the best houses, and in time let us eliminate all reels that have no value. Under present conditions there is nothing to prevent the independents from making just as good service as we are renting. In connection with this let a concern or combination place upon the market four, eight or twelve reels weekly of really superior films, say stuff like the Famous Players Company announces, the Helen Gardner stuff, or just pick-up features wherever they may be purchased and that concern will be able to find a market throughout the country for a few superior films that will bring more profits than we will get from our many, especially in view of the fact that such a movement would have as followers the best of the licensed business. What has the General Film Company to-day to offer the man who would get more than five cents admission? Our business is built to cater to the Nickelodeons, although the Nickelodeons are bound to be superseded by the higher class places."

"Scandal" is Considered a Triumph Two-Fold

Constance Talmadge and Lewis J. Selznick Share the Honors Resulting from Production, Distributed by Select Pictures

Constance Talmadge
(Selznick's "Scandal")

ACCORDING to the announcement emanating last week from Select Pictures, through the publicity department, the markedly welcome reception accorded "Scandal" by critics and exhibitors registers a triumph for both Constance Talmadge, the star of the feature, and Lewis J. Selznick, who presents Miss Talmadge in the production, which is distributed through the Select Pictures Exchanges.

The announcement cites that it was Lewis J. Selznick's judgment which placed in the ranks of the stars Miss Talmadge, whose past performances were not sufficient to indicate the latent ability waiting to be developed by director and producer. And, Constance Talmadge has made good with a vengeance, it appears. "Scandal" is her first star picture, and is also the first of her Select Star Series.

It is reported by Select Pictures that exhibitors throughout the country have been very generous in booking "Scandal," and that wherever the picture has been shown the exhibitors have expressed themselves as pleased with this first offering of a new star. This fact is said to have been registered in letters and telegrams received by Select Pictures either at headquarters or through its branches.

In the meantime, it is announced that Miss Talmadge has completed another of her Select Star pictures, "The Honeymoon," which is now being cut and titled.

Jewel Takes Great Pride in Feature Titles

Considers "The Grand Passion" One of Most Appropriate and Luring Ever Used on a Picture—Officials Select Names

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC., which has recently announced a number of attractive titles for their feature productions, considers none more appropriate and alluring than its newest, "The Grand Passion," which is being used on the feature in which Dorothy Phillips again appears as a Jewel star.

Officials began with George Bronson Howard's "Come Through," which was titled by R. H. Cochrane, vice president of Universal, who also named the Jewel feature, "Pay Me," in which Miss Phillips first made her appearance as a Jewel star. Then came "Sirens of the Sea," which answers to the call of a number of godfathers who stood sponsor at the Christening, and Lois Weber herself is responsible for the title of "The Price of a Good Time," which closed a run at the Broadway theatre last week, and in which Mildred Harris is the featured player.

When Thomas Addison's story, titled "The Boss of Powderville" was first seen on the screen in the Jewel projection room, it was decided that its title should be changed, and as is the custom, slips were sent around to the various departments, for the purpose of obtaining a "symposium" on the best possible title for the story of human appeal and power. By an odd coincidence, four of the officials decided on "The Grand Passion" and, when its possibilities as a title were realized, lesser lights quickly followed suit, with the result that "The Boss of Powderville" became, overnight, "The Grand Passion" and lost not an iota of strength by the transition.

Exhibitor Hare Finds That Advertising Pays

One of the many exhibitors who have been tying up with Paramount's "Who Is Number One?" advertising campaign is William O. Hare, manager of the Majestic theatre in Des Moines, Ia.

That he is well pleased with results is evidenced by the following wire, which he sent Paramount: "Very much gratified with first showing of Paramount serial 'Who Is Number One?' at this theatre starting yesterday. Played to capacity all day. Obliged to turn away many during evening. Our method of bringing out great advertising possibilities of title of serial, coupled with Paramount quality and publicity should assure us very satisfactory returns for entire period."

Mr. Hare shows "Who Is 'Number One?'" three days a week.

Jewel Claims Big Business for Its Features

Unusual business has been claimed by Jewel Productions, Inc., on Jewel productions, which, up to date, include "Come Through," "Pay Me," "Sirens of the Sea," "The Man Without a Country," "The Co-Respondent," and "The Price of a Good Time."

Hodkinson's "Tenth Circle"

Interesting History

This interesting bit of heretofore unpublished history was written five years ago, before the first Famous Players production had been released, and when the number of ten-cent houses in the whole United States could be counted on one's fingers. Mr. Hodkinson has, in nearly every case, foreseen and worked out the developments of the industry in its higher business aspects. Each step has been related to those which have gone before, but have not been an imitation of them. And the industry as a whole has, by following the line thus opened, found many of its best paths. The new enterprise can, it is confidently predicted, be looked to not to produce an imitation of any of the previous Hodkinson enterprises, but something as revolutionary as the suggestion of a company with twelve reels weekly superseding in volume of business, a company with sixty reels weekly of inferior product—a thing which actually happened within two years. What the direction of that new movement will be may be indicated in the statement from the Hodkinson offices this week:

"My distribution system is designed to help the exhibitor do what my previous distribution plans, fitted to other conditions, did for the producers. It is still being worked out in its details, but my experience to date convinces me that it is not only feasible but inevitable."

Unique Scenes Presented in Latest Metro Production

Vivid scenes of Red Cross rescue work in desolate "No Man's Land" after a battle are to be shown in "God's Message," Nazimova's first Metro picture. This picturization of Mabel Wagnalls's novel, "A Rose-Bush of a Thousand Years," is being directed by George D. Baker, and the rescue scenes are on Staten Island.

An ultra-Bohemian Parisian cafe of the Latin Quarter was built at the Metro studios for the staging of some of the scenes in "God's Message."

An Effective Close-Up in Triangle's "The Stainless Barrier"

Francis Ford, Who Will Hereafter Alternate in the Direction of Harold Lockwood's Metro Pictures

Viola Dana Starts Picture at Metro Coast Studio

Viola Dana, Metro star, has begun work in "The Winding Trail," her first picture to be produced at the Metro West coast studios, under the direction of John H. Collins. "The Winding Trail" has been written by June Mathis and Katherine Kavanaugh in collaboration.

"The Winding Trail" is said to be a powerful Western drama of the early mining days, and will present historical characters who actually lived in the period depicted in the Metro picture. A strong cast is being engaged to support Miss Dana, including Clifford Bruce, Haywood Mack and Mabel Van Buren.

Bickers Writes Exclusively for Mae Murray

After purchasing two plays written especially for Mae Murray, Carl Laemmle has entered into an agreement with H. Sheridan Bickers, by which this English playwright and dramatic critic will write exclusively hereafter for Bluebird's newest star. Mr. Bickers has previously been engaged as staff writer and title editor for Paralta, and latterly has been acting as scenario and publicity director for Lois Weber.

Work has already been started on the first of the Bickers stories for Miss Murray, which will be produced by her director, Robert Leonard. The plot of this is being carefully handled, as it is intended as a novelty in photodrama, and will, in part, mark the screen's incursion into the hitherto unexploited field of classic pantomime.

In "The Eternal Columbine," as this story is called, Miss Murray will for the first time in motion pictures return to the sphere of her many former triumphs as a dancer.

Triangle Studios Set New Production Record

Work Reported Progressing Steadily on Manuscript and Mechanics for Early 1918 Plays—Six Directors Rest for Renewed Attack

WITH two new stories cast during the past week, three films completed and two pictures, "The Ship of Doom" and "The Sudden Gentleman," shipped, Triangle's Culver City studio appears to be easily keeping pace with the production schedule set some weeks ago.

Director Raymond Wells has started shooting on "Man Above the Law," a story of life with the Navajo Indians on the painted desert. In this tale of the Southwest in which a squaw man rules an entire Indian nation, Jack Richardson has the leading role. He is supported by Josie Sedgwick, Claire McDowell, Olga Gray and Dark Cloud.

An unusual Western story has been chosen as the next vehicle for Roy Stewart, Triangle cowboy star. Director Cliff Smith will work with such well known favorites as Fritzie Ridgeway and George Hernandez, in support of the star.

Latest Triangle Appearance, "The Man Hater" She Hates Men. At least That Is What One is Led to Suspect From the Title of Winifred Allen's Story

Director Jack Dillon is nearing the completion of his latest Triangle offering, "Betty Takes a Hand," in which Olive Thomas is supported by Charles Gunn.

Lynn Reynolds is making rapid strides on the story, "The Gown of Destiny," on which he is handling the megaphone. Some of the costumes to be worn in this picture are said to be marvelous creations while the wardrobe department is working overtime preparing the uniforms for the allied and German soldiers called for in this script.

Stories completed last week at the Triangle's Culver City studio include "Without Honor," featuring Margery Wilson, under the direction of E. Mason Hopper; Director Jack Conway's picture, "Because of the Woman," featuring Belle Bennett, and in which she is supported by Jack Livingston, George Chesebro and other favorites; and "Until They Get Me," a story of the Canadian Northwest, directed by Frank Borzage and including Jack Curtis, Pauline Starke and Joe King in the cast.

In addition to Conway, Hopper and Borzage, the other directors who are waiting for stories are Ferris Hartman, Thomas N. Heffron and G. P. Hamilton.

Hayden Talbot Joins Triangle Scenario Staff

Hayden Talbot, journalist, foreign correspondent and playwright, is the most recent addition to the scenario writing forces at the Triangle Culver City studios. In addition to his newspaper experience, Talbot is well known in the theatrical world and has met with considerable success in the motion picture industry. Among Talbot's plays are "The Little Joker" and "The Truth Wagon," both produced by Oliver Morosco. He also wrote "O Joe," produced by Oliver Morosco at the Burbank theatre, Los Angeles, with Walter Edwards, now a Triangle director, in the title role.

Miss Hazel MacDonald, formerly on the Photoplay Magazine staff, and a well-known newspaper woman, has been added to the force of readers in the Triangle scenario department. Miss MacDonald is now working on the large number of manuscripts which have come to Triangle as a result of its announcement that all aspirants would get a fair hearing, regardless of previous literary achievements.

George du Bois Porter, of the scenario staff at Culver City, has left for New York for a six weeks' vacation.

Good Characterization and Plenty of Fighting Are Among the Features Which Should Go a Long Way Toward Making Herbert Brenon's "Empty Pockets," a Strong Production

Brenon's Position in Producing Field Unique

Frederick James Smith Comments Upon It in Article Which He Calls "Herbert Brenon's Declaration of Independence"

HERBERT BRENON'S unique and distinguished position in the motion picture industry, brought about by his steady climb to the head of his own plant, company and all, has brought forth many and sundry comments, one of which, by Frederick James Smith, published here, will no doubt be of interest:

I envy Herbert Brenon his opportunity.

Because he is the only big motion picture director in the industry today who is absolutely independent. Which means that no contracts or agreements exist to curb his ideals or curtail his plans.

Consider the tremendous opportunity. Mr. Brenon intends to make his independence mean something. I have talked to him. Fresh from a hospital bed, he is alert, dynamic, brimming over with ideas, restless with nervous energy. He convalesced, let me add, with a telephone—connecting direct with his studio—rigged to his cot.

"My plans are broad but I promise you that I shall not supervise productions," he declared. "I shall personally make four, possibly five, productions a year. These will get my individual attention down to the smallest detail. They will be mine in every sense of the word. I hope you will make that statement go on record."

Mr. Brenon, I am sure, feels that the photoplay is not advancing because directors are handicapped by producing and distributing organizations. Gentlemen at de luxe roll top desks decide that exactly so much money may be spent on a picture. They surround a director—no matter how big—with scores of entanglements. Business has harnessed the brains of the screen drama to the grindstone.

None of that for Mr. Brenon. His independence means that, of the great directors, he alone will make each and every picture-drama bearing his name. His studios will not be crowded with the production of dozens of film plays of which he necessarily cannot personally produce.

Speed has been the bane of film production. Mr. Brenon intends to eliminate that. Not that he leans towards art at the expense of business. Or vice versa. Mr. Brenon would not, for instance, cut expenses on a big studio set if he felt that it was necessary to a production. I know, because I have studied his plans for the production of "Kismet." Nor would he waste money by going to California or some other cross-country spot to do the Russian scenes of "The Fall of the Romanoffs." They were staged close to the New Jersey studios. The director created his own atmosphere, instead of getting nature to do it for him.

Mr. Brenon not only controls his own producing corporation, but he has taken over the complete control of his studios, laboratories and factory. He can handle a photoplay from the studio floor to the finished positive print. This because he wants to send a production to the public just exactly as he wishes it. "We will turn out as near perfect prints as possible," Mr. Brenon told me. "There will be no inferior prints in order to save a few cents a foot."

Mr. Brenon has radical ideas on expenditures. "The story will always be my first and foremost consideration," he declares. "I shall not spend thousands on puerile themes that count for nothing. I shall spend my money to get the best story and the most out of it. That means—in the end—the most for art and the most for the box office."

The producer does not believe in stars. No ingenues are waiting at the Brenon Studios to have human themes sugared to fit their limited abilities. "I shall present stars on the screen only where the role absolutely demands it," Mr. Brenon told me. "In 'Kismet,' for instance, Otis Skinner is vital to the character of the beggar, Haji. He built it into a big, vivid, dominating stage figure."

"Love Letters" Title of Dorothy Dalton Picture

Paramount announced last week that the title of the next picture starring Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star, has been changed to "Love Letters." The picture will be released in December, it is announced.

Brisk Demand Claimed for Essanay Productions

Brisk demand for recent Essanay releases is reported by branch managers of the George Kleine exchanges, according to Essanay, which insists that Kleine agents have received reports from exhibitors that indicate that Essanay pictures are very popular with motion picture patrons. Apparently they approve George K. Spoor's policy of presenting comedy-dramas to help offset the worries caused by the war.

"Widow's Might" Is Title of New Eltinge Feature

Following "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," Julian Eltinge's second Paramount play, released this month, the impersonator of feminine characters will be presented in "The Widow's Might," it was announced last week. William C. de Mille will direct the feature, which has as its locale a Western ranch which is said to provide opportunities for scenes and situations entirely different from those in "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," which ran all last week at the Rialto, New York.

Jazzville Built for New Arbuckle Comedy

Jazzville was created in California, wherein the scenes of the comedy, "A Country Hero," which will be Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's next production following "Fatty at Coney Island," were staged. It is said Arbuckle spent much time immediately after reaching California not long since, motoring around in search of a site for Jazzville, but no luck attended the trips and it was decided to build the town in the rear of the Arbuckle Long Beach studio.

Alice Lake has rejoined the comedian as leading lady, it is announced. The new Arbuckle comedies will be released through Paramount.

Goldwyn Plans Ahead for Mae Marsh Features

Goldwyn announced this week that when Mae Marsh completes the final scenes in "The Cinderella Man," adapted from the stage piece, the star will begin immediate preparations for her next screen production, giving herself no more than a week-end of rest before starting work again. Her new picture, it is announced, will be "The Beloved Traitor," by Frank Packard.

Since "The Beloved Traitor" includes many episodes dealing with the life of fisher-folk, more open-air work "on location" is said to be necessary for this film than for any previous Goldwyn production. To achieve just the right atmosphere, Goldwyn expects to send Miss Marsh and her company first to the rocky coast of New England.

Since Director George Loane Tucker is giving all his time to the cutting and editing of "The Cinderella Man," a director new to Goldwyn, William Worthington, will take charge of the next Marsh picture. E. A. Thurston will be assistant director.

Educational Gets Wire Praising Hawaiian Trip

R. W. Hammonds, of Educational Film Corporation, last week received a telegram from Eugene H. Roth, of San Francisco, in regard to "A Flying Trip Through Hawaiian Islands" that speaks for itself.

The telegram read: "Have truthfully never witnessed such genuine approval and applause of any scenic picture as was accorded your first part of 'A Flying Trip Through the Hawaiian Islands,' at the opening of our California theater last night. I look forward to equal approval of second part which follows. The picture helped make California opening memorial. Keep up this high standard in your future releases."

Blackton Discusses Charm of Parker Novels

Declares That Quality of Humanness Is Element That Makes Them Successful and Popular—Puts Himself into All His Work

J. Stuart Blackton

DISCUSSING the peculiar quality of Sir Gilbert Parker's works of fiction, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who is producing for the screen some of the best known novels by that writer, for release by Paramount Pictures Corporation, said recently: "It is not so difficult to put one's finger upon the element in Sir Gilbert Parker's books that renders them so signally successful and so universally popular. It is the quality of humanness. Perhaps I have had a better opportunity than most persons who have read Sir Gilbert's books to judge, because in addition to having read them I have talked long with the author while I was producing 'The Judgment House,' and have discovered that he puts something of himself into all his works.

"Sir Gilbert Parker is a student of human character also. He reads the natures of men and women with a discriminating eye and a retentive mind. He has a charity for the foibles, frailties and follies of men and women that is as wide as the sea, and an appreciation of their efforts that is generous in the extreme. Add to this the fact that he is an artist in letters, with remarkable powers in the way of characterization and descriptive writing, to say nothing of ingenuity at plot construction, and you have the ideal combination for an author of books that will be read and remembered by everyone who cares at all for fiction that embodies strength and historical accuracy, coupled with a human interest that makes the characters and their doings realistic and compelling.

"I count it as a great privilege to have been associated with Sir Gilbert Parker for even a brief time, while filming some of his works. I count it also a privilege to have had the task of translating these to the screen. And I know instinctively that when 'The Judgment House' is released by the Paramount Pictures Corporation on November 19 it will do justice to the author. With me it has largely been a labor of love. I have never worked harder to put into a picture the real essence of the writer's original thought. And having used every endeavor to follow him, I feel that I have succeeded."

Mothers' Clubs Desire to See Tucker Feature

Request Comes to McClure Pictures from President of the Federation, Who Thinks Film Carries a Message for Every Woman

THE unusual interest which is said to have been created throughout the country by George Loane Tucker's production of "Mother," distributed as a territorial feature by McClure Pictures, was strongly accented last week when an unusual request was received by McClure in the form of a letter. The communication was from the President of the Federated Mothers' Clubs of America, bespeaking a showing of the Tucker feature before members of the various branches of the organization, which are located in the principal cities of the United States.

In her communication, the leader of the movement which numbers among its membership women of all classes and walks of life, states that the McClure picture "Mother" carries a message for every woman in the land.

The McClure organization has the request under advisement and arrangements may be made, if possible, whereby Elizabeth Risdon, star of "Mother," will appear at the showings in New York City, making a short address on the subject dealt with in the Tucker feature. Miss Risdon at present is starring in the William Faversham production of "Misalliance," by George Bernard Shaw, current at the New Broadhurst theatre.

"Mother," which was filmed by George Loane Tucker from the novel by Eden Philpott, "The Mother," deals with the theme of mother-love. The picture is a human document, depicting the hopes and fears of a fond mother for an erring son and points out a strong moral to the children of the present generation. It is considered one of Mr. Tucker's most noteworthy efforts.

Pokes and Jabs in Jaxon "Burglar" Comedy

Pokes and Jabs become burglars, with what are said to be most laughable results, in the current Jaxon comedy, "Breaking In," a General Film release. This is the sixth and last picture of the fourth series of Jaxon comedies released through General and will be followed by a fifth series of six subjects, according to present plans.

DeMille Thinks Hunting Helps in Directing

Director General of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York for Brief Stay—Centers Interest on His "Specials"

CECIL B. DEMILLE, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who is in the East on his first visit in this territory for some time, made some interesting statements regarding his vacation and directing when seen by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"The last time I took a vacation," remarked Mr. DeMille, "I made the serious mistake of coming to New York first. The result was—there was no vacation. So this year I went off into the country first and came to New York last. Now, I've had my rest, you see, and I'm all ready to jump into the whirl of things."

"Speaking of pictures—I'm immensely interested just now in my special 'DeMille' pictures. The first is 'The Whispering Chorus,' by Perley Poor Sheehan. Honestly, there's one of the most dramatic, most powerful psychological stories I've ever read. It is a wonderful piece of work. Miss MacPherson has written the scenario. I can't say much about it yet—save that it is a purely modern story with an element of sacrifice that equals that in 'A Tale of Two Cities.'

"I do not apprehend any momentous changes in directorial or productional policies with us in the year to come," pursued Mr. DeMille. "Of course we are striving for advancement—always. Really, there isn't such a great deal more to be said. It is just a case of forge ahead and make each picture better than the last. But variety—variety—that's the thing.

"What we must avoid is having a hundred photoplays, each with the same type of plot—no matter how good each may be, individually speaking. There must be variation; it is essential, vital. That is what makes the game interesting—like hunting moose," he smiled—"it's the search for novelty.

"I am an absolute believer in the vital necessity, also, of allowing individuality to develop in directors and actors. I never tell a director to 'do it that way.' I tell him what is needed and watch him do it in his own way. I take suggestions from everyone. Why, I've had splendid ideas given me by extra people. You are never too old or too wise to learn in the picture business. You know, that idea of individuality is preserved and fostered in the whole organization—in the business as well as the artistic departments. It's the only way. It's democratic!"

J. Gordon Edwards Directed Theda Bara in Fox's "Cleopatra"

June Caprice on Eleventh William Fox Feature

The cast has been nearly completed and work has been commenced at Fort Lee on June Caprice's eleventh photoplay under the management of William Fox. The company of the young star, whose last release was "Miss U. S. A.," will include players who have nearly all worked together previously in Fox productions.

The role of the leading character, Dola Belton, is divided, Kittens Reichert portraying Dola's childhood period and Miss Caprice carrying her on through later years. Other women in the company are Florence Ashbrook, who played in "The Scarlet Letter," and Inez Marcel, who had parts in "The Mischief Maker" and "A Small Town Girl." Dan Mason, who has appeared in "Thou Shalt Not Steal" and four or five other Fox pictures; Richard R. Neill, who was cast in "A Child of the Wild," "The Battle of Life" and "The Ragged Princess," and Tom Burrough, have also been chosen for the new picture. Three or four roles remain open.

The scenario of the production is by Adrian Johnson and the director is Harry Millarde, who produced "Every Girl's Dream" and "Miss U. S. A." for Fox.

Bluebirds Fly Again to Broadway in New York

After a lapse of one week, to introduce the latest Jewel production, "The Price of a Good Time," at the Broadway theatre, full-week showings of Bluebirds resumed there Sunday, November 4, with presentations of "The Winged Mystery," with Franklyn Farnum the star. This is a prerelease, the regular schedule calling for distributions of "The Winged Mystery" throughout the country November 26. In this feature, Mr. Farnum, who plays a dual role, has the aid of two leading ladies in progressing a mystery tale—Claire Du Brey and Rosemary Theby.

Berman Returns from Three Weeks' Western Trip

H. M. Berman, New York manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., returned to New York last week after a three weeks' Western trip in the interest of Jewel productions.

In Chicago, Mr. Berman's first stop, headquarters at 220 South State street, reported a flourishing condition under the managership of Eli Van Ronkel. In Kansas City, the next stop, a publicity drive for the Thanhouser Jewel Patriotic feature, "The Man Without a Country," resulted in the placing of the feature, on November 3 and 4, in Convention Hall.

In St. Louis headquarters were seen to be imperative with the increase in the business of the Kansas City territory which Kansas City alone could not handle and Mr. Berman there established headquarters and will this week appoint a St. Louis manager.

Mr. Berman leaves Thursday on another three weeks' trip in the interests of Jewel Productions, Inc., whose features so far include George Bronson-Howard's "Come Through," "Pay Me," "Sirens of the Sea," "The Man Without a Country" and the Ralph W. Ince production, "The Co-Respondent," starring Elaine Hammerstein.

New Stars Announced in Falcon Features

Mollie McConnell and Daniel Gilfeather, leads in "His Old-Fashioned Dad," a drama said to contain unusual heart interest, are new stars in the Falcon Features. The picture is the fourteenth of the features released by General Film, and was supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The next subject in the Falcon series will be "Zollenstein," it is announced. The picture is described as a drama of romance and intrigue, featuring Vola Vale and Monroe Salisbury.

"Lest We Forget" Used Large Number of Extras

Through information furnished by the publicity department of Select Pictures, it became known last week that it is estimated 27,000 people have been used in the filming of "Lest We Forget," the war drama in which Lewis J. Selznick is presenting Rita Jolivet. After six months of steady work, the picture itself is completed, and the titling and cutting practically so.

"Lest We Forget" was made by the Rita Jolivet Film Corporation, and will be distributed through Select.

Pathe Committee Lauds Baby Marie Osborne Feature

The report of the Pathe film committee on "The Little Patriot," a five-reel Gold Rooster Play to be released December 2, is said to read: "Best Baby Osborne picture yet."

The story is said to be full of human interest and little touches, but is not without its decided thrills.

All-Star Cast in New World-Brady Production

"The Volunteer," Featuring Madge Evans and Henry Hull, Also Presents Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, William A. Brady and Others

PROBABLY the most distinguished cast that has ever been put together for a World-Picture Brady-Made is the one assisting Madge Evans in "The Volunteer," a new production by that company in which little Miss Evans and Henry Hull are the featured players. The list includes Kitty Gordon, June Elvidge, Ethel Clayton, Evelyn Greeley, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love, Harley Knoles and William A. Brady.

The World Brady press department admits that it is true that each of the screen players, directors and magnates whose name occurs in this enumeration appears for not more than a minute or two with little Madge, and thus for the occasion becomes a "bit" actor or actress. But it is a fact nevertheless that every one of these artists of the film has a separate scene with the diminutive star.

It all happens like this: In "The Volunteer," which is a play about the war but not of it in a battlefield sense, little Madge years, whose father goes to France with his regiment, while her mother joins the Red Cross at the front. In this exigency Madge Evans is sent to relatives out West, to remain until the conflict is over.

But before she goes, the little star bids good-bye to all the notables in the World Studio at Fort Lee, and to most of those who are not notables but vastly important factors in the making of motion pictures—such as electricians, grips, property men, scene painters and the like.

For the opening scene of "The Volunteer" director Knoles had a platform built outside the studio wall nearly up to the roof, and from this he "shot" the whole interior of the great structure with its seven picture plays in the course of simultaneous manufacture. It is believed that the inner life of the photoplay actors is more fully shown in little Madge's newest production than ever before.

Larry Trimble Directs Petrova's New Feature

Is the Second Subject Star Will Make in Series of Eight to Be Distributed Through First National Exhibitors' Circuit

Madame Petrova, Who Has Made "Daughter of Destiny" as Her First Feature Contribution as Star of Her Own Company

THE announcement was made this week by Madame Petrova that Larry Trimble has been engaged to direct the second of her eight starring features to be distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Trimble has been prominent for many years on both sides of the water as a director.

Work on the new Petrova production was started almost immediately after the final scenes of "Daughter of Destiny" had been shot, and the picture is said to be now well under way at the Petrova studios.

In looking back over the career of Larry Trimble, the publicity department of Petrova Picture Corporation recalls that the director and producer is the author of some of the earliest successes of the Vitagraph Company of America, with which organization he began his screen career in 1908. He also produced the Florence Turner feature, "Auld Lang Syne," and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." At the formation of the Florence Turner Picture Company in 1912 Trimble left Vitagraph to become managing director of the new organization, and for three years produced a series of screen plays starring the Vitagraph favorites in England.

Returning to this country in response to a bid received to direct the production of Rex Beach's novel "The Barrier," Mr. Trimble immediately established himself as one of the screen's most distinguished workers. He was immediately engaged following this to picturize "The Spreading Dawn," a new Goldwyn offering starring Jane Cowl.

Mr. Trimble will be assisted in his direction of the dramatic star, Madame Petrova, by a staff of carefully selected experts.

Enid Markey Engaged by National for Feature

Enid Markey, who played a role in "Civilization," has been engaged by President William Parsons, of the National Film Corporation, for the part of Jane Porter in that company's production of "Tarzan of the Apes."

This picture includes, in addition to Miss Markey, such players as Elmo Lincoln, True Boardman, Kathleen Kirkham, Gordon Griffith, Bessie Toner, Thomas Jefferson, George French and Colin Kenny.

Director Scott Sidney last week produced some wild animal scenes. Elmo Lincoln performed his hilarious stunt of pulling a lion from the cabin window by its tail.

Scenes from "The Voice of Conscience," a Metro Feature Production Co-starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne

"Gaston Olaf" Bought for Harold Lockwood

Will Be His Next Metro Production Following "The Square Deceiver," Recently Completed—"Getting Even" Title Chosen

IT was announced last week by Yorke Film Corporation that Harold Lockwood's next Metro play following "The Square Deceiver," which has been completed and awaits release on December 3, will be an adaptation of Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf," the rights of which have been acquired for Lockwood.

The adaptation has been made by Francis Ford and Mary Murillo, and the business of screening the book began this week under the direction of Ford, with Fred J. Balshofer supervising. The photoplay will be known under the title of "Getting Even," it is announced.

The story of "Getting Even" is of the North woods and the characters concerned are described as people of the great outdoors—big, rough and ready, and with red blood coursing through their veins. The chief figure is Gaston Olaf Francois Thorson, a blood-brother of the big outdoors, strong but generous and just, with some reputation for lawlessness made at the expense of men who questioned his nationality. Gaston is an American, born and reared, of a French mother and a giant Norse sire. After six months "in the brush" he descends upon Havens Falls, a lumber camp settlement, with his partner, Tom Pine.

The role of "Gaston" is being played by Mr. Lockwood, who has filled many roles of a like nature.

Essanay to Make Cantonment Films for Government

IT was announced last week by Essanay that it has closed a contract with the United States government to make moving pictures of many of the military cantonments in various parts of the country. Already, it is made known, two directors and their cameramen and other assistants are in the field, and others are expected to follow them soon. The government will show the pictures throughout the country, and the proceeds will be turned into the Divisional Staff for soldiers in training in this country and those at the front in France.

Essanay recently sent a squad of cameramen to Rockford, Ill., where the government has built its Illinois cantonment and where thousands of Illinois drafted men are in training for war. The object was to show by living pictures how the men are treated and how they enjoy the life, so their friends and relatives back home may rest at ease regarding their welfare. This picture was not made for the government. The men are shown at mess, in their sleeping quarters, playing outdoor games, drilling, at bayonet practice, and in other forms of their work. The picture gives an excellent view of the buildings, both inside and out.

The picture will be shown in every theatre in Chicago and in most of the cities and towns of the state and adjoining territory.

Last George Ade Fable Is Current Release

The last of the George Ade Fables in Slang, made by Essanay, and which is called "The Fable of the Back Tracker from the Hot Sidewalks," is the current release of the General Film Co. This completes the second series of twelve Ade Fables.

One of the best of the last six Fables in Slang is said to be "The Fable of the Toilsome Ascent and the Shining Table Land," which is the eleventh release in the series.

"Man Without a Country" Welcomed in Minneapolis

E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Jewel Exchanges, last week received the following telegram from B. N. Juddell, Jewel manager at Minneapolis: "Please place order additional print "Man Without Country." Picture opened at Strand theatre biggest business in years. Received with great ovation. "Pay Me" opened New Garden theatre to two hundred ninety.

Mr. Goldstein has expressed himself as well pleased with the prospects of Jewel Productions, Inc., all over the country. The offerings include "Come Through," "Pay Me," "Sirens of the Sea," "The Man Without a Country," "The Co-Respondent" and "The Price of a Good Time."

"France in Arms" Shown to Distinguished Gathering

It developed this week that the five-reel Pathe special, "France in Arms," was shown by the United States representative of the Cinematographic Division of the French army to a distinguished gathering at Washington recently. Among those present was President Wilson, in addition to members of the Cabinet, many Senators and Congressmen and most of the Ambassadors of the allied governments.

Walthall Boosts Patriotism Before His Next Feature

Henry B. Walthall, who recently completed his first Paralta play, "His Robe of Honor," has been aiding patriotic organizations on the West Coast before starting work on his second feature for Paralta.

Recently a benefit was given for the Red Cross in the form of a fair, in Central Park, Los Angeles, at which Mr. Walthall headed a number of entertainers. Picture actresses served tea and refreshments.

Los Angeles Fears Enforcement of Censorship

Los Angeles, which for the past eighteen months has been free from motion picture censorship, is threatened with the enforcement of the ordinance, which has not been effective, Mayor F. T. Woodman being back of the movement, for the organization of a censorship board and revision of the present ordinance, which will provide that the city shall charge a fee of $2 for the inspection of each reel or film. All motion picture organizations, including the Motion Picture Producers' Association, Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, are opposed to the passage of amendments to the present ordinance or the enforcement of the same as it stands now on the ordinance books.

Norma Talmadge Feature Packs a Loew Theatre

According to an announcement issued last week by Select Pictures, all house attendance records at the New York theatre were broken on November 6 when Norma Talmadge's second Select Picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country," kept the Loew playhouse packed with auditors from early morning until the end of the last showing at 1 o'clock the following morning.

Fox Shows Fallacy of Circumstantial Evidence

The fallacy of accepting circumstantial evidence in murder trials is said to be proved in "Troublemakers," the Fox Standard picture featuring Jane and Katherine Lee.

In the picture, child wit upsets the whole theory of prosecutlon and establishes the innocence of a young man condemned to electrocution. The humor in "Troublemakers" is said to dissipate any possible gruesome impressions.

Virile Drama Selected for William Fox Star

The new photoplay on which Theda Bara started work a few days ago in the Eastern studios of William Fox is claimed by the Fox publicity department to be a gripping, virile drama, the action and scenes of which are in and around New York.

After her long sojourn in California, where, after finishing "Cleopatra," Miss Bara also finished two other Standard productions, the star complained that she found it rather hard to work under the artificial light of the Eastern studios.

Helen Chadwick Now Stars for Astra Film Corporation

Helen Chadwick, is is announced by Pathe, is now one of the stars of the Astra Film Corporation. She recently signed a new contract, and her first part under it is in the all-star cast of George Fitzmaurice's production, particudars of which are expected shortly from Pathe.

Miss Chadwick's first picture was an Astra-Pathe Gold Rooster play.

Paralta Plays Ready for Release This Month

Kerrigan Feature Is Expected to Be Handled by Hodkinson's New Company Middle of Month—Barriscale Feature to Follow

PARALTA Plays announced last week, close on the heels of the news that its productions would be released through the newly formed company with W. W. Hodkinson at the head, and details of which were carried in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, that Paralta features would make their debut in the distributing field about the middle of this month.

The first production to be released, it is announced, is the story of adventure starring J. Warren Kerrigan, "A Man's Man." The feature is in seven reels, and is expected to prove a great favorite with the women patrons of the motion picture theatres.

About the first of December is the time set for the release of Bessie Barriscale's initial Paralta Play, "Madam Who," described as a secret service classic, laid in the period of the Civil War. In the production Miss Barriscale is supported by Ed Coxen, Howard Hickman, Joseph J. Dowling, David M. Hartford and Allan Crandall.

"His Robe of Honor," starring Henry B. Walthall, is announced for release about the middle of December, following which another Kerrigan feature, "Turn of a Card," will be released. Then is scheduled Miss Barriscale's second Paralta Play, "Rose o' Paradise." All of these productions are completed, and six companies are at work at the Paralta West Coast studios.

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, left New York last week for Los Angeles, where he expects to spend several weeks at the studios consulting on the future developments of the Paralta organization.

"Finger of Justice" Shown in San Francisco

Opened October 29 at Savoy Theatre, with All Seats Sold Out Two Days in Advance—Attracts People Who Seldom Visit Theatres

"THE Finger of Justice," the new morality photodrama produced under the auspices of the Rev. Paul Smith at San Francisco and closely following the story of the recent "cleanup" in that city, opened at the Savoy theatre, San Francisco, on Monday evening, October 29. The house, with seats all reserved at 25 and 50 cents, sold out two days in advance, and the picture is continuing to big business.

There was an alleged attempt, on the part of the producer's enemies, to have the police censor stop the showing of the picture on the opening night, but this was merely in the nature of a campaign move. Sergeant Peshon, the police represenative, attended the first showing, but he found nothing to call for interference. Some of the scenes show the inveigling of innocent girls into disreputable places, and the women of the underworld play an important part. There is nothing, however, that should be kept from the view of any picture patrons, and the lessons are all strong and beneficial. This picture is attracting to the Savoy many hundreds of people who have never before patronized theatres of any kind.

From the professional point of view, "The Finger of Justice" is logical in story and action, well constructed and calculated to keep up the interest of all classes of patrons. It was made with great rapidity, but Director Louis W. Chaudet worked with enthusiasm and the production reflects credit upon him.

Mildred Manning Again in O. Henry Stories

Mildred Manning, star in many of the earlier O. Henry stories, will be featured again in a new series of O. Henry stories now in the course of preparation by Broadway Star Features, it was announced last week.

Miss Manning's reappearance will be probably in "The Last Leaf," a New York story in which the action is laid in the Washington Square neighborhood. It is said to be one of O. Henry's tenderest, most whimsical stories and will no doubt prove an excellent vehicle for the little actress. Ashley Miller, who has directed Miss Manning in feature releases, will direct her in the O. Henry subjects.

Last Week We Showed Marguerite Clark in the Act of Falling Into a Bathtub with All of Her Clothes On. Contemplate the Above, then Join Us in Wondering What Paramount's "Sub-Deb" Stories are Going to Lead Marguerite Into Next

Marguerite Clark to Make Fairy Story for Christmas

MARGUERITE CLARK, whose most recent escapades in the sub-deb stories, the third of which, "Bab's Matinee Idol," is scheduled for release November 26, have met with apparent hearty approval in all theatres where the pictures have been shown, is already at work upon a Christmas play for Paramount, it is announced. The feature is said to be in the nature of a gorgeous fairy tale, the title of which is "The Seven Swans." The picture is expected to be elaborate in every detail of setting and costuming and will present the diminutive star in a role that is said to be ideally suited to her talents.

J. Searle Dawley, who directed the Bab stories, is also handling the Christmas picture and declares that he is finding a lot of pleasure in the work, and results certainly prove the same.

The studio looks like a series of pictures taken from some of the gift books of fairy stories. There are interiors showing bedchambers wherein royal princesses are wont to woo Morpheus. Stately towers arise and it is claimed no stage of an English pantomime ever presented a more fanciful and picturesque appearance. Actors, clad in the resplendent raiment of the imaginary kingdoms of childhood dreams, are everywhere and Miss Clark, herself bewitchingly garbed in velvet and ermine, might well have stepped from the pages of Hans Christian Anderson or the Brothers Grimm.

Metro Chooses Good Cast for Emily Stevens Feature

WHAT Metro has announced as a superior cast of players has been engaged to support Emily Stevens in "Daybreak," a coming Metro feature from the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. The production is being directed by Mr. Capellani, this being his first picture for Metro.

Julian L'Estrange will play the leading masculine role of Arthur Frome, the husband of Edith Frome (Emily Stevens). L'Estrange has supported Pauline Frederick in "Zaza," "Bella Donna" and "Sold" for the Famous-Players.

Augustus Phillips, a Metro favorite, will be seen as Dr. David Brett. He has appeared prominently in many Metro pictures starring Viola Dana.

Evelyn Brent, another Metro favorite, is cast as Alma Peterson. Miss Brent has appeared in a long list of Metro pictures, including "The Millionaire's Double" with Lionel Barrymore, "The Weakness of Strength" with Edmund Breese, and "The Iron Woman" with Nance O'Neil.

Hermann Lieb, formerly in the vaudeville sketch "Dope," will be seen as the attorney, Herbert Rankin. Mr. Lieb entered motion pictures in 1909.

Joe Dailey, who played the role of Peter in Metro's production of "Romeo and Juliet," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, will be Ordway the butler, and Mrs. Evelyn Axzell will appear as Meta Thompson, the maid.

"Daybreak" will be produced in five acts and will be personally supervised by Maxwell Karger, general manager of Metro's Sixty-first street studio.

Omaha Picture Public Buys Heavily of Bonds

Motion picture theatre patrons as Liberty Loan bond buyers kept pace with the patrons of the legitimate houses in Omaha, Neb., according to figures released this week.

When ex-Vice-President Fairbanks spoke in Omaha theatres for the Liberty Loan bonds, twice as many were sold at the Strand, a motion picture theatre, as were sold at any other house in the city except the Orpheum, playing vaudeville. When General Wood, army commander at Camp Funston, spoke in Omaha three times as much was realized at the Strand as at any other house except the Orpheum.

Voshell Assists with New Clara K. Young Feature

Jack Voshell, who for more than a year has been assistant director under Joseph Kaufman, who recently finished "Shirley Kaye," Clara Kimball Young's latest picture, has been engaged by Harry I. Garson to assist Emile Chautard, the French director, in Miss Young's future releases.

Jacques Bizeul, who met with a painful automobile accident, is about again and taking full charge of the camera work of "The Marionettes," on which Miss Young is busily engaged.

Lois Weber Goes to Arizona for Authentic Scenes

"The Man Who Dared God," newest of Lois Weber productions, required authentic scenes in a copper mining district. To provide them, Miss Weber took her company, headed by William Stowell and Mildred Harris, to Oatman, Ariz., where the Big Jim, Arizona Ray and United Verde copper deposits are being worked. The trip was made from Universal City, Cal.

Pathe Offers Advertising for Russian Art Film

An announcement from Pathe this week states that to insure the Russian Art Films being given presentations throughout the country in keeping with the high class productions, the company will allow its exchanges to give three or more twenty-four sheets on "The Painted Doll," the first of the pictures, free to exhibitors who will post them.

"The Painted Doll" was released on October 21. The second picture, "The Queen of Spades," is released November 18. The advertising matter on this picture includes one, six and two styles of three-sheets, colored photographic lobby display, two 22x28 photographs, slide, music plot and campaign book.

Kenyon Is Author of Hart's Second Artcraft Subject

Charles Kenyon, one of the best known American playwrights, has written a film play around William S. Hart, the Thomas H. Ince star, which is being released by Artcraft, entitled "The Silent Man." Hart appears in the role of a miner who is defrauded out of his claim. Mr. Kenyon made a close study of Hart, it is said, and framed his story in such a way that the delineator of Western roles is given a wide range of action.

Care with Petrova Picture Causes Delay

Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, in response to inquiries as to why "Daughter of Destiny," the first Petrova picture, has been delayed beyond October 22, the date first announced, has announced that the feature was completed by Madame Petrova exactly as scheduled, and that the postponement was due to the extraordinary care that has been taken to insure the mechanical perfection of the picture, in titling, tinting, and cutting. It is said the picture has been gone over at least six times by expert cutters.

It is expected the picture will be shown at the Rialto theatre in New York soon.

Brenon Heartily Endorsed By First National

Producer of "Empty Pockets" and Other Features Receives Many Telegrams from Throughout Country Concerning Recent Contract

PROBABLY no motion picture producer, according to information furnished by the Herbert Brenon Department of Exploitation, ever received a more hearty or complete endorsement than that accorded Herbert Brenon by the heads of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The announcement that the First National Circuit had acquired the distribution rights to Brenon's production of "Empty Pockets," details of which were announced last week in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, aroused the members of the organization to a degree of enthusiasm, it is said.

Brenon was accorded an unusual endorsement when the "Empty Pockets" deal was closed, through the fact that the purchasing board of First National, including S. L. Rothapfel, T. L. Tally, H. S. Schwalbe, Fred Dahnken, Aaron Jones, Robert Lieber, E. H. Hulsey and J. D. Williams, unanimously endorsed the deal. Immediately upon the circulation of the announcement, however, the various members seized upon the occasion to wire their endorsement to the New York headquarters with remarkable results.

"Congratulations on closing deal with Herbert Brenon for "Empty Pockets," wired J. T. Turner and Fred Dahnken of San Francisco, "as we consider Brenon to be the greatest director in the business today and his productions are sure-fire big money from box office standpoint. 'Empty Pockets' should do an enormous business throughout the country."

A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, was equally enthusiastic. "Congratulations for closing with Herbert Brenon for his production of 'Empty Pockets,'" he said. "You couldn't have done better."

Robert Leiber of Indianapolis wired: "Highly pleased to know that you have closed Brenon 'Empty Pockets' for the First National. Brenon is always to be relied upon as a producer. Not only does he know how to get out an artistic production but he seems to know the public mind.

Other telegrams and messages regarding the deal were of like nature.

Work Starts on Charlie Chaplin's New Plant

Comedian Personally Swings First Shovelful of Earth, and His Brother Proves Himself Adept in Use of the Pickaxe

CHARLIE CHAPLIN formally started the construction of his half million dollar motion picture plant last week, when without ceremony and in the presence of a few members of his company he plunged a shovel deep into the earth of his $30,000 plot of ground in the Hollywood dictrict of Southern California, and later watched a gang of workmen go at things for all their worth.

Sidney Chaplin, the comedian's brother, also distinguished himself by swinging a pickaxe for several minutes after his brother carted away the initial slice of earth, and then the members of the company took a hand in shoveling the excavation to a greater depth.

There were no speeches, fireworks or brass bands. Everything was done in a very quiet manner, without the eternal barbecue and usual handshaking. A few of the nearby neighbors knew something was happening, but the community as a whole was ignorant of the proceedings and everything moved smoothly.

Within four weeks the one-time McClelan estate will have taken on quite a different appearance. From every outward appearance there will stand a quaint English village.

Chaplin plans to spend more than a half million dollars improving the property. Everything used in the construction work and all of the equipment will be the very best obtainable, and no expense will be spared in putting in innovations unique in studio construction.

The entire plant will not be completed for at least two months, but there will be enough completed within the next three weeks so as to enable the star to start on his initial production for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for which organization he will make eight pictures.

Lasky Sends Melford and Hayakawa Company to Hawaii

GEORGE MELFORD, Lasky director, and a company of fifteen departed from San Francisco Thursday of last week for the Hawaiian Islands, where exteriors for a subject starring Sessue Hayakawa will be filmed. The company went direct to Honolulu, and from there will journey to Hero Island, a thirty-six hour ride from Honolulu. The story to be filmed is "Hidden Pearls," and is laid in the island a number of years ago.

Principals of the producing company besides Melford and Hayakawa are Margaret Loomis, the dancer, who will play the feminine lead; James Cruze, Noah Beery, Charles Gildert, and others. Paul Perry is the cameraman, and Henry Kotam assistant cameraman. Kotam is a native of Hawaii, and this is his first visit back to the islands since he left there ten years ago. In addition to his work as assistant cameraman, he will serve as interpreter and guide.

This will be the longest and perhaps the most expensive trip taken by a Paramount or Artcraft producing unit, and the fact that Melford was selected as director is a distinct honor to this producer. It will be remembered that Melford won the Lasky thousand-dollar prize for making the best paying subjects at this studio during the past year. Mr. Melford has been with the Lasky Company for three years, and during that time he made more than thirty productions. His most recent subject, which has just been completed, is "Nan of Music Mountain." A new contract has just been made with Director Melford by the Lasky Company.

Alice Joyce Signs New Vitagraph Contract

Renewal Assures Exhibitors of Unbroken Chain of Joyce Features During Coming Year—Is Now Working in Ninth Production

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, has announced that Miss Alice Joyce has renewed her contract with the company, the papers having been signed last week. Thus exhibitors are assured of an unbroken chain of Alice Joyce releases for the coming year.

The renewal of Miss Joyce's contract calls attention to the number of Vitagraph releases this player has had during the last year. Beginning with "Whom the Gods Destroy," which was released on December 18 last, Miss Joyce has appeared in eight features during a period of less than eleven months, and is now at work on her ninth picture, a Robert W. Chambers story.

Two of her releases, in which Harry Morey was featured with her, "Within the Law," and J. Stuart Blackton's "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," were super-features.

In most of her productions Miss Joyce has been co-starred with Harry Morey and the team has proved one of the most popular combinations in motion pictures today.

In addition, Miss Joyce appeared with Marc MacDermott in "An Alabaster Box," which was released on September 10, and was featured alone in "The Fettered Woman," released November 5. In this she played the role of a girl forced to leave college at the death of her father, and in some of the lighter scenes of the play she was the embodiment of girlishness and juvenile naivete.

Quite in contrast to this was her portrayal of Mary Turner, the falsely accused shopgirl in "Within the Law," and her work as Mary Ward, the tragic heroine of "Womanhood." Her ability to play both light and heavy emotional roles perhaps accounts for her constantly growing popularity among motion picture audiences.

Greater Vitagraph Plans to Add New Line of Comedies

GREATER VITAGRAPH is going to add to its program in a few weeks a brand new line of comedies, according to a statement given out by Albert E. Smith, president of the company.

These comedies, which will be one-reelers, will not interfere with the production of Big V's, because Mr. Smith recently put two new companies to work on the well known Vitagraph brand of slapstick, now having three in action. The new brand is expected to be a higher grade of comedy, made from the works of some of the best known humorists of the present day, and will be produced under the direction of Graham Baker, well known as the author of most of the Big V comedies.

Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres, two Blue Ribbon feature stars, will be featured in this new series of humorous productions.

These comedies will mark the transition of Graham Baker from slapstick to legitimate fun. Mr. Baker, who was associated with Lawrence Semon in the production of the Big V's as author and assistant producer, was, like Mr. Semon, a cartoonist before he took up the work of providing laughs for picture fans. During the two years he has been writing comedies he has come to be known as one of the leading humorists of the picture business.

President Smith, discussing the new comedies, said: "We were moved to return to this line of production by reason of the fact that the people must be afforded laughs, and slapstick comedy does not appeal to every one. Vitagraph was the first company to produce one-reel comedies of the higher class—the drawing-room comedies, we might call them—and in these comedies we featured John Bunny and Flora Finch, Wally Van and Lillian Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Hughie Mack, Kate Price and others. These were all very popular with the public and the pictures in which they appeared still measure up to the best standards of production. So good are they that they are today among our most popular offerings, and they are getting laughs all over the country under the title of Favorite Film Features. In addition we have the Frauk Daniels comedies—the Kernel Nutt and Mr. Jack series—which are also drawing well."

"Petticoats Versus Pants" Is Next Mutual-Horkheimer

"Petticoats Versus Pants" has been selected as the next of the series of Mutual-Horkheimer star productions featuring Anita King, it was announced last week. It has been set for release December 3.

Miss King is cast as "Efficiency Ann," who carries the doctrine of feminine emancipation to the women of "Red Dog," the run down, vice ridden, boss dominated western community where she operates an eating house. The role is said to be admirably suited to Miss King's talent and personality. She is distinctly the type of self-sufficient women who would be expected to handle the rough and ready male population without gloves.

The story deals with the feminist movement, not so seriously as to offend and not so lightly as to stir the ire of ardent suffragists. It ties the picture up with one of the most thoroughly agitated of domestic questions.

"Mother" Evokes Interest That Seems Country-wide

McClure Pictures, the organization which is distributing George Loane Tucker's production of "Mother," last week received a letter from a Connecticut theatre which is considered by McClure to be more proof of the interest that the feature has aroused throughout the country.

The letter, from Norman Cables, proprietor of the Kingsbury, in Waterbury, Conn., said: "We, the theatregoers of Waterbury, are hungry to see your picture production, 'Mother.'"

A Flash from the Vitagraph Picturization of O. Henry's "The Renaissance at Charleroi," with J. Frank Glendon and Agnes Ayres

"A Woman Between Friends" Stars Alice Joyce

In the production of "A Woman Between Friends," a Greater Vitagraph feature, Albert E. Smith, president of the company, has given director Tom Terriss carte blanche, and the result is that one night last week there was staged at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn one of the biggest carnival scenes ever made for the screen.

Alice Joyce is starred in this feature, Marc MacDermott appearing with her, and it is the intention of President Smith to give his stars the very best possible settings available. The play is an adaptation from the Robert W. Chambers' story, "Between Friends."

Knitting Habit Parodied in Latest Klever Komedy

The knitting fever which has swept the land is said to be cleverly parodied in the forthcoming Klever Komedy, "Knutty Knitters," which features Victor Moore and will be a paramount release November 19.

The comedy, according to report, is fast and full of funny kinks and is expected to be one of the most popular of the Victor Moore pictures.

Jean Lenox Makes Debut with Norma Talmadge

Jean Lenox, it was announced last week by Nellie Revell, is making her film debut in the adaptation of Rupert Hughes' drama, "Two Women," which Miss Norma Talmadge is making.

Madge Kennedy Starts New Goldwyn Feature

Madge Kennedy, one of the newest of screen stars, is to be the means of introducing another artist to the field of silent drama, according to an announcement from Goldwyn last week. The debut will belong to George Weston, a writer, whose stories have never been put into scenario form, but who will get his chance when Goldwyn presents Miss Kennedy in his "Oh! Mary, Be Careful," upon which the star has begun work.

Miss Kennedy has chosen all her costumes for "Oh! Mary, Be Careful"; the first settings have been erected at the Goldwyn Studio, and work has already begun on a few of the episodes involving Miss Kennedy alone. There are a number of these in the book and, upon their completion, the full cast will be assembled for work, it is announced.

Gladys Leslie Prepares for Second Vitagraph Film

Gladys Leslie has completed her first Vitagraph feature and is getting ready to begin work on a second, it is announced. "His Own People," in which she is featured with Harry Morey, is a romance of Old Erin and will be released on the Blue Ribbon program December 31.

In her second picture Miss Leslie probably will be linked with J. Frank Glendon, who has risen to a stellar place among Vitagraphers by his work in the O. Henry pictures. W. P. S. Earle, who directed Miss Leslie and Mr. Morey in "His Own People," will continue to direct her.

General to Distribute Selburn Comedies

Announcement was made this week by General Film Company that it has acquired for exclusive distribution a new series of short-length subjects to be known as the Selburn Comedies. The series is controlled by the Piedmont Picture Corporation, and one subject is to be released each month, beginning November 19, when "Hubby's Holliday" is expected to be ready for distribution. This picture is described as a two-reel, high-class comedy, and the succeeding ones will be of one reel.

Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby are featured in the Selburn Comedies, which are said to be the most attractive vehicles in which they have yet appeared.

Wm. Fox's New Boston Building Ready for Occupation

THE new headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation in Boston are ready for occupation. Contractors who have been working on the structure in Piedmont street for nearly six months completed their task last week when the finishing touches were put on the building.

There now remain but a few minor details to be attended to before the Fox Corporation will move in, but these Manager William D. Shapiro is looking after with a view to having things in shape for occupation very shortly.

The new building, which is one of the largest and finest exchanges built in Boston for motion picture interests, covers a considerable area of ground and is located in an ideal section of the film district. The main office covers a large part of the first floor and is furnished in up-to-date style for convenience and efficiency. The manager's office is located in the front section of this floor. Next to Manager Shapiro's office is the booker's quarters. The bookkeper's office is also on the first floor, adjoining the booker's room.

The shipping room, also situated on the first floor, is large and is equipped with every modern appliance and convenience to expedite the delivery of film. It covers nearly a third of the first floor. A dumb waiter has been installed, which runs from the second floor to the basement, thus making it comparatively easy to transport the films from the vaults on the second floor to the shipping room.

The building is equipped with a large number of fire-proof vaults, capable of holding several hundred rolls of films, and receives excellent ventilation.

Great pains were taken in laying out the re-wind room, which is located in the front part of the second floor, receiving the abundant sunshine from that part of the building. It is large enough to accommodate more than a score of girls.

The exhibition room is one of the finest in the city. It is built to hold about fifty persons and makes it possible for exhibitors to view the "run-offs" with every degree of comfort and advantage. A large motion picture booth has been placed in the exhibition room and is equipped with two brand new machines.

Theodore Wharton Owes New Serial to Enemy Country

THEODORE WHARTON, of The Whartons, Ithaca, N. Y., remarked last week that as a thing of kindness and culture the Imperial German Government may be a good deal of a fizzle, but that as an instigator of ideas for scenarios it manages to do very well.

The Whartons, as announced recently in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, are putting on the new super-serial, written by William J. Flynn, chief of the United States Secret Service, which is to tell the inside of German plots and intrigue in this country. For, Mr. Wharton avers, when Germany did its plotting in this country, it unwittingly wrote the greatest motion picture of them all

And Mr. Wharton should know a good motion picture when he sees one, for it was when the motion picture business was hardly big enough to reach out for its teething ring that Theodore Wharton entered the business as a director for the Edison Company back in 1907. Following his connection with the Edison Company, Mr. Wharton went to the Vitagraph, then to the Kalem, to build their first indoor studio; then to Pathe and to Essanay, where he produced "The Wars of the West," featuring Buffalo Bill, General Miles and others, and including 1,200 United States soldiers and more than 800 Indians. This was probably one of the first really big spectacle productions ever put on in America.

Shortly after this, which was in 1913, Mr. Wharton and his brother, Leopold, who had become one of the favorite directors with Pathe, went into the contracting motion picture business at Ithaca, N. Y., where their studios now are located. Their first big production was "The Exploits of Elaine," which was followed by "Wallingford," "Beatrice Fairfax," various features, and finally "Patria," in which Mrs. Vernon Castle made her debut as a serial motion picture actress.

The new serial, however, which The Whartons are making now, is being done for themselves, and is to be released through the Hoffman Foursquare exchanges.

Paramount Puts Big List on Open Market Plan

Includes About Three Hundred Five-Reel Features, with Well-Known Stars, Released Prior to August 5—Exhibitors Pleased

WHAT will no doubt be very interesting news to exhibitors is the announcement made last week by Paramount that a list of about three hundred five-reel features, in many cases with stars including Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and Pauline Frederick, is now available without territorial restrictions upon the open booking market.

These films, it is made known, are those which were released on the program system prior to the adoption on August 5, last, of the Star Series Selective booking plan. There are several plays, for example, in which Miss Pickford starred before the advent of Artcraft. Among them are named: "Such a Little Queen," "Cinderella," "Mistress Nell," "Fanchon the Cricket," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," "Little Pal," "Rags," "Esmerelda," "The Girl of Yesterday," "Madame Butterfly," "The Foundling," "Poor Little Pepina," "Hulda from Holland," and "The Eternal Grind."

The Marguerite Clark features embrace, among others, "Wildflower," "The Crucible," "The Goose Girl," "Gretna Green," "The Pretty Sister of Jose," "Seven Sisters," "Helene of the North," "Still Waters," "The Prince and the Pauper," "Mice and Men," "Out of the Drifts," "Molly Make Believe," "Silks and Satins," "Little Lady Eileen," "Miss George Washington," "Snow White," "The Fortunes of Fifu" and "The Valentine Girl."

Pauline Frederick is represented in the list by "Sold," "Zaza," "Bella Dona," "Lydia Gilmore," "The Spider," "Audrey," "The Moment Before," "The World's Great Snare," "Ashes of Embers," "Nanette of the Wilds," "The Slave Market," "Sapho," "Sleeping Fires," "Her Better Self" and "The Love that Lives."

Aside from these there are said to be dozens of other productions with Marie Doro, Fritzi Scheff, Victor Moore, Hazel Dawn, Elsie Janis, Blanche Sweet, Myrtle Stedman, John Barrymore, Violet Heming, Laura Hope Crews, Lenore Ulrich, Charlotte Walker, Geraldine Farrar, Edna Goodrich, Fannie Ward, Lou-Tellegen, Theodore Roberts, Anna Held, Constance Collier, Donald Brian, Vivian Martin, Dustin Farnum, Irene Fenwick, George Beban, Mae Murray, Kathlyn Williams, Mme. Petrova, Ann Pennington, Wallace Reid, Anita King, Louise Huff, Max Figman, May Irwin, Bessie Barriscale, Florence Reed, Macklyn Arbuckle, Rita Jolivet, Ina Claire, John Mason, Peggy Hyland, and many others.

First Selburn Release Claims Timely Complications

Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby are said to set a fast pace for themselves in "Hubby's Holiday," the first of the new Selburn comedies to be released by General Film for the Piedmont Pictures Corporation. Some of the cleanest and best light comedy found in many months is promised in this two-reel production.

Future Selburn Comedies will appear in one-reel form. Four have been announced to date, in all of which Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby, the light comedy stars, are featured.

Christmas Feature Added to Butterfly Releases

To admit into its schedule a subject particularly applying to Christmas tide, the Butterfly arrangements for December have been revised. Harry Carter and Priscilla Dean will be stars of "Beloved Jim," the feature that caused the shift in details. In other respects the December Butterflys will conform with previous arrangements as now fully detailed in the following specifications: December 3—"Fighting Mad," depicting the state of mind a minister of the Gospel (portrayed by William Stowell) found himself in when he submitted to weakened faith. Helen Gibson and Betty Schade will have essential roles. December 10—Little Zoe Rae, in "The Silent Lady." December 17—"Beloved Jim," a Christmas attraction, comes in time to contest for attention with Christmas shopping. Harry Carter, Priscilla Dean and Joseph Girard will lead the presenting company. December 24—Harry Carey, with Molly Malone his featured leading lady, will present "Bucking Broadway."

"The Grell Mystery" on Screen Week November 19

"The Grell Mystery," a Blue Ribbon feature starring Earle Williams, was scheduled for release the week of November 19 by Greater Vitagraph. This picture, according to the Vitagraph announcement, affords Mr. Williams one of the best opportunities he has had since "Arsene Lupin," and Albert E. Smith, the Vitagraph president, has given it an extraordinarily fine production. It was directed by Paul Scardon, who has worked with Mr. Williams in most of his pictures during the last year, and the company declares it one of the best things Mr. Scardon has ever done.

Ann Murdock Feature Presented to Screen November 19

Ann Murdock, the Frohman star, is scheduled to trip silently, but effectively across the motion picture screen on November 19 in the third of her Empire productions for Mutual release, "Please Help Emily," a picturization of the comedy-drama in which she appeared on the legitimate stage. It is announced that the production will be presented with practically the entire original cast intact.

Dell Henderson directed the feature.

"The Fair Barbarian" to Follow "Molly Entangled"

"Molly Entangled," which is announced for release by Paramount on November 19, with Vivian Martin in the role of an Irish colleen, will be followed the first part of the new year by "The Fair Barbarian," an English story, said to again differ in character from Miss Martin's recent productions.

Herbert Brenon Starts Forbes-Robertson Production

HERBERT BRENON has completed his production of Rupert Hughes's mystery romance, "Empty Pockets," and has started "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," in which Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson will appear in his role of the Stranger.

The conclusion of one production and the launching of another was said to have been accomplished without a single hitch in the Brenon system of production. Mr. Brenon "shot" the last scenes of the Rupert Hughes story on the exact day he had planned. Scenario, sets and every detail of production for "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" had been prepared by Mr. Brenon's executive staff, and the director began his first scene with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

That all this was accomplished without rush, confusion or a slip in production schedule testifies to the remarkable organization built up by Mr. Brenon. There are no gaps in activities at the Brenon Studios as will be duly seen and fully appreciated from the foregoing.

In its screen form "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" will undergo certain changes necessary to give variety of background and to work out the development of the characters. In the stage version of Jerome K. Jerome's drama, the action centered in the living room of a shabby London boarding house. The spoken dialogue made it possible to show the individual shading of character of the various people with a single room. The motion picture adaptation, on the other hand, will necessarily reveal the different rooms of the lodgers. The three whole floors of the Bloomsbury Place boarding house have been constructed at the studio, including seventeen different rooms, halls and stairways. These range from the slavey's garret corner to the third floor back abode, to which the Passerby is relegated by the mercenary landlady, Mrs. Sharp.

Bluebird Changes Its December Arrangement

Ella Hall Feature, Intended for Christmas Week, Placed Ahead One Week, and Mae Murray Subject Is the Yuletide Attraction

FOR the purpose of giving exhibitors a Mae Murray feature for Christmas week, the Bluebird release dates have been slightly changed for the last month of the year. It had been intended to present Ella Hall in "My Little Boy" at Yuletide, but in the rearrangement Miss Hall takes the week earlier. Here is the detailed announcement for the month: December 3—Violet Mersereau in "The Raggedy Queen." This feature was directed by Theodore Marston from John C. Brownell's scenario of Nell B. Bronson's story. The supporting company includes Grace Barton, Donald Hall, Robert F. Hill, Charles Slattery, James O'Neill and Frank Otto.

December 10—Ruth Clifford in "The Door Between," a Rupert Julian production, made from Samuel Merwin's novel, "Anthony the Absolute." Monroe Salisbury will be featured in Miss Clifford's support, playing the role of the eccentric Anthony. Special stress is laid upon the scenic mounting of this production, the atmosphere of Japan and China having been carefully translated to the screen in especially contrived settings, all of which are truly true to nature.

December 17—Ella Hall in "My Little Boy," created from Elliott J. Clawson's story and scenario, originally titled "Uncle Oliver's Christmas." This Bluebird will carry, it is claimed, exceptional opportunities for advertising a peculiar "heart interest"—for it is Miss Hall's honeymoon picture, in which her husband, Emory Johnson, and her bridal flower-girl, Little Zoe Rae, are featured, along with Gretchen Lederer, her bridesmaid.

December 24—Mae Murray, in "Face Value," entirely created by her director, Robert Z. Leonard, who wrote the story, fixed up the scenario and directed Bluebird's newest star in what will be her second release. Bluebird intends this production to constitute a special Christmas bill for exhibitors.

Second Russian Art Film on Pathe Program

Last Episode of "The Fatal Ring" and a Two-Reel Comedy Also Presented Week of November 18—New Screen Magazine Starts

THE second of the Russian Art Films, the last episode of "The Fatal Ring" serial, a two-reel comedy and a new screen magazine are the outstanding points of Pathe's program announced for the week of November 18. Among the stars in these films are Ivan Mozukin, Mollie King, Pearl White and "Lonesome Luke."

The Russian Art Film is entitled "The Queen of Spades," and is in five reels. Like "The Painted Doll," this has for its star Ivan Mozukin, and is said to be an even better attraction than "The Painted Doll" for the American market.

The tenth episode of "The Seven Pearls," in which Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary are presented, is entitled "The Holdup." Ilma receives a high voltage electric shock, and Harry succeeds in rescuing her. He and Ilma then delve into the underworld and succeed in recovering still another pearl from a crooked banker named Falenti. As the episode ends, however, Ilma is kidnapped by Mason and Harry sets out to search for her.

Pearl White stars in the twentieth and last episode of "The Fatal Ring."

Lonesome Luke is presented in a two-reel Rolin Comedy, "When Clubs are Trumps." Harold Lloyd as Lonesome Luke, a football of fate; Harry Pollard as Snub, a humble stroller; Bebe Daniels as the girl and Bud Jameyson as Bill Beezer are said to make this one of the funniest comedies produced for Pathe.

This program also contains the release of the first Argus Pictorial, produced by Argus Laboratories to be released by Pathe regularly. Among the subjects shown are: a log-drive in the north woods, the starfish, sulphur and potato printing.

A one-reel scenic is entitled "Our National Parks."

June Caprice as Capitola in William Fox's Production of "Miss U. S. A." Tries to Stay a Father's Wrath, With Only Partial Success, it Appears

Coming Fox Features Promise Much of Interest

Virginia Pearson Drama Scheduled for November 18, on Which Date Third "Kiddie" Picture Is Due—"Troublemakers" in December

AMONG the William Fox features announced for release before the first of the new year are four which promise to be of unusual interest as well as worth to exhibitors, if advance announcements from the Fox organization prove as authentic as they have in the past. These features include "All for a Husband," starring Virginia Pearson; "Treasure Island," with the youngsters, Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin; "Troublemakers," with Jane and Katherine Lee, and "Du Barry," starring Theda Bara. The last named is scheduled to be the last release of the year from the William Fox offices.

A play with a startling ending—a Carl Harbaugh punch—is the description given of "All for a Husband," the Fox Special Feature to be released November 18, and in which Virginia Pearson is starred. The action centers about a beautiful lunatic, a woman hater, the woman hater's sister and a friend of the latter. Besides Miss Pearson the cast includes Herbert Evans, Dorothy Quincy, Gladys Kelly, Carl Moody and William W. Crimans.

"Treasure Island," the third of the new series of pictures featuring Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, will also be released November 18, it is announced. The picture is based on the Robert Louis Stevenson classic and is reported to be the same sort of production as "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Alladin and the Wonderful Lamp." The directors, C. M. and S. A. Franklin, however, are said to have laid considerable more emphasis on humor than in the previous pictures.

William Fox's presentation of Jane and Katherine Lee as "Troublemakers" has been announced for December 9. "Troublemakers is the second Fox Standard Pictures featuring the Lee "Kiddies" and is said to measure up fully to the requirements demanded by Mr. Fox.

The last release of the present year from the William Fox offices will be a Theda Bara Super-picture, "Du Barry," which has been announced for initial showing on December 30. This will be the third of the Standard Pictures featuring Miss Bara which has been released since September 30. The first of these was "Camille," followed November 4 by "The Rose of Blood."

Louise Fazenda in New Mack Sennett Comedy

Victor Heerman, who directed "Are Waitreses Safe?" a Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy to be released November 18, the entire production being supervised by Mack Sennett, is said to have outdone himself in filming a laugh-provoking story with that illustrious comedienne, Louise Fazenda, as the featured feminine character. Ben Turpin, Slim Summerville and Teddy, the dog, help along the fun. One of the features that is expected to appeal to all those who are appreciative of feminine pulchritude is the fact that "Are Waitresses Safe?" abounds in examples of girlish beauty and a crop of "Comedy Cuteys" which takes part in the ensemble scenes is said to be exceptional even in Mack Sennett productions.

Fox Exchanges Report Rush for New Sunshine Comedies

THE William Fox publicity department last week announced that exhibitors have crowded the Fox exchanges throughout the United States during the last week viewing the new Sunshine Comedies, made by Henry Lehrman, and offered by William Fox.

The exchanges have just received prints of the comedies, and already, it is said, a large number of exhibitors have contracted for the new comedies.

Following are a few of the theatres in various parts of the United States, showing how country-wide is the appeal for comedies: Newark theatre, Newark, N. J.; Eckle theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.; Alcazar theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Colla and Tate Circuit, St. Louis, Mo.; Strand theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.; Cabrillo theatre, San Diego, Cal.; Strand theatre, New York city; Academy, Fall River, Mass.; Proctor's, Portchester, N. Y.; Strand theatre, Youngstown, O.; Strand theatre, San Francisco, Cal.; Fay's theatre, Providence, R. I.; Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., and Lamara theatre, Phenix, Arizona.

Following are some of the reviews of newspaper critics:

"A new series, side-splitting in humor, is inaugurated in the presentation of Fox Sunshine Comedies, 'Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells.'"—New York Evening Sun.

"A new comedy film, 'Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells,' drew great laughter from the large audience."—N. Y. Globe.

"A Fox Sunshine Comedy called 'Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells' is truly marvelous."—New York Tribune.

Mr. Fox has arranged that Sunshine Comedies will be released on an independent basis, so that any exhibitor, no matter what his film affiliations may be, may show them.

Olive Tell Works on Third Empire Feature Subject

Olive Tell, it is announced, is now at work on her third picture for the Empire All-Star Corporation, "The Girl and the Judge," the Clyde Fitch play in which Annie Russell appeared some time ago.

Doris Kenyon Persecuted Heroine in "The Hidden Hand"

"The Hidden Hand," Pathe's new serial which is scheduled for release November 25, is said to have all the thrills, stunts and story that have made other Pathe serials welcome to exhibitors and their patrons in the past.

In claiming that Doris Kenyon, heroine of the serial, is one of the most persecuted girls now on the screen, Pathe offers proof by compiling a list of "happenings" from the first ten episodes of "The Hidden Hand." This compilation recites: That Miss Kenyon was trapped in a liquid air explosion in her bedroom and escaped by a giant swing on a scaling ladder from balcony to tree, dropped to the ground, and suffered many other experiences equally thrilling.

"The Mystery Ship" Release Date Is Changed

The release date for Universal's serial, "The Mystery Ship," has been changed to November 26, a fortnight later than first announced. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are the principal adventurers in this new thriller, the direction of the sixteen episodes being in charge of Henry McRae, superintendent of productions at Universal City.

General Releases "On the Love Line," December 13

Billy Ruge, the comedian, is again featured in the fifth series of Sparkle comedies now scheduled for release by General Film. It is announced that "On the Love Line," the first of the six new subjects, will be available December 13.

Other subjects in which Ruge will appear are "The Detective," "Smashing the Plot," "After the Matinee," "Double Cross" and "The Best of a Bad Bargain." This last release will carry the series far into January, insuring that the early winter demand for clean comedy subjects will be well cared for.

Gertrude McCoy Guest of Namesake Baltimore Theatre

Gertrude McCoy, the Hoffman-Foursquare star, was the guest of honor at the anniversary celebration of the theatre in Baltimore, dedicated to her, the Gertrude McCoy, the latter part of last week.

"Madame Sherry" and "The Silent Witness," the two Hoffman-Foursquare pictures in which Miss McCoy starred, were shown for the celebration.

Hart Starts "The Bloodhound" for Artcraft Release

William S. Hart has begun his third picture for Artcraft, to be known as "The Bloodhound," and to be quite different from any of Hart's contributions to the screen. The Thomas H. Ince star will play the part of a Western railroad man—a giant among his fellows, a master mind in his particular field of endeavor. Miss Vola Vale, who played opposite Hart in "The Silent Man," has the leading feminine role in "The Bloodhound."

Comedy Prevails In Latest Mutual Schedule

Week of November 19 Brings Light Subjects Starring William Russell and Ann Murdock—Shorter Fun-Makers Included

THE demand for good-sized doses of comedy is given as the reason for the large number of features and shorter subjects which Mutual has announced for its program the week of November 19. The list is headed by "Snap Judgment," with William Russell, and "Please Help Emily," with Ann Murdock, and these are followed by a one-reel Strand comedy, a one-reel Cub comedy, a two-reel serial and a one-reel topical.

"Snap Judgment" is said to be one of the most exceptional things William Russell has ever done. It is described as a fast action drama—snappy, red-blooded and jam full of laughs and very many amusing situations.

"Please Help Emily" is a picturization of the Frohman comedy success in which Miss Murdock played at the Lyceum Theatre, Broadway, last spring, and which scored a long run in Chicago and other cities. Supporting Miss Murdock are Jules Raucourt, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Amy Verness and Grace Carlyle.

Since the first release of the Strand-Mutual comedies, exhibitors and public have shown their approval of the one-reel features. In "A Maid to Order," Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco are said to present a merry mix-up. This laugh promoter will be available November 20. On November 22, George Ovey, in "Jerry's Victory," a one-reel Cub Comedy, will be released.

Various exhibitors are commending Mutual for the change from Wednesday to Monday as release days for Mutual Weekly. November 19 is release date for No. 151.

The mystery of the "Lost Express" seems to grow deeper in the tenth episode of this Mutual-Signal chapter play. In attempting to solve "The Secret of the Mine" Helen is imprisoned by the gang, escapes through an underground passage, obtains the aid of detectives, but when they follow up the clue, find that the trail has been destroyed by a terrific explosion. Helen is lost as well as the Express.

Essanay Has Ready Four New Comedy-Dramas

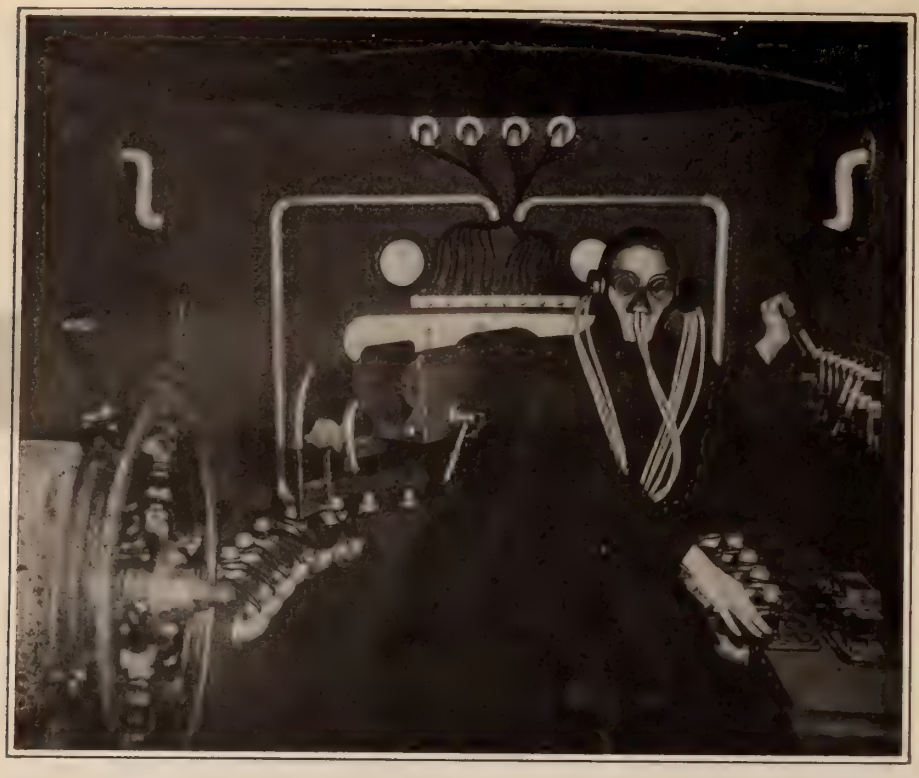
For Release Before First of Year, in Addition to Usual Weekly Subjects and Other Pictures Released Monthly—"Kill-Joy" Is First

FOUR new comedy dramas are ready for release by Essanay late in November and December, it was announced last week, in addition to the usual weekly releases and other pictures that are released monthly. Little Mary McAlister is featured in two of the comedy dramas, Taylor Holmes in another and Jack Gardner in the fourth.

The first released is "The Kill-Joy," featuring Little Mary. The picture is hailed as unusually unique, especially in view of the fact that the little actress has the only feminine role. Then, the plot itself is said to be unique. The release date is November 19.

"Gift o' Gab," featuring Gardner, details the adventures of an ambitious young man who can talk most anyone into most anything. There are just two people on earth Jack couldn't win by his gift o' gab. They were the parents of Helen. He couldn't go near the home. Then one day Helen was taken to the hospital with appendicitis. Helen and Jack were quick to see their opportunity, and a minister did the rest. The release date is November 26.

Mr. Holmes is featured in the third comedy drama, "The Small Town Guy." It was adapted from the Munsey Magazine story, "The Picture of Innocence."



Helen Ferguson is "the girl" and the picture ends with a wedding march touch.

Another picture featuring Little Mary is to be released on December 24. It is entitled "Sadie Goes to Heaven," adapted from the Good Housekeeping Magazine story of the same name by Dana Burnet. Little Mary is in the role of a child of the slums.

These features are all Perfection Pictures, released through the George Kleine System. They have a screen time of approximately 65 minutes each.

Triangle Release Strong Plea for Prohibition

"A Case at Law," Featuring Dick Rosson, Announced for Release Week of November 18—Belle Bennet Feature Is Also Listed

OF the two screen features announced for release by Triangle the week of November 18, "A Case At Law," featuring the youthful character player, Dick Rosson, is said to be a direct slap at the liquor evil. The other production, "The Fuel of Life," will have Belle Bennett in the leading role.

In "A Case At Law" Triangle aimed to visualize one of the strongest pleas ever made for the suppression of the so-called liquor evil. Dealing as it does with what some consider the most vital problem confronting people of all nations today, it is expected by Triangle to outrank in importance of subject the pleas for social purity, ethical justice, and the endless number of propagandist subjects which periodically clamor for attention. The plea is presented through the personalities of a Doctor Saunders (Riley Hatch), who has fought a winning battle against the rum demon, and Jimmy Baggs (Dick Rosson), a youth whose weakness proves both his undoing and his salvation. Pauline Curley plays the leading feminine role. The picture was supervised by Allan Dwan and directed by Arthur Rosson.

"The Fuel of Life," a romance of modern business, promises something new in the early winter crop of vampires. The plot is based on the eternal triangle, the action originating with an atractive woman who is employed to further certain promotion schemes.

Texas Guinan, J. Barney Sherry and Thomas Guise are members of the supporting cast. The picture was directed by Walter Edwards.

"Her Busted Debut," the Keystone release for November 18 is said to provide another opportunity for the Keystone beauty crew to frolic in the water and as nymphs of a traveling burlesque chorus.

"War and Matrimony" and "An Innocent Vampire" will be released on the regular program as one-reel Triangle Komedies. Both of these pictures measured over two thousand feet before the cutter received them, insuring the same rapidity of action which has popularized these laugh-makers.

Irwin Gets Good Reports on "Fighting Trail"

Vitagraph Serial, in Ninth Week, Presented in Ninety-seven Houses That Never Before Used Serials—Apparently Going Strong

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, has been receiving some very complimentary reports concerning "The Fighting Trail," Vitagraph serial in fifteen episodes, according to an announcement from Mr. Irwin's office last week. In a summary from the company's statistical department some remarkable facts about the serial are shown.

The report, among other things, revealed the following: Ninety-seven theatres which never before had run a serial are showing "The Fighting Trail." In the Dallas territory, which has 213 cities and towns of 1,000 or more population, 208 theatres are showing the serial. In St. Johns, N. B., every theatre in the town has booked it and in addition all of these exhibitors already have taken bookings for the company's next good serial, "Vengeance—and the Woman."

Last week 183 theatres were added to the list of several thousand already presenting "The Fighting Trail."

In a number of ways, Mr. Irwin believes, this serial has established records for features of this type and he is particularly gratified that "The Fighting Trail" has been instrumental in broadening the field of possibilities for serial runs. He attributes the success of the serial in no small degree to the fact that it is different from any other serial ever produced on the screen. Practically the entire picture is outdoor photography, the story moving along over mountains and desert trails with unprecedented swiftness, and the Vitagraph executive is of the opinion that the outdoor scenes have a special appeal to audiences.

"The record made by 'The Fighting Trail,'" said Mr. Irwin, "convinces us that the motion picture public wants serials and that there is virtually an unlimited field for such pictures. However, I believe that serials, to be successful, must be made with the same smoothness that characterizes regular features; that there must be a good story, plenty of strong action and capable acting."

Burglars Attentive to St. Louis Exhibitors

Robbers, according to reports from St. Louis, are beginning to turn their attentions in great volume toward Mound City exhibitors. Only a few days ago William Sievers, of the New Grand Central theatre, at Grand and Lucas avenues, was robbed of $1,700, and following closely on the heels of the haul Gabe Wagner, of the Alps theatre, reported the loss by robbery of $100. Wagner was going to his home at night when held up by two men.

John G. Hawks Writes for Dorothy Dalton

John G. Hawks, the scenario writer, is again on the Thomas H. Ince staff, it is announced, and his first work to receive the approval of the producer is a new picture for Dorothy Dalton, a story of the West in the late 'fifties. This is said to be Hawk's sixty-second scenario accepted by Mr. Ince in a little more than two years.

Theda Bara Visits Fox Theatre Election Night

Theda Bara appeared in person the night of November 6 at the Academy of Music in New York, a William Fox Theatre, where the latest Fox Standard picture, "The Rose of Blood," is being presented.

Manager John Zanft took advantage of the occasion to decorate one of the lower boxes for Miss Bara, who made an address to the packed house.

"In the Park," with Chaplin, Late Reissue

"In the Park," claimed by General Film to be one of the best early successes of Charlie Chaplin, is announced as the next release in Essanay's series of Chaplin new editions being distributed through General Film Company. It is reported that many theatres are featuring these comedies from one to four days.

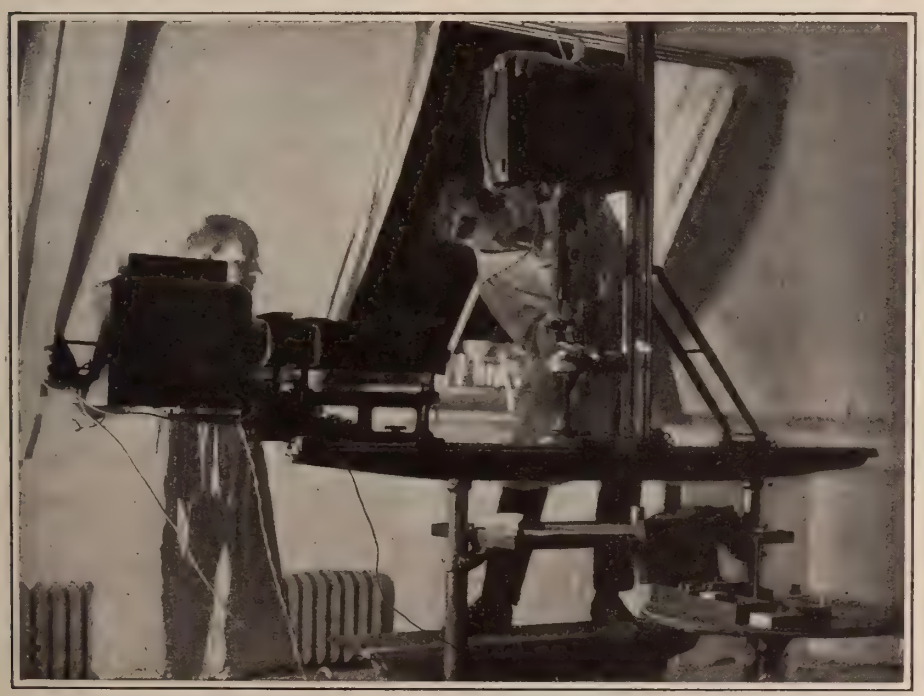
Universal Special Reels Feature War Scenes

Animated Weekly and Screen Magazine Both Give Clear Road to Views of War and Armies Here and Abroad—Well Balanced

SCENES of armies and war are the keynote of both the Universal Screen Magazine No. 45 and Universal Animated Weekly No. 97, announced by Universal as current reels. Despite the seeming predomination of war, the reels are said to be nicely balanced, also showing other views that promise both novelty and as great moment of interest.

In the Animated Weekly views are shown of the Archbishop of Rheims blessing the graves of war heroes at Gueux; the presentation by the municipality of St. Afrique of a sword to Gen. Castelnau, hero of the Marne; the Prince of Connaught reviewing the French army on the Aisne front and bestowing military decorations at Noyon, and the heavy artillery of Servia's little army hammering Bulgarian trenches. Other topics are: King George bestowing Victoria Crosses on eight war heroes at Buckingham Palace; Cincinnati police in military review at the annual inspection by Mayor Puchta; unveiling of the Lafayette memorial tablet at Norfolk, Va.; long distance tire efficiency test, Akron, O., to New York, and the unfurling of Universal's service flag containing 270 stars, President Carl Laemmle at the halyards. Hy Mayer's cartoons complete the reel.



A collection of views, many of them hitherto unpublished in any form, of New York's new $175,000,000 waterworks system, comprises the leading article in issue No. 45 of the Universal Screen Magazine. The preparedness section is devoted to the new style of army automobile field kitchen, which promises to revolutionize methods of feeding armies, here and abroad. A monster magnet with a lifting capacity of a ton of iron at a single effort is the new invention illustrated, while the child education section depicts a system of training whereby a child of two and a half years can easily be taught to spell simple words. Willie Hopkins's miracles in mud, the title of this subject being "Under the Eagle's Wings," completes the reel.

Essanay Promises New Idea in a December Release

A brand new idea in the novelty picture line is promised exhibitors by Essanay, December 17, when "The Dream Doll" will be released on the Perfection Pictures program through the George Kleine System.

The novelty is the invention of Howard S. Moss, an expert in the work of making and handling dolls. His collection of midgets, many imported, are said to be worth thousands of dollars. When a picture calls for dolls of a type he can't find in stock he promptly makes the proper type.

In "The Dream Doll" both living characters and dolls are used. Marguerite Clayton plays the role of Ruby, the daughter of the Toy King, John Cossar, and Bobby Bolder appears as A. Knutt, a crackbrained chemist. Rod La Rocque is Ruby's fiance.
